Riemann, Neufeld tout plus system

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

A campaign promise by Student Body President Tim Riemann and Vice President Jennafer Neufeld is becoming a reality.

The plus system — a large component of Riemann and Neufeld's spring 1997 campaign platform — will be taken to Student Senate within the next two weeks, Riemann said.

The proposed system would give instructors the option to award B pluses, C pluses and D pluses to students whose grades are close to the breaking point between letter grades.

"The basis of the plus system is to reward students for extra effort and to encourage students to do better and to strive for higher grades," Riemann said.

The plus grades would count higher on students' grade point averages. Riemann said other universities that utilize the system count a B plus, for example, as 3.33 or 3.5 points on the scale. B's are currently worth three points and A's are worth four points.

The next few weeks will determine the success of the proposal. Riemann said research will be finalized by the end of this week, and Senate should have the plan as soon as possible.

Senate support for the plan is crucial, Riemann said. He encouraged students to contact their senators before voting occurs.

"The support for this proposal in Student Senate may not be as strong as the student body thinks it is," Riemann said.

Barring problems passing the bill through Senate, the plus system will be debated by Faculty Senate members later this year. So far, Riemann said faculty response has been mixed.

Riemann and Neufeld's proposal is different from the plus-minus system that has been proposed in past years, Neufeld said.

"A plus-minus system has been discussed. That (minus) really puts a damper on our students that are doing well.

"We want to simply reward the students that do a little bit extra," she said. "We know a plus-minus system is not what the student body wants."

Though students might not support a plus-minus plan, some faculty members do, Riemann said. Riemann and Neufeld fear that Faculty Senate might add the minus stipulation to the plan, which would subtract from student support.

"That's one of Jennafer and mine's greatest worries is that we're going to take the plus system to Faculty Senate and they'll turn it into a plus-minus system. That's not what we want at all, and that's not what the student body wants," Riemann said.

Week of rushing

449 pledges sign with their new houses

STORY BY DAVID LOTT

Tours, skits and songs set K-State's sororities ablaze with sisterhood during formal Rush Week, bringing 449 women into the greek system.

Holly Houseworth, Panhellenic Council co-coordinator, said 502 women started Rush Week on Aug. 16. The event ended Thursday. Some rushees withdrew throughout the week.

Rush Week started with all rushees moving into Haymaker and Moore halls.

At orientation, rushees learned rules for the week and how Panhellenic Council functions, Houseworth said.

Panhellenic Council representatives performed skits about getting rid of Rush stereotypes and what to expect during the week.

MEMBERS OF Alpha Chi Omega sorority line the sidewalk in front of their house as rushees are invited inside Wednesday. 449 women were brought into the greek system during last week's Rush activities.

Counselors were available on every floor of the residence halls to answer questions. Counselors are sorority members, but their house affiliation is kept secret for the week so they can be unbiased, Houseworth said.

"I just think it's really important that all the rush counselors work as advisers for the entire greek system, not just their individual houses," said Jami Nelson, rush counselor and member of Kappa Alpha Theta.

Nelson said she encouraged rushees to ask questions during sorority visits.

Open house parties started Aug. 16 and finished the next day. The 30-minute parties let rushees visit with four or five women from each house to let them get acquainted, Houseworth said.

After all the rushees visited the houses, each sorority voted on which rushees to invite back for the house tour parties, she said. Rushees could accept a maximum of eight houses for the next party.

House tour parties last 45 minutes. Rushees were given a tour of the facilities of each house and asked questions about living arrangements, house policies and costs, according to the Sorority Way publication.

"Open house tours give the women the opportunity to see the chapter house they will be living in for the next four years," Houseworth said.

Again, each sorority extended invitations to the rushees for Skit Day, she said. Rushees may accept a maximum of five house invitations.

House members performed skits for the rushees about their houses.

Houseworth said Skit Day helps show the diversity of the membership and the benefits of each house.

The length and seriousness of the parties progressed with the week, Houseworth said. The hour-long preference parties were the last parties rushees attended.

Rushees went to preference parties Wednesday. They could accept a maximum of three invitations. Seniors in each house usually talked about their experiences.

Each rushee signed a preference card, ranking the last houses they visited on preference night. The sororities vote on the rushees they want to invite to join their house, Houseworth said.

On Thursday, Rush Week concluded with Bid Day. Rush counselors handed out membership invitations to the rushees on their residence hall floors.

Rushees who accepted their invitations went to their new houses to meet members of their pledge class and all the members of the house, Houseworth said. Rushees who chose not to pledge moved into their assigned residence hall rooms.

"Everyone kicks back and relaxes and has a good time," she said.

In review, Amy Nery, Greek Affairs administrative assistant, said Rush Week is a great way to bring new members into the greek system.

"It's a very efficient system," she said, especially with more than 500 women participating this year.

Nery said Rush Week shows sisterhood from getting the house ready, practicing songs and skits to meeting the rushees.

"The excitement builds as the days go on," she said. "It's a wonderful place to be."

Pell Grant probe focuses on 71 K-State students

BRANDI HERTIG
staff reporter

Seventy-one former and current K-State students' files were requested by the U.S. Department of Education in early May as part of an ongoing investigation for possible Pell Grant fraud.

The Department of Education, through the office of inspector general, is currently investigating Ernest Dale Bleam, a private consultant from Mulvane, Kan. During the years between 1992 and 1996, Bleam was allegedly involved in the preparation of federal aid applications for students from Kansas and Missouri that contained false information.

"I don't know if all 71 of those students are being reviewed by the Department of Education," said Larry Moeder, director of student financial assistance. "I simply know they requested those files."

Bleam, who was indicted by a federal grand jury on July 30, worked as a self-employed financial aid consultant, charging students for help with filling out their financial aid forms.

"There's no reason for a student to have to pay anyone to help them fill out a financial aid application," Moeder said.

Moeder said it is not clear who is at fault, the students or Bleam.

"The unfortunate thing is that the student signed the application saying that everything was correct. If the information was not correct, those students can be held liable," he said.

Chris Watney, spokesperson for the U.S. Attorney's Office, stressed the importance of students understanding every form they put their signature on.

"I would advise people that they're responsible for what they're signing," she said.

Some K-State students have been assessed fines by the U.S. Attorney's Office that exceeded the amount of aid they were to have received, Moeder said.

The U.S. Attorney's Office couldn't comment on whether the students had to actually pay the fines assessed.

Of the 71 students, 13 still attend K-State. The Office of Financial Assistance is currently working with those 13 to correct their current financial aid applications. The students are still eligible to receive aid if their applications are correct.

The students aren't connected to the trial, Moeder said. The trial is centered on Bleam.

Watney said the U.S. Attorney's Office isn't going to go after students who simply acted in good faith.

Other students at K-State who are receiving Pell Grants will not be affected in any way by the investigation, Moeder said.

If students have a Pell Grant, and they have not been contacted, they are not in question, he said.

Judge overturns lawsuit over Commerce Bank's Total Campus Cards

JOHN HENDERSON
senior staff writer

A suit filed by First Savings Bank of Manhattan against K-State, claiming the unfair award of a contract with Commerce Bank for the new Total Campus Cards, was overturned Thursday.

FirstBank chief executive officer Gerald Sprong said Meryl Wilson, the newest appointment to the Riley County District Court bench, struck down the suit because it wasn't filed within 30 days of the incident it opposes.

Sprong said the fate of the suit was entirely within the judge's hands.

"We didn't know about a 30-day period," he said. He said K-State didn't know about it either.

The judge decided the suit should have been filed 30 days after FirstBank was notified that Commerce would get the contract, Sprong said. Both banks were notified in January. The suit was filed June 27.

Sprong said he believed the suit was filed in a timely manner, because it wasn't until late May that he and the FirstBank board of directors received the details of Commerce's contract.

FirstBank had requested information about the bids just after it heard a rumor that it might have been unfairly awarded, but got a four-month runaround from university officials, Sprong said.

"We tried to be as communicative as possible, but we kept getting delays," he said.

It was then that independent teams of lawyers and accountants hired by FirstBank compared the contracts and found Commerce's bid to be higher.

State law, as quoted in the suit, requires state-funded agencies like K-State to award contracts to the lowest bidder. The suit named the university, the K-State Student Union, K-State President Jon Wefald, Vice President for Institutional Advancement Bob Krause, Associate Vice President and Dean

K-State lines up Secretary of Defense for Landon Lecture

STAFF REPORTS

Secretary of Defense William Cohen will deliver the 110th Landon Lecture at 2 p.m. Sept. 12 in McCain Auditorium.

A former three-term Republican U.S. senator from Maine, Cohen was sworn in as the nation's 20th secretary of defense in January.

Cohen, who also represented Maine's 2nd Congressional District from 1973 to 1979 in the U.S. House, served on the Senate Armed Services and Governmental Affairs committees from 1979 to 1997 and the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence from 1983 to 1991 and 1995 to 1997. He has also served on several foreign policy boards and councils dealing with the Middle East, NATO and chemical weapons control.

As the author of the Competition in Contracting Act of 1984 and the Information Management Reform Act of 1986, Cohen has been active in efforts to reform the federal government's procurement process and establishing private sector best practices to government agencies, including the Department of Defense.

He also played a key role in drafting the Federal Acquisition Reform Act of 1996.

Fire in Weber Hall causes $6,000 in damage, no injuries reported

A fire in Weber Hall caused $6,000 worth of damage to a freezer door around 7 a.m. Thursday, said Jack Riley, head of the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry.

There were no injuries, and the only damage was to the door, Riley said, though there was a lingering smell of smoke throughout most of the building five hours after the fire was extinguished.

Rick Berry, battalion chief for the Manhattan Fire Department, said the fire was caused by a short circuit in the heating element of the freezer door.

The freezer, one of many used for the laboratories in Weber, had a door frame made of 4- by 4-inch wooden boards surrounding stainless steel with a stainless steel door.

The wire used to keep the door from freezing shut had a short circuit, which ignited the wooden section of the door frame.

The entire door and door frame must be replaced at an estimated cost of $6,000.

No classes were rescheduled, and all rooms in Weber other than the meat labs remained open, Riley said.

Hazing charges leave Texas A&M blemished, sued, without drill team

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — The accusations began last March when a puffy-faced Texas A&M University freshman showed up in the Office of the Commandant of the Aggie Corps of Cadets.

Travis Alton clearly had been beaten.

The blame, however, has been passed around in the months since Alton, a member of the corps' elite, all-freshman Fish Drill Team, came forward.

His $25 million lawsuit describes a series of beatings between January and March.

It claims Alton's head was taped like a mummy, and he was forced to cut his shoulder with a knife. Misdemeanor assault and hazing charges were filed against nine students, and disciplinary hearings were planned for another 16 students.

The six sophomores, two juniors and one senior were trainers for the drill team — 41 determined students who emerged from a pool of about 250 to fill the boots of national champions who marched before them, including several who performed at the beginning of the movie "A Few Good Men."

This month, the school suspended the drill team.

Ironically, the drill team exists because of hazing. The outfit was formed in 1947 at the former Bryan Air Base, where all freshmen — fish in Aggie language — were moved to keep them safe from upperclassmen.

In the Fish Drill Team case, three cadets have pleaded no contest in exchange for probation and community service. The criminal cases of the others are pending, and no date has been set for a civil trial.

Health group's chief criticizes tobacco industry for 'profiting from addiction'

BEIJING — Cigarette makers who have come under increasing restrictions in the United States and other countries should not be allowed to expand elsewhere, the head of the World Health Organization said Sunday.

Opening the 10th International Conference on Smoking or Health, WHO Director-General Dr. Hiroshi Nakajima said he was satisfied with the results of recent lawsuits against cigarette makers in the United States.

He said the admission by the Durham, N.C.-based Ligget Group that tobacco is addictive was the end of an industry conspiracy of silence.

The rapid spread of smoking in developing countries is one of the most prominent concerns of anti-tobacco activists and a theme of the conference, a week-long gathering of 1,500 health experts from more than 70 countries.

The activists say tobacco companies are stepping-up marketing in the Third World to compensate for stagnating sales in richer countries.

WHO wants governments to adopt rules to restrict the international tobacco trade, Nakajima said.

Wildcat Card serves useful purposes

The New Wildcat Card: It's not just ID anymore

STORY BY NATE JENKINS

Banking, shopping, eating and making long-distance phone calls should become more convenient with the Wildcat Card, the new student ID card.

The new pieces of plastic, complete with a computer chip called a "smart chip," which contains personal information necessary for all these services, can do almost everything but wake you up for class in the morning.

The ID card center, in the K-State Student Union, has been working to get the new Wildcat cards ready for students. The center received the bulk of them, 20,000 cards, Aug. 18. Photos were taken, and the cards were distributed during fee payment in the Union.

Jack Thoman, business manager of the Union, is in charge of processing and distributing the cards. Students can get their photo taken and pick up their ID cards in the Union ballrooms. After Labor Day, cards can be picked up at the ID card center on the main floor.

The basic functions of the ID cards remain the same. Students can use them to enter the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, check out books at Farrell Library, take advantage of Lafene Health Center and open a Wildcat Card account. However, there are now additional features.

By opening an account at any Commerce Bank branch, it can also be used as a normal ATM card. Students are able to withdraw money from any cash machine or make deposits. Students who already have an account at Commerce Bank and want to use the ID as a cash card will be issued a personal identification number through the bank.

Cash will not be necessary to buy a soft drink or newspaper. The new student ID cards can also be used as a debit cards, which take money directly from checking accounts.

It's similar to writing a check, except there is no writing involved and the balance is computed immediately, like using an ATM card.

According to Sandy Clark, manager of the Commerce Bank branch in the Union, about 30 businesses in Manhattan will accept the debit card, most of those in Aggieville, with more possible in the future.

Refund checks from dropped classes and financial aid money are normally picked up at the business office at the beginning of each semester, but this mightno longer be necessary for students who have a bank account with the new card.

With permission from students, this money can now be transferred directly into the bank accounts, making the refund process a bit more efficient. The balance, however, will not be automatically transferred and picking up the check in person will remain an option.

The Wildcat Card can also be used as a long-distance calling card. Students interested in activating this service should contact the Office of Telecommunications on campus to activate the service. AT&T is working with the telecommunications office to provide the service.

Only new students, or those who are unable to exchange last semester's ID card for the new one, will be charged $15.

Residence halls open later, shuffle living arrangements

JOHN HENDERSON
senior staff writer

K-State residence halls opened later this fall than in past years, making living arrangements awkward for those who had obligations before classes started.

Derek Jackson, who replaced Shah Hasan this year as assistant director of residence life, said the halls opened later because fee payment no longer involves a trip through Ahearn Field House.

Residence halls used to open the Wednesday before classes started, Jackson said. Now, because fee payment is done mainly by mail, the halls didn't need to be open until Saturday, he said.

Paul Taylor, senior in recreation and park administration, used to live in Putnam Hall, but he now lives off campus. He plays trombone in the K-State Marching Band, which begins practice before fall classes start. During his first and second years at K-State, he didn't have to make arrangements for practice, because the residence halls opened early.

"I wasn't aware of any trouble until last year," he said.

Some others, such as intersession students, football players and sorority rushees, also needed to be on campus earlier, Jackson said.

Rushees planning to live in a residence hall came Sunday and stayed in Haymaker Hall, he said. Early arrivals with the band came Tuesday evening and were placed in Marlatt Hall. Various others, including football players and intersession students, stayed in West Hall, he said.

Thursday night, all students who were placed in temporary housing moved to their permanent assignments, he said. Then, residence hall staff members could check all the rooms that had been lived in for a week or more.

"We have a little time on Friday, but not much," Jackson said.

On Friday, anyone about to move into a residence hall could pay an $8 early-arrival fee and move in before the crunch on Saturday, he said.

Frank Tracz, K-State band director, said several marching band veterans made space for the rookies in their houses or apartments before the residence halls opened.

Tracz said he wanted to save money and bother for the new band members by helping them avoid the stay in Marlatt, but some stayed there anyway.

Section leaders, Classy Cats, color guard, percussion and twirlers had to be in by Wednesday, and all the other band members started practice Thursday, he said.

Jason Martin, freshman in mechanical engineering, was waiting for his drum audition. He lives in Goodnow Hall, he said, but had stayed at a friend's house.

Jason Richins, freshman in music, was waiting Tuesday afternoon in McCain Auditorium to audition with the other new percussion students. He said he would be living in Marlatt anyway, and had moved in with his roommate early.

"I just called and asked if we could move in," he said.

OPINION

MONDAY, AUGUST 25, 1997

OURview

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other staff members. Our View is the Collegian's official opinion.

Long lines, mass confusion still part of fee-payment ritual; changes needed

For a third semester, students have had the convenience of paying fees via mail. No more standing in close quarters with other sticky students. No more waiting in line after endless line.

Or perhaps it's not over.

For students receiving refunds, the only difference was the other people they were crammed next to weren't so sticky, thanks to air conditioning in the K-State Student Union.

But there were the long lines and general confusion that were supposed to be things of the past.

Sometimes the line seemed endless, and only when people were ready to decide that no refund check was worth such a chunk of their lives did the lines break into more rational forms.

The order should begin sooner in the line outside the K, S and U ballrooms by separating students by last name, like they do once students are in that final, glorious line. If students are given more guidance and direction early in the lines, the experience could be much less frustrating.

Instead of a line for people with last names J-S, which is fairly encompassing, the range of letters should be smaller, perhaps J-N and O-S. If there were more people working to hand out the refunds to 11 or 12 lines, the process would go much smoother for all involved.

Harkening back to the old-school way of doing things, the actual handing out of refund checks should be staggered by last name as well. If students are told a specific time when they can pick up their refund, it will cut down dramatically on the congestion and general befuddlement.

The mail-in system has proven to be a much easier way of going about the painful process of fee payment. It especially makes life easier for those who had to sit in the extremes of temperatures in Ahearn Field House for hours on end. But let's not forget that by semester three, we should look at ways to improve upon what we have.

When I was in high school, I dreamed of coming to K-State.

Everyone here probably did.

However, it wasn't the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, the academic programs or the beautiful scenery that drew me here.

It was the newspaper and the yearbook.

Award-winning publications that I longed to work for when I was a photojournalist.

Since then, I've been a reporter, a photojournalist, a copy editor, a managing editor and a design editor. Been around the block, you might say.

In March, I made a decision. I was going to apply for editor in chief.

I had grandiose plans. It was time for a change. I no longer wanted to sit in the back seat. No, it was time for me to make my move.

Then, I got the job.

I told my mom. I told my friends. I told people I worked with back home.

My mom was supportive. "You'll do fine," she said. "It's not like you haven't done something like this before."

The people back home were supportive, too.

My friends up here were confused.

Why would someone want to lead the Collegian? That paper?

Some even laughed.

A couple of days later, a woman I didn't know came up to me and yelled about why the Collegian covered a story the way it did.

It wasn't even May. August was so far away and the people were already yelling.

Good.

The readers let me know what they thought. That meant they read the paper and formed opinions.

Now, it's August. Days before this newspaper sees print.

Let me tell you something: Keep yelling.

You want changes. Get ready for them.

In-depth stories? They're on the way.

A redesigned Electronic Collegian? It's here and within days you'll get to go online and chat with not only newsworthy people, but also columnists, writers, editors and me.

A new attitude? Yes. We're even more dedicated to getting the news you want into the paper.

But it's going to cost you.

What I want to see is simple. Give us feedback. Call me. Send me e-mail. Stop by the office. Let us know how we're doing.

We care.

If we didn't, we wouldn't try to juggle classes, trips to Aggieville, our personal lives and putting out a newspaper for you every day.

We wouldn't interview people. We wouldn't take photos. We wouldn't ask what you thought.

Instead, well, I know I'd be at home sleeping.

However, the Collegian and its tradition mean a lot to me. Same with the Collegian staff. We want you to have the best.

Along the way, we might make mistakes. Let us know, and we'll try to fix them.

Along the way, we might miss something you wanted to see covered. Let us know, and we'll find a way to cover it.

Along the way, you might bump into us in a classroom. Let us know what you think. We'll listen.

Want to know why? Because we care, and deep down, we know you do as well.

If you didn't, you wouldn't be reading this.

So with all that out of the way, do me a favor: Read the paper, tell your friends, tell us what you think and, most of all, have an unbelievable semester.

We'll be there to cover it.

Let go of summer right now.

Just let yourself return to your God-given skin tone, and let your hair assume a less bleachy look. Don't turn back — it's all school from here to that distant horizon.

Oh, but there is something of a silver lining here for all of us K-Staters, a light at the end of this tunnel of academia — the Collegian. Or, more specifically, the opinion page of the Collegian.

For the next 79 days or so, we will strive to challenge you to think in new ways, about new ideas. We'll strive to be an outlet for your opinions. And let's not forget the part about striving to make you wet yourself with the occasional dose of home-style Collegian humor.

But before the educational and sometimes inflammatory mirth goes full throttle, now would be a good time to clear up some common misconceptions about the opinion page and columnists in general.

Somewhere near the top of this page, you'll find a box with something written in it and no writer listed. That's called the editorial board, and it is written by members of the Collegian editorial board. That board is made up of Collegian desk editors and any other paid staff member who wants to join.

Each day we discuss an issue we feel is relevant specifically to K-State or just in general. After we reach some sort of consensus, one of the members then writes the editorial. It is left unsigned because it represents the Collegian's view.

And then there are the columns. This includes sports columns — not just the stuff that appears on this page labeled opinion. The columnists' views are their views alone. They are not, I repeat, not representative in any way, shape or form of the Collegian's views.

The Collegian is so much more than any one story. But when a columnist's opinion incites rage in the hearts of many, it sometimes becomes difficult for readers to find the lines of distinction between individual and newspaper.

We support our columnists in their right to their opinion, but we don't accept it as the Collegian's opinion.

Just remember, when the writer's picture is next to a long column, it's that person's opinion, not the Collegian's or anyone else's.

That doesn't mean you can't speak up if something you read in this paper strikes a certain chord with you. If you have an idea or opinion — good or bad — we want to hear about it. Just because we happen to be the students running this paper doesn't mean we know everything or that we're only going to cater to our own ideas. You are the reason we put out this paper five days a week. It's your paper. Let us know what you think.

And thanks to increasing technological advances, the Collegian is so accessible there's no reason for you to not let us in on your opinion.

KRIS EMMONS/Collegian

Probably the most convenient method is e-mail. And, even more convenient, all columnists' e-mail addresses are printed near their pictures. Also, you can find the desk editors' e-mail addresses on the Electronic Collegian. And all you have to do in most cases is click on the address to send someone a message. There's also a general letters address you can access if you want to send a letter to the editor by e-mail.

You can also give us a call in the newsroom, drop by and leave a message in a writer's box, or talk to someone in person. And let's not forget the U.S. Postal Service and campus mail.

People are in the newsroom about 18 hours a day, so it's hard to pick a time when there isn't anyone to talk to.

Don't be shy. Get involved at K-State, and make sure your voice is heard. We're ready to listen.

Welcome to K-State

Hope you survive the experience

For those of you who just arrived, welcome to K-State. For those of you who've been here before, welcome back. For those of you who never left, don't read this column, leave campus for the day. It's excusable — I told you to. That makes it all right.

That's our first lesson for the day — do everything the newspaper tells you to do.

I considered, during the summer break, compiling a list of helpful hints for those new to our perky little campus or to complete the encyclopedic knowledge of K-State's grizzled veterans. Sadly, while I was distracted by the floral display in front of Kedzie Hall (purple flowers that spell K-S-U? Did we spend money on that?), summer had already fled, chased by the dull plodding of the fall semester.

Still, I found some tips carved in a stone tablet hidden carefully in the nooks and crannies of the sixth floor of Farrell Library. I share these in the hopes they'll help you weather the oncoming storm, even if you've already sat through a deluge or two.

First of all, the two most precious and scarce resources to a college student are money and food. Even if you've just picked up a financial aid check big enough to give Bill Gates heart palpitations, you might as well start eating ramen noodles now. By November, you'll be lucky to get noodles. Oh, you'll hate the taste, that's a given. But it's food, technically speaking.

On the money front, you have the capability to write a hot check. You will have the temptation later in the semester. Don't even think about it. Collection agencies are the modern-day Furies, unrelenting and impatient. They don't care what time they call you, and they don't really buy it when you change your voice and insist that your name is really Homer J. Fong and that you just stepped out and can't be reached until after the rapture.

They will call again. They might not kill you, but after fielding messages and being woken up by the bank's bloodhounds, your roommates just might extract that pound of flesh. Or two.

Speaking of roommates, they will either save your life or make you regret every second of it. A degree of it is up to you, and the rest falls into the realm of the being you trust not to attack you with a waffle iron while you snooze. Trust them, but when the going gets tough, shove your futon up against the door and go for the window.

If you want to talk to the real power on this campus, don't find your department head or dean. Find the department secretaries and office managers. In their hands rest the powers of Athena and Zeus — the wisdom to do all things possible and the capability to hurl some serious lightning when appropriate.

Be kind to them, and they will help you. Do otherwise and you'll be hating life with a zillion bolts pouring through your academic nervous system.

If you don't own a computer, stop reading and go out and get one right now. If you can't afford it, trust me, you can't afford not to have one. The financial investment will be returned the first night (and morning) you stare unblinking at your term paper on your monitor while nursing battery-acid coffee.

Don't think you can just go to the public labs when you need to — a few thousand people on campus have that attitude, and there aren't that many computers. And you can't drink coffee in the labs. Don't even try it.

A few mysterious wrinkles lurk in the folds of this campus. The squirrels are watching our every move with an agenda all their own. The cows have been stockpiling arms. Listen to the parking meters. If you speak nicely to them, they talk back. The sixth floor of Farrell Library doesn't always exist in this universe. And despite all reports to the contrary, the Purple Masque Theatre is not haunted. Really. Trust me.

The best piece of advice works for all on campus, new and old. Get involved. There are clubs and organizations with diverse themes to suit the most bizarre and tormented personalities. They love to see new members and interested people. Try out for plays in Nichols Hall tonight and tomorrow. Look for local academic and social organizations to join. You can offer as much to them as they can to you, and you'll all be better for it.

When in doubt, ask questions. There are plenty of friendly people on campus. Me, I run over them.

It's not too late to optimize financial aid

BRANDI HERTIG
staff reporter

Money everywhere — and every cent to be spent on financing the university experience. However, with the filing of a few forms, students can have Uncle Sam help them on the road to that lucrative degree.

Seventy percent of K-State students are receiving some type of aid in the form of loans, grants, scholarships or involvement in a work-study program, said Larry Moeder, director of student financial assistance.

Several factors go into the formula for determining a student's need for aid.

"It's impossible to tell a student just by looking at an income whether or not they qualify," Moeder said.

If a family's size or number of students from one family attending college, their level of need goes up.

"Our suggestion is every student should apply for federal aid at least one time. Every student can qualify for some kind of federal assistance," he said.

Depending on the student's financial need, they might either be awarded a grant or a loan. Students with a higher financial need will receive grants. Those with lesser needswill receive loans.

"Those who can't demonstrate high financial need certainly qualify for a student loan," he said.

Sonya Coppinger, a readmitted student in family and consumer science, said students should try to get as much loan money as they can qualify for in case of unexpected situations that might arise.

"One thing I did the first time around was I took the least amount that I thought I could scrape by with, and that didn't leave much room if something came up," she said. "When I came out of my last semester, I didn't have any money, and then I was indebted to my parents."

Loans can either be subsidized or unsubsidized, depending on the student's level of need. If the student has a high financial need, their loan may be subsidized, meaning the federal government will pay the interest accrued while the student is in school. A student with less need can qualify for the same loan in an unsubsidized form.

Students can still apply for federal aid for the 1997-98 school year until May 1. First, a Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSFA) must be filled out. The forms are available outside Fairchild 104.

Students should expect results to be returned to them and their school within three weeks. The school will then determine what type of assistance the student can be awarded.

However, Moeder cautions against procrastinating when applying for aid.

"The problem with waiting that long is that many of the funds will be gone," he said.

When applying for aid for the 1998-99 school year, Moeder recommends starting the process as early as possible.

Financial aid applications are available from the federal government starting January 1. K-State's priority deadline is March 1. Students who meet that deadline will be considered for all forms of aid.

K-State's deadline for scholarship applications is February 1. Scholarships are awarded on the basis of the student's merit, not financial need. Because some colleges have more money for scholarships than others, a particular grade point average may garner an award in one college where it may not in another.

To help students become better aware of their financial options, the Office of Student Financial Assistance will play host to a financial aid and scholarship night Nov. 18. During this first-time event, students will be able to apply for university scholarships, as well as scholarships for different organizations all over the country. Students will also be able to receive help with filling out FAFSFA that evening.

Jason Ramos, sophomore in business, recently transferred to K-State from the University of Kansas and has found the process for receiving aid at K-State easier for him than at KU.

"I never got anything sent in right, and then they'd send it back and tell me something was wrong. It was just like a never-ending process," he said.

No changes have been made in the federal programs for this year, but several changes will be looked at in the near future.

"We anticipate changes in a year because Congress will reauthorize student aid programs for another five years, and when they do that, they tend to change a lot of things," Moeder said.

Moeder said the way student loan programs operate will be evaluated. Also, Congress will consider putting more money into grant programs to help alleviate students' fiscal pressure in the long run. A simplified version of the current application for financial aid will also be considered.

Mail-in fees can't eliminate all the long lines

SANDY DAVIS
staff writer

Hundreds of students stood in lines that snaked around the second floor of the K-State Student Union Thursday. The students were waiting to pick up their financial aid checks and new student ID cards.

For the third semester, fee payment was accomplished through the mail instead of Ahearn Field House. Students who received financial aid refunds picked up their checks in the Union.

More info? Want to know the Collegian's opinion on the financial payment process? Check out page 4.

Students who did not have have credit balances after paying for classes did not have to stand in line at all.

Most students followed the instructions they received in the mail, sent their payments in before the deadline and just had to attend the first day of class, R. Douglas Ackley, assistant controller, said.

Ackley said 16,000 statements were sent out to students, but he said it's too early to tell exactly how many students will enroll late or have had their schedules dropped.

"We noticed in the fall that more students waited until the last minute to pay," Ackley said.

Ackley said he thought the process at the Union was more efficient than going through Ahearn.

"Instead of getting 16,000 students through in a three-day period, now we do it in a 30-day period," he said.

Ackley said the new fee process is done completely by controller's office employees, unlike the Ahearn fee payment where they hired an extra 30-40 students to help.

Ackley said the most traffic went through the credit balance refund lines, which saw more than 3,500 students on the first day.

Those who did not pick up their refund checks at the Union will have the balance mailed to them.

Ackley said it's important for students to keep their current addresses on file, especially if they want their financial aid checks mailed. Addresses can be changed at the Registrar's Office in Anderson Hall.

Students were also able to have pictures taken and pick up their new student ID cards at the Union.

The new ID can be used in conjunction with Commerce Bank accounts and as a debit card through the Wildcat Card program.

While the mail-in process is more convenient, one student admitted missing the old method of paying fees, with radio stations broadcasting live and Manhattan merchants giving out coupons around Ahearn.

"Going through Ahearn was a big deal," Andi Stuber, junior in animal science, said. "It was kind of like tradition."

Another key proposal from the spring campaign, a course and teacher information proposal, won't take shape. But work by Riemann, Neufeld and former officers will help a close facsimile of Riemann's plan succeed.

Former Student Body President Chris Hansen and Rhett Trujillo, the teacher evaluation coordinator on Hansen's cabinet, designed a course and teacher information proposal. The plan takes answers from student questionnaires about courses and instructors and publishes the data for public release.

The idea passed Faculty Senate last May and will operate on a trial basis this year, Riemann said. Information from the questionnaires will be gathered and compiled, but it will not be published, giving organizers time to fine tune the program.

Publication of evaluations under Hansen's plan is similar to Riemann's spring proposal that students form an advisory committee to complete evaluations about courses and instructors. Teachers would also complete evaluations under Reimann's plan and a neutral committee would review and publish the data.

That plan, Riemann said, has been abandoned because of the success of Hansen's proposal which accomplishes basically the same goal. Riemann and Neufeld will play a key role during this year's trial run of the new evaluation system.

Riemann said the system won't be used to provide individual's thoughts about instructors. Instead, the data will include teaching styles and course information to give other students a better understanding of a class before they take it.

"We want to take a new questionnaire that can be published so that all students can read the information. This is not evaluating how good a teacher is. This is just to tell the students what the teachers' style is. It's by no means a referendum on how nice the teacher is or how good the teacher is," he said.

The system will be designed to work for students and for instructors, Neufeld said, providing information that both groups can utilize. Working together is important, Riemann said, to make this and other plans succeed.

"A lot of people think that it's students against faculty, and that's just not true here. We want to work with faculty. We have the same goal, and that's to make K-State the best place we can. We want to cooperate with everyone to achieve that goal," Riemann said.

The third of three main components of Riemann's platform may not take shape soon, but the idea will reach the Kansas Legislature when it convenes in early 1998.

Riemann's proposed state education grant, similar to the national Pell Grant system, has been adopted as a long-term initiative by the Student Advisory Committee to the Kansas Board of Regents which is comprised of the student body presidents from Kansas' six regent schools.

The committee will lobby for the grant during next year's legislative session.

The grant, Riemann said, would provide funds for needy students who have trouble continuing school due to tuition increases.

"There are a lot of students out there who are having to take out pretty large loans to get through college," Riemann said. "Graduating with a debt is not pro-growth. There's not a more sound investment than education."

of Student Life Pat Bosco and Union Director Bernard Pitts as defendants.

The suit was not directed at Commerce Bank. Sprong said he had no problem with Commerce receiving the contract, only with the university not handling the bidding process properly.

"It was clear to us that we were the low bidder," he said. "We met with Commerce several times to see what we were missing. We found that K-State's analysis was not even done on our bid."

For example, Commerce's plan requires a 75-cent charge for every withdrawal from an automatic teller machine. Sprong said the average college student makes six withdrawals a month from a debit account.

That would add up to $4.25 a month per student. If 5,000 students have accounts with Commerce Bank, the bank would receive $21,250 per month, or $255,000 a year on those fees alone.

FirstBank's plan did not have those fees, Sprong said. In general, students signed up with Commerce Bank's plan will have to pay more in interest and transaction fees, and so will the university, he said.

What's more, Sprong said, a contract for a checking account that the Kansas Board of Regents would use to allocate funds to K-State was also unfairly handled, and was also awarded to Commerce Bank.

He said FirstBank's analysis states that its own bid on that contract wasn't the lowest, but neither was Commerce's.

"The question here is how well is the business being conducted," Sprong said. "Within this short period of time, two lowest bidders were not chosen for contracts."

Sprong said that he and the FirstBank board of directors have decided under advisement of legal counsel not to appeal the court's decision and that the decision would be too difficult to overturn.

But that does not change Sprong's opinion that the university hasn't been fair.

"If we had lost fair and square, you'd never hear from me again," he said. "It's just crazy… and I've said this to Krause — that when you have this great university, and for the accounting to be so inaccurate — I just can't understand why."

▸ LOCAL BAND, Lost and Found, entertains small crowd at All Faiths Chapel on Sunday night.

The band Lost and Found played for more than 90 minutes Sunday night in All Faiths Chapel to more than 100 fans.

Micheal D. Bridges entertains the audience at All Faiths Chapel between songs Sunday night. Bridges is one of two people in the Lost and Found band.

Lost and Found, the two-man team of Michael Bridges on guitar and George Baum on keyboard and drums, doesn't classify as Christian rock in my definition or their own.

"Most people expect a Christian right-wing evangelist sort of music," Bridges said in an interview before the performance, "I think we're socially liberal Republicans.

"But fiscally, we're with the Republicans."

"We write about the most important thing in our lives, and that's our relationship with God," Baum said. "If casinos were the most important thing in our lives, we'd write about going into casinos all the time." Bridges sang a few bars of "The Gambler" just to give it a try.

In fact, Bridges considers the sound itself to be the priority and not what label the band carries as 'Christian' or 'rock.'

"I'd just like to be known as Lost and Found. A lot of bands sound interchangeable," he said. "If you like Pearl Jam, you probably automatically like Soundgarden. I like to think that if you want the specific sound of Lost and Found, you go see Lost and Found."

And they certainly have their own sound. In the 18 original songs they performed, I picked up traces of R.E.M-like vocals, as well as touches of John Mellencamp, Elton John, Barry Manilow and Eric Clapton, but it never relied heavily on any one style except a love of fast, fast, fast bursts of activity in most of the songs.

The music itself was not far from my favorite stuff on the radio and a damn sight better than the infinite alternative and country band clones.

It also helped that Bridges and Baum perform just like they interview — as a highly polished and seamless duo.

Knowing one another for more than 20 years and touring for more than 10, both men have played for festivals with 30,000 fans in attendance and smaller gigs for churches and related youth groups.

Jayne Thompson, who organized the concert, met the team in 1989, when they led a worship service in Florida.

"I think the world of them," Thompson, a Lutheran campus minister, said.

There was a definite grassroots folk music feel to the concert, not only from the laid-back banter between musicians and the audience but the strong clapping and sing-alongs from the audience itself. Baum confessed that he and Bridges like these smaller performances as opposed to the 30,000 screaming teen-agers.

"Some of the best concerts we've done are in a room of 50 or 100 people where there are cross-sections of ages 5 through 85, and it becomes like a community. The connection with the people is what we value."

All in all, I was impressed with Lost and Found in terms of both a wealth of talent as well as a purity in the fun they have playing.

"We've become more confident," Bridges said. "We're less concerned about singing and saying what people expect and more with singing and saying what's on our minds."

In a way, I credit the unique appeal of Lost and Found to the inappropriate label of 'Christian rock' that almost caused me to discount them.

Stopping to actually listen to their work, one realizes that messages are usually just icing on the cake. Talent is what I respect, and talent is what I found.

McCain's schedule of events will range from ice ballet to American Indian music

MARY RENEE SMITH
staff writer

An inflatable man, ice ballet, radio comedy and golden top hats will highlight McCain Auditorium's 27th performance series.

David Frain, assistant director of McCain, said the season offers a variety for theater goers. "We are lucky at K-State to have this kind of series to take advantage of."

The season will open Sept. 23, with the Tony Award-winning musical "A Chorus Line." The musical is the second longest-running Broadway show, surpassed only by "Cats."

Frain said musicals have special appeal to audiences. There are two other musicals in McCain's series this year, "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" on Oct. 11 and "Grease" in March. "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" is an early work of Andrew Lloyd Webber, who is famous for "The Phantom of the Opera" and "Cats."

Shakespeare's rarely performed tale of sisterly love, "Measure for Measure," will be brought to McCain by the five-person troupe Actors from the London Stage. The group will be at K-State for about a week working with various classes before the Oct. 3 performance.

Frain describes the Fred Garbo Inflatable Theatre Company as a unique experience. "Garbo is kind of one of those things you have to see. It is visually intriguing."

The Nov. 9 show features Fred Garbo and ballerina Daielma Santos and includes dancing, music, juggling and slapstick comedy. Garbo has appeared on "Late Night with David Letterman" and was the man inside Barkley, the dog on the children's television show "Sesame Street."

Physical comedy and acrobatics will appear again later in the year as the McCain season closes April 19 with the Cirque Éloize. The show includes alumni of the world-famous Cirque du Soleil.

The Imagination Workshop will perform its radio antics on stage Nov. 22. The comedy ensemble is from KANU-FM 91.5 radio in Lawrence and will record its holiday show for a broadcast on National Public Radio.

"The Imagination Workshop seems to have quite a following," Frain said. "We have had a very good response in ticket sales."

Classical performances in the coming semester include the Artis Quartet and pianist Lilya Zilberstein. Also on the fall schedule is the return of American Indian flutist R. Carlos Nakai, who appeared at McCain in 1994. Nakai and pianist Peter Kater will perform Nov. 14.

The stage at McCain will once again be turned to ice this December for the St. Petersburg State Ice Ballet. The ballet company will perform "The Nutcracker."

Students can buy season tickets for $89. That includes tickets to all McCain Performance Series events except the Count Basie Orchestra.

"When it comes to supporting the arts, only a portion of that is from ticket sales," Frain said.

The Friends of McCain is a nonprofit organization that has helped support the McCain Performance Series for 25 years, he said. For different donation levels, contributors can have their names listed in the Performance Series program book and sometimes are invited to receptions with the performers.

The complete schedule can be seen on the Internet at www.ksu.edu/mccain/1997 index.html.

New DB92 station manager plans for a more mainstream sound

Pump up the volume?
Len Potillo is the new station manager at KSDB-FM 91.9 and said the days of the station being the campus laughing stock are over.

JOHN HENDERSON
senior staff writer

KSDB-FM 91.9 radio station manager Len Potillo said if his station is going to survive and be respected, a lot of big changes need to happen.

"If we wanted to remain a laughed-at college radio station, then we'd need to keep playing the music we've been playing for five years," he said.

"We want to be recognized as a force in the broadcast community in this area."

The station broadcasts from the third floor of McCain Auditorium. Last month, Joe Montgomery left as station manager, and Potillo took over.

Potillo said he wants DB92 to become a better training ground for students who want to pursue careers in broadcasting.

"Joe was really good about making sure that we did have the best-quality equipment that students can train on," he said. "That's one of my reasons for changing the format. Students need to be trained in a commercial format so they'll be able to leave here and go to a commercial station."

Potillo said he was working with music director Eric Melin and assistant music director Rachel Robinson toward a more cohesive sound.

Potillo's philosophy is that the format a station chooses is based on the sound it wants to create and for the audience it tries to reach, not on whether the band is big or not.

Establishing a flow, he said, involves taking the music from one level, through a crescendo and bringing the listener back down again.

In general, the new album rock that DB92 is known for will be transmuted to what Potillo calls commercial alternative.

"We won't be playing the obscure type of music that we're known to play," he said. "We're going to go for a more mainstream audience."

Right now, Potillo is working on the Welcome Back concert, which will be at 3 p.m. Sept. 6 in City Park. Frogpond will headline, along with TV 50, Ultimate Fake Book, Jiffy Boy and Ruskabank.

Many specialty shows have been shuffled around and given more time in the programming schedule. "Jam the Box," the most popular music program on DB92, will be given an extra hour, from 6 until 10 p.m. Monday through Friday, Potillo said.

"'Metalhead,' which has always been, for years, on Saturday afternoons, is moving to Tuesday nights and hopefully will get a wider audience," he said.

"Jazz in the Morning" will run Monday through Friday, from 6 to 9 a.m. Potillo said Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies for the Department of Music, will require his Jazz Improvisation students to listen to the show.

Wilson said he wouldn't require it every day, but he's excited about having a jazz radio program at DB92. Before, his students had to listen to KANU-FM 91.5 out of Lawrence, he said.

A new talk show, "Campus Life," is also in the works.

"We'll have professors doing grants or research," he said.

"We'll have a whole new staff of people to produce the show. That's still in the works. We're still looking for people to do that."

Potillo encouraged anyone who wants to become involved with this program or any other part of DB92 to show up at 8 p.m. Tuesday in McCain 313.

Live remote broadcasts from Union Station are in store for DB92, including some during shows and parties, with more giveaways and promotional materials. Potillo said he'll need more disc jockeys for that than he's ever needed before.

Also in store for DB92 is computerization, he said. All public service announcements and drops, which previously were stored on tape cartridges, will be stored on computer disk, he said.

"We'll have a computer system in the main control room, so they'll be able to play anything just by taking the mouse and clicking on it," he said.

Station engineer Gary Pettet is still working on the second stage. Potillo wants DB92 to be on the air 24 hours a day, so the music will have to be played by computer.

"It's really difficult to find people who want to come in from 2 to 6 a.m. during school," he said. "We'll have music already prepared, so it's basically a DJ in a box."

> "If we wanted to remain a laughed-at college radio station, then we'd need to keep playing the music we've been playing for five years. We want to be recognized as a force in the broadcast community in this area."

> DB92 station manager

Local bands can't expect to have their music played on DB92 during normal hours anymore if their production, recording and commercial quality isn't good, he said. "Local Spotlight," on Fridays from 4 to 5 p.m., will be likely to keep playing their music, as will the 2-6 a.m. morning computer shifts. Bands that are playing the Welcome Back show will remain in normal rotation, he said.

In some cases, different parts of the university haven't thought of DB92 in a positive light, Potillo said.

"The evidence is pretty obvious that we're not that popular with the style of music that we play now," he said.

The station has a lot of potential, and even though it has a relatively small range of broadcast, the signal is uncommonly clear, he said.

"Some people are just really nervous, because it's something new," he said. "But you just can't grow without change, I think."

System kinks, move-in dates cause confusion, frustration

JOHN HENDERSON
senior staff writer

The trip through Ahearn Field House to pay student fees is a thing of the past. Last spring, K-State admissions allowed tuition and other fees to be paid by mail.

Melissa Stanfield, sophomore in political science, said the forms were fairly self-explanatory, though she let her mom fill out the forms and send the check.

However, she said, the system is far from perfect. The residence halls, which had for years opened the Wednesday before classes started, opened on Saturday.

Stanfield, a Boyd Hall resident, had to rush to move in and get her affairs in order before Monday, she said.

"Having to organize my life in less than 48 hours is not kosher with me at all," she said.

Derek Jackson, recently appointed assistant director of residence life, said the decision to open the halls later was made by the Department of Housing and Dining Services before he arrived at K-State.

Even so, he said because the time between fee payment and Monday classes is shorter, he can understand the benefits of having more focus time.

He said that, in the past, when four days might pass between fee payment and classes, hall residents would be left with little or nothing to do.

"The extra time tends to allow for more partying, and that's not real healthy," he said. "This way, the time in between isn't as critical or as long."

In a more practical sense, Jackson said for each day residents stay in the halls, it costs roughly $8 for the room and another $7.50 for the meals. So the less time students had to live in the halls, the less they had to pay, he said.

The costs were reflected in the $8 fee residents could pay on Friday to get in early, he said. Other students, including K-State Marching Band members and sorority rushees, were placed in alternative housing as early as Tuesday, he said.

He said he thought most campus offices were open on Saturday. Those needing new copies of their class schedules, however, had to come early to enrollment services in Willard Hall, which was open from 8 a.m. until noon.

Brett Ellis, freshman in electrical engineering, said he was already bummed out about being assigned to Haymaker Hall, his fifth choice in registration.

Moving into his room on the fourth floor didn't improve his mood, he said, because he had only about two hours because of plans for the day.

"On Saturday, everybody and his mother showed up at the same time," he said. "It was kind of a drag."

Ellis paid his fees by mail, which he said was simple enough.

But some people, such as Jose de Angel, graduate student in veterinary medicine, weren't able to pay in advance.

He said his problem was that he didn't know when fees were due soon enough, and had to stand in line in the Union Ballroom.

"I didn't know about this until a week ago, which is why it's so crazy for me," he said.

PARKING PROBLEMS

Students pay the price for parking on private property

BY TRAVIS D. LENKNER

Manhattan business owners and law enforcement officials are bracing for the parking headaches that accompany each new school year.

Local wrecking companies are ordering extra deposit slips.

The arrival of thousands of K-State students and their vehicles filled university parking lots and, in many cases, private lots. When the university lots are full, students are often forced to find parking elsewhere.

Businesses close to campus and close to Aggieville can be hit especially hard with parking problems. The University Ramada, south of the K-State Student Union, is no exception. With the beginning of the school year, the hotel has begun to enforce its parking policy.

"If you are a guest in the hotel, you can park here," Director of Sales Teresa Morris said. "Any other vehicles will be towed."

Morris said the parking lot at the hotel, which is marked with six private property signs, has always been a problem. Students who can't find a space in the Union lot park next to the Ramada, taking spaces away from customers.

"We have a lot of banquets and a restaurant that is open during the day. If we don't have parking spots for customers, they leave and we lose business. If people see the parking lot full, they think that the hotel or restaurant is full so they go on," Morris said.

In previous years, Morris said hotel employees tried to tell noncustomers to move their vehicles. Now, Riley County Police officers and a towing service will be called without warning. Morris said 12 vehicles have been towed from their lot in two days.

"We used to stand out in the lot and tell people that they couldn't park here. I've learned plenty of words that I never knew existed from students and parents, and there have been times that they almost ran us over. It's safer for us not to warn people," Morris said.

Aggieville businesses with large parking lots are also affected by an influx in the student population. A Burger King employee said they employ a parking lot staff on busy nights to make sure only restaurant customers park in the lot.

Misty Monzon, manager at the Hardee's in Aggieville, said her restaurant used to hire staff members to enforce the lot policy, as well. She estimated that up to 30 percent of vehicles in the Hardee's parking lot on weekends come from noncustomers.

"Usually on Friday or Saturday nights, especially, people will park here and go to the bars," she said.

Riley County Police Department Capt. Allen Raynor said the rules are simple.

"Parking on private property is certainly the prerogative of the owner of the property. If it's properly signed, city ordinance says they can be ticketed for trespassing and they are subject to be towed away at the owner's expense," he said.

Raynor said the beginning of the new school year is the root of the problem.

Failed systems on space station could cause evacuations

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The three men aboard Russia's run-down Mir space station were left without any way to generate oxygen Monday after both their primary and backup systems failed, at least temporarily, NASA reported.

U.S. space officials said they wouldn't know whether the two Russian cosmonauts and one American astronaut on board were able to fix either of the oxygen-producing devices until the next scheduled communication with the station on Tuesday morning.

Nonetheless, one NASA official called it a potentially serious problem — one that could force an evacuation.

"It could be that tomorrow it could be no problem, or it could be a fairly significant problem," said NASA spokesman Ed Campion. "If you can't get either of the two systems back up, then you're facing a serious situation."

At the time of the cosmonauts' last communication Monday with Russia's Mission Control outside Moscow, they were struggling to fix the secondary solid fuel-burning system.

The primary Elektron generator, which had been turned off since last week to conserve power, had shut itself down Monday after it began overheating, Campion said.

"Before they went to bed, they may have gotten things fixed. We just don't know," Campion said.

In Russia, calls to Mission Control for comment around midnight Moscow time went unanswered after NASA disclosed the problem. But CNN reported that an unidentified official, while acknowledging the problem, played down its seriousness.

Even if both systems remain broken, Mir has enough oxygen to last several days, Campion said from the Johnson Space Center in Houston.

What's more, NASA astronaut Michael Foale and his two Russian crewmates could stretch their air supply by using oxygen tanks set aside for upcoming spacewalks. NASA officials said they did not know how much oxygen those tanks hold.

If neither oxygen-producing system can be restarted in the next several days, Foale and his two Russian crewmates would have to abandon ship in the attached Soyuz capsule.

There have been repeated problems with the new Elektron generator, carried up by space shuttle Atlantis in May.

But this is the first time since February that a crew has had serious trouble with the backup system, in which solid-fuel canisters are ignited to produce oxygen.

One of these canisters burst into flames in February, filling the station with smoke and almost causing the crew to evacuate.

The cosmonauts were trying to ignite a canister, or candle, Monday when the system failed. They replaced the igniter mechanism, but the canister still would not burn.

"This may be nothing more complicated than putting a new candle into the mechanism and they're back in business," said another NASA spokesman, Rob Navias.

There was a bit of good news Monday aboard Mir.

Commander Anatoly Solovyov reported that power was flowing through the makeshift hatch that he and Pavel Vinogradov installed during an internal spacewalk Friday to restore power.

Indeed, Russian flight controllers verified that an additional 40 amps of electricity were flowing into the station. But commands sent to move three of the four solar panels mounted on the outside of the ruptured lab module were unsuccessful.

"There's definitely power coming from the arrays," Campion said. "But how much and what the total capability is is going to take a while to understand."

Until Monday, the station had been flying at half-power as a result of the June 25 collision with an unmanned cargo ship.

Russian space officials, meanwhile, disclosed Monday that the collision might have left as many as seven tiny holes in the sealed-off Spektr lab module.

The head of the Russian Space Agency, Yuri Koptev, said the cargo ship bounced off Mir seven times.

Space officials previously said they believed only one or two holes were punched in the Spektr module.

Man pleads innocent in killing

LAS VEGAS — A teenager pleaded innocent Monday to charges that he sexually assaulted and killed a 7-year-old girl in a casino restroom.

Prosecutors plan to seek to the death penalty for Jeremy Strohmeyer, 18, in the Memorial Day weekend killing of Sherrice Iverson.

District Judge Don Chairez set an April 20 trial date after Strohmeyer's lawyers argued that they needed more time to prepare for the trial.

"There are many mysteries in this case that need to be solved before we go to trial," said defense attorney Leslie Abramson.

Strohmeyer, from Long Beach, Calif., is charged with murder, sexual assault and kidnapping.

His high school classmate, David Cash Jr., told a grand jury that he saw his friend assault the girl in a stall inside a women's restroom at the Primadonna Hotel-Casino, on the California-Nevada state line about 40 miles south of Las Vegas.

Cash said he met Strohmeyer 30 minutes later, and Strohmeyer told him, "I killed her."

Opposition demands investigation of sterilization policy

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Buffeted by shocked responses to a newspaper series on involuntary sterilizations in Sweden, the government is considering an opposition demand to open an investigation, a government spokesman said today.

According to the newspaper Dagens Nyheter, as many as 60,000 people in Sweden were sterilized this century on the grounds of having "undesirable" racial characteristics or otherwise "inferior" qualities such as very poor eyesight, mental retardation or an "unhealthy sexual appetite," as described by authorities at the time.

"It is a frightening picture that now is being shown for the Swedish people," Alf Svensson, chairman of the opposition Christian Democratic Party, said in a letter to Prime Minister Goeran Persson demanding a parliamentary investigation.

The government might take up the issue as early as Tuesday, said Haakan Wrede, a spokesman for Social Minister Margot Wallstroem.

Wallstroem said last week that she also would consider compensating victims. Current law prohibits compensation for sterilizations because they were legal at the time.

The sterilization law was stricken from the books in 1975, the newspaper said. It was unknown when the last sterilizations were done.

Gas prices jump more than 2 cents, Lundberg survey says

LOS ANGELES — Gasoline pump prices rose by more than 2 1/2 cents a gallon, reflecting crude oil hikes and the affect of the busy summer driving season, an industry analyst said Sunday.

The average retail price of gasoline nationwide, including all grades and taxes, was about $1.31 on Friday, up 2.61 cents in two weeks, according to the Lundberg survey of 10,000 stations nationwide.

"It's a continuation of earlier conditions of higher costs and high demand affecting the entire system from the refinery to the station," analyst Trilby Lundberg said.

She added that prices should stabilize or even fall in the "not-too-distant future."

At self-service pumps, the average nationwide price of gasoline, including taxes, was $1.2674 for unleaded regular, $1.3651 for mid-grade and $1.4471 for premium.

NTSB to order more fuel tank explosions in TWA Flight 800 probe

BOSTON — Investigators plan to blow up more Boeing 747 fuel tanks in an attempt to determine what downed TWA Flight 800.

National Transportation Safety Board Chairman Jim Hall said Monday he will ask a national laboratory this week to conduct the tests, the latest in a series that have yet to pinpoint the cause of the July 1996 explosion.

The testing, which will focus on the 747's center fuel tank, should take place within the next six months, Hall said after addressing a meeting of the National Emergency Management Association.

Evidence suggests the explosion originated in the center tank. Investigators have not ruled out a missile or bomb as a cause, but they suspect mechanical failure is more likely.

Flight 800 exploded July 17, 1996, shortly after taking off for Paris from New York's Kennedy Airport. All 230 people aboard were killed.

Textbooks getting back on track

▸ THE UPS STRIKE created some delivery delays, but services should return to normal in the next week

MATT KREPS
staff writer

The United Parcel Service strike has created a backlog for textbooks, but the K-State Union Bookstore and Varney's Book Store are helping students find the books they need.

Both textbook suppliers depend on UPS for many of their textbook orders. With UPS resuming full operation, books should start coming in faster, managers for both suppliers said.

"It looks like our in-bound shipping should be back to normal in about a week or so," Dan Walter, textbook manager at Varney's, said.

Varney's received most of its orders before the book rush started. During the strike they used alternate shippers, but intend to go back to UPS.

The larger orders came by freight, so they were not affected by the strike, Walter said.

"Everything just got slowed down," he said.

Less than 10 percent of Varney's stock was affected. Now only about 3 percent is still a problem, he said.

"My goal is to get a book in for any student that needs it as soon as we possibly can," he said.

The Union is facing many of the same problems but is more concerned with classes that have higher enrollment. Macroeconomics and Expository Writing I books are both out of stock.

Union textbook manager Judy Lundberg said she hoped to have more in about a week.

"It's going to be slower than normal," Kathy Yates, merchandising division manager, said.

Late orders are also creating delays. More than 125 orders from faculty were turned in late this year. With shippers already behind, it is more difficult to get these books than in past years, Lundberg said.

Students who reordered their books helped lessen the effects of the book shortage. Reordering helps with early predictions for book orders.

"If the students are signing up for it, then we know how many people are in the class," Lundberg said.

The Union is also offering to buy back some books through Wednesday. The Larson text for College Algebra and the Edwards text for Calculus are out of stock and on the buy-back list.

"EVERYTHING JUST GOT SLOWED DOWN."

Union food cafeteria cultivates new options for hungry students

JEFF PALMER
staff writer

Grumbling stomachs will have more choices for the relief of hunger pangs in the K-State Student Union.

Food service director Paul Stolle said two new restaurants have been added.

A third restaurant will be added shortly.

In the middle of the Union cafeteria, a food station has been added that plans to follow the hot trend in the restaurant business right now.

"The trend in food right now is to use flour tortillas in a variety of ways with different types of food inside them," Stolle said.

The new restaurant, Heat is On, is going to have a different food each month that will be cooked in front of the customer, as sort of a demonstration, Stolle said.

For the first month, fajitas will be the featured item and in the second month the tortilla wraps will be on the menu. Students will be able to choose from a variety of fillers, both hot and cold.

"The Gold Fork uses a lot of wraps, and they are similar to what Kentucky Fried Chicken and Long John Silver's are offering right now. They are very popular," Stolle said.

Manchu Wok, on the back wall of the cafeteria, is planning to serve popular Chinese foods.

"Manchu Wok is going to prepare a variety of authentic Chinese foods made fresh daily," Stolle said.

The Union has served Chinese foods on occasion in the past, but now students will be able to have it every day if they choose.

Within the month of September construction is going to start in Union Station for the addition of the third new restaurant.

Sbarro, makers of pizza and other Italian foods, is hoping to be open by early October. Sbarro will serve pasta dishes, salads, garlic bread and, of course, pizza — both whole and by the slice.

Students will now be able to choose from Amigos, Subway, Union Station, Manchu Wok, Heat is On, the Union Stateroom or Sbarro.

Dow to pay $2.4 billion breast-implant settlement

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — Dow Corning Corp. offered Monday to pay more than 200,000 women up to $2.4 billion to settle claims that its silicone breast implants cause illnesses when they leak.

According to the offer, the Midland, Mich.-based Dow Corning would not admit that breast implants cause disease, but said it was making the offer to agree to disagree with the women.

"We still believe very strongly that the scientific evidence shows there's no connection between breast implants and medical conditions, although we do know there are local complications and that implants can occasionally rupture," Dow Corning chief executive Richard Hazleton said.

The $2.4 billion offer is part of Dow Corning's attempt to get out of bankruptcy court, where it has been trying to settle implant claims. The plan requires the approval of a bankruptcy court and a two-thirds majority of women suing the company.

The Dow Corning plan marks an increase from the company's original $2 billion settlement offer that was part of a $4.2 billion global settlement offer made by several breast-implant makers.

That plan fell apart because an unexpectedly high 440,000 women sought payments.

The offer came days after Dow Chemical, which owns half of Dow Corning, lost a key negligence case in Louisiana about implants.

Jama Russano, who got her implant at age 14, said the $200,000 payment she could receive wouldn't cover her nearly $300,000 in medical bills.

"I felt almost insulted. I felt like this is such a tragedy," said Russano, 40, of Northport, N.Y. "Many women will bear the burden of Dow's mistake."

Gayle Troutwine, a Portland, Ore., attorney representing 550 women who have filed claims against Dow Corning, said the offer doesn't sound reasonable.

"It averages out to about $5,000 per woman. I guess I'd have to say that is paltry," she said.

Better planning necessary for football ticket pick-up procedures

Football. It is what helps keep K-State on the map. No matter how big our library is or how many awards the Department of Engineering picks up, K-State football is what's televised.

And K-State students are the ones who help make our team great and bring coverage to K-State. So why does the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics feel it's necessary to turn ticket buying into a scavenger hunt?

Monday — the first day of classes — a great many students skipped class to stand in a 2 1/2-hour line for ICAT tickets. Many students were in line to buy General Admission tickets when they didn't need to be. And many were in the General Admission line to pick up their ICAT seats.

Once those tickets were acquired, students discovered they couldn't give away tickets to individual games, laminate their ticket to keep it from getting tattered, or replace their ticket if it was lost.

Why is this so difficult? Why can't a department that makes sure ESPN knows about all our games not notify the students who go to them?

The solutions to this problem are simple and easy to implement: Tickets should be available during fee payment — before classes start. Tickets should be mailed to students' permanent addresses and ICAT could be picked up on campus, eliminating the need for at least one line. Ticket information can be sent out with the Preview edition of the Collegian and in all orientation materials.

Seniors are supposed to have first crack at tickets, followed by juniors, sophomores and freshmen. Why not allow seniors only to pick up their tickets the first day? That would cut the crowd size.

Or start a lottery system — everyone's name goes in a hat and the winners get ICAT. A popular suggestion that works for basketball is to implement the camp out. Groups of students could camp for tickets. As long as one student is there, others could go to work and class.

There is no reason for the frustration experienced by so many this semester. The athletic department has a whole year to fix the problems found by its most important fans.

Become anonymous

Driver's license information will be Web-accessible unless you fill out a form

VIEWPOINT

JONATHON WINKLER

JONATHON WINKLER is a senior in physics. You can send your e-mail comments to Jonathon at jmw@ksu.edu.

It's something you have made anew every four years and is so unflattering you keep it in your wallet or purse where nobody can see it. But Sept. 13, the Kansas Division of Vehicles will publish that ugly flash picture of you from your driver's license, as well as everything else on it, on the Internet.

Personal information will be accessible on the Net unless you fill out a form, which the state must give you if you request it under the terms of the Federal Privacy Act of 1994. That information includes your name, address, gender, age, eye color and all the legal particulars of the car you drive.

Corporations will then prepare sophisticated demographic analyses for marketing purposes, while stalkers will be able to track down victims who have meanwhile managed to preserve their anonymity through unlisted phone numbers and false city directory information.

This has already resulted in municipal lawyers, district attorneys, and judges all over the state filling out a form to "hide" their personal data from vengeful released prisoners. This option is also open to you (pursuant to K.S.A. 74-2012) and is well worth exercising if only to cut down on the amount of junk mail you receive.

But by filling out this form, you encourage the state to reconsider its computerization priorities. For the past several years various departments of the state government have been experimenting with Web pages and ftp download sites to make sure the Internet is not just another passing craze.

Some state agencies, such as the Department of Transportation, have ended the experiment and established permanent Web sites.

Others have not even begun the experiment — an Altavista search for Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks returns only a line item in the fiscal year 1998 budget providing a few hundred thousand dollars for computerization of the Wildlife and Parks headquarters in Pratt and high-speed connections with several regional branch offices around Kansas. It says nothing about establishing Web sites to inform people about camping or other outdoor recreation.

This foot dragging allows other states to embarrass us. Our neighbors Missouri and Nebraska already have fully featured Web sites describing their state parks. The Nebraska page includes detailed accounts of the historical monuments that put to shame their counterparts on the Kansas Historical Society Web site.

The Kansas Department of Transportation, at www.ink.org/public/kdot, is also extremely stingy with information. Other than an excellent description of how speed limits are set and a terse statement that the proposed Southern Highway will not pay for itself as a toll road, the site has absolutely no meat.

County road maps, useful to people seeking unusual and out-of-the-way tourist attractions like Castle Rock and Alcove Spring, are downloadable from this site but only upon entry of a special password which — surprise! — is not given to the general public.

But the Virginia Department of Transportation Web page, at www.vdot.state.va.us, has complete information on road construction and planning. Regular features on this site include planning summaries for metropolitan Washington, D.C., the Richmond-to-Norfolk highway corridor and the new experimental Smart Road being built near Roanoke. Interstate 35 through Johnson County is now nearly as bad as the Shirley Highway into Washington, D.C. Why is the department of transportation so far behind?

JON KURCHE

I am a freshman in college.

It's a pesky disease that makes normal teen-agers do very strange things like gain 15 pounds, suffer from severe bouts of confusion and, in some cases, can lead to instances of spontaneous gibberish. Thankfully, geezu kibbush argh mon-flatow bizzup whewzow.

Sorry about that. The truth of it is that I am going to walk around campus totally stymied for the next six months or so. There will be bouts of homesickness followed by an intense craving for my mother's apple crisp, without which I will be lost and forlorn — on a quest for the security and warmth of my parents — searching, always searching, for more elusive comfort, and finding instead that I have written a really long sentence.

I think that fundamentally, we all need a security blanket in these early times, we all suffer from a longing to crawl back into the womb, to assume the fetal position and — c'mon people, its been tested — feelings of comfort are just womb-surrogates. There must be someone in the Department of Psychology who can confirm that.

My solution to this problem was to join a house. A fraternity. A group of guys, living together through thick and thin and through severe bouts of stinkiness.

I expect that about 80 percent of those of you reading this are rolling your eyes and dismissing me as a sweater vest-wearing, stuck-up, snobbish person who walks around like he has potato chips stuck up his buttocks and is afraid of breaking them.

As for the other 20 percent, while you might be in agreement with everyone else that I am probably a sweater vest-wearing, stuck-up, snobbish person who walks around like he has potato chips stuck up his buttocks and is afraid of breaking them, at least you will give me a fair chance.

Ha! Did that last paragraph make you angry? Were you upset that I would judge and make generalizations about the entire K-State population? Good! Send letters! Also realize that the first impressions I had were of a divided campus that was quick to judge and quick to criticize. Let me tell you a little story.

It all started in a little town in Kentucky…

Wrong story. I'll try again.

GOLDILOCKS GOES ON HER WALK

Last year I visited K-State, knowing that I wanted to be involved and that I wanted to make as many friends as I could in the time allotted. With that in mind, I took my little campus pack that Pat Bosco, dean of student life, had given me, and I marched around campus in search of an environment in which I would be comfortable living.

PORRIDGE TOO HOT

I toured one residence hall, which was built by the Soviets in the 1950s. I think it was originally meant to be a hospital. It didn't appeal to me. When I told people I was looking at fraternities they would look to the ceiling as though it might offer me wisdom to amend my naughty ways, and then the conversation would end. I didn't like that. It seemed contradictory to my friendship/involvement policy.

PORRIDGE TOO COLD

I toured another residence hall, which was built by a group of renegade baroque-revival supporters. It looked like Buckingham Palace inside, but it sounded like a library. I couldn't see myself having any fun in an environment where I was too afraid to break something.

PORRIDGE JUST RIGHT

The final residence hall I saw was a pleasant go-between. There were plenty of people laughing and sharing, plenty of inexpensive furniture and the atmosphere had just a touch of hominess to it. I could see myself living here.

PORRIDGE GRAINS APPEAR TO HAVE POOR QUALITY, CAUSING BLAND FLAVOR

I wanted to find out more about residence hall life, so I struck up a conversation with my tour guide and her roommates.

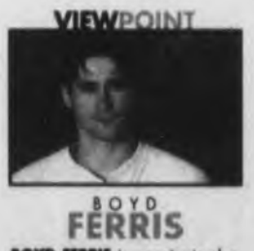
"What do you do for fun?" I asked.

"Oh, we don't get out very much," she said, laughing.

I thought she was laughing because she was joking. She wasn't joking. Someone was stepping on her foot.

GOLDILOCKS GOES ELSEWHERE , FINDS HAPPINESS EATING OTHER PORRIDGE

The rest is history.



I know the impression I had of residence halls did not represent the entire campus but I wanted to feel like I was part of something. I never did in residence halls. That is the only reason I chose to live in a house, and that continues to be the reason for my happiness and confidence. That does not mean I think 80 percent of you are lost souls. If you go to this school, I love you already.

Perhaps that isn't reciprocated. It should be. For some, the feeling of confusion and disenchantment associated with the freshman year is terminal, dominating their days, occasionally overwhelming them. Engineering a feeling of community is the best solution. It might be the only cure for the freshman disease.

BOYD FERRIS is a senior in electrical engineering. You can send e-mail to Boyd at ferris@ksu.edu.

Writer's note: I would like to give my thanks to the historic writer Henry David Thoreau, who inspired me to write this column and whose words are used throughout.

"I heartily accept the motto, 'That government is best which governs least;' and government is at best but an expedient," particularly with traffic laws.

Some speed limit laws are based purely on pointless policy rather than practicality. Speed limits should act mostly as a guide and not as a law.

After reading this last sentence, some of you probably have images in your mind of people driving 100 mph in front of a school, tattooing the streets with school children and running over little old ladies faster than they can say "geriatrics." However, I think people in good conscience make the right decisions.

We know the speeds that are safe for others and for us. We have all driven on straight highways in good condition that have a speed limit of 65 mph, but most of us could easily go much faster than 80 mph and still be just as safe.

People are not going to drive inconsiderately to harm themselves and other people. Why should the government regulate decisions we should make with our consciences?

"Must the citizen ever for a moment, or in the least degree, resign his conscience to the legislator? Why has every man a conscience then? I think that we should be men first, and subjects afterward."

Of course, some people are born with a dysfunctional conscience. They probably enjoy running over people. However, the laws do not stop these pathologically screwed-up people, because the principle of people obeying laws is based on their good consciences.

I doubt we will ever get rid of speed limits. But we can all band together to try to avoid speeding tickets. We could bring back that grand driving tradition of flashing our headlights.

This plan is something we, as a community of almost law-abiding citizens, could do to avoid a useless expense. Do the right thing and warn somebody the next time you see a cop.

From my personal experience I can say speeding tickets do little to affect my driving. All they manage to do is to take money out of a very small bank account and make me late. I do not put much stock in radar detectors, but I trust my fellow man.

As long as we are on the subject of paying useless fines, let us discuss Parking Services, which has absolutely no scruples.

Sure, the employees are just doing their jobs, but how about having some common sense?

I have seen Parking Services people roam residence hall parking lots at about 1 a.m. Saturdays — most people consider this a Friday night — giving tickets to cars without a proper parking permit.

I can understand ticketing illegally parked cars at the residence halls if people are unable to get to their parking spaces.

However, people in the residence halls leave those places on Friday as if it were the black plague and do not come back until Sunday, leaving plenty of parking spaces.

Why do Parking Services employees waste their Friday nights handing out pointless tickets?

"The mass of people serve the government . . . thus, not as people mainly, but as machines. In most cases there is no free exercise whatever of the judgment or of the moral sense; but they put themselves on a level with wood and earth and stones; and wooden men can perhaps be manufactured that will serve the purpose as well. Such command no more respect than men of straw or a lump of dirt. They have the same sort of worth only as horses and dogs."

I doubt that Parking Services will change its ticketing policy. But we could develop a system to avoid the high ticket prices from Parking Services.

Here is the plan. If you see a Parking Services person giving you a ticket, then quickly run to the Parking Services person who is, after all, a student just like you, and reason with the person.

You do not want to pay the $15, and that Parking Services employee would like to make more money. So how about just giving the employee $5 on the spot. The Parking Services employee then makes the ticket go away. That way you save $10, the employee gets $5, and Parking Services does not see any of that money.

"All men recognize the right of revolution; that is, the right to refuse allegiance to, and to resist, the government, when its tyranny or its inefficiency are great and unendurable."

Fortunately, our governing institutions are not quite to this point, but we need changes.

Our institutions need more scruples and common sense. Traffic laws are perfect examples of this need.

Cuba accuses U.S. of biological attack at meeting on treaty

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GENEVA — The signatory nations of a biological weapons treaty heard Cuba's allegations Monday that the United States sprayed the island nation with a hungry insect that is devouring its crops.

In a Monday meeting of the 138 nations that signed the 1972 Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention, Cuba demanded an investigation into its claim that a U.S. State Department plane spewed a dangerous biological agent known as thrips palmi over Cuba last October. The United States dismisses the allegations as baseless.

"We want to have an investigation," said Deputy Foreign Minister Maria de los Angeles Flores, head of the Cuban delegation. Flores suggested that representatives of the treaty nations and a team of experts go to Cuba.

Cuba's charges provided a test for the accord, intended to ban germ warfare and signed when no large nations had a genuine fear of such an attack. As a result, it was left without any verification or enforcement provision.

Now negotiators are trying to figure out how to give it the powers that were built into the post-Cold War treaties to ban chemical weapons and test explosions of nuclear bombs.

Diplomats attending the day-long, closed-door talks said they had agreed to discuss the issues and return for a full session on Wednesday.

State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said the United States categorically denied Cuba's allegations.

"We're a state party to the convention, and we have no trouble with responding to allegations, although we regard the allegations as ridiculous and without merit," Rubin said.

The tiny insect, which "strikes and severely damages practically every crop," started showing up in potato plantations about two months after the flyover, Cuba says.

The United States said the insect already has been in the Caribbean for 12 years and must have spread to Cuba by natural means.

Donald A. Mahley, head of the U.S. delegation, said the nations should examine the State Department narcotics-eradication plane that he provided them. The plane flew across Cuba on Oct. 21, 1996.

The flight was cleared by Cuban authorities for a trip to Colombia. The United States says the plane was equipped to carry extra fuel, not crop-spraying material, and was only re-equipped for crop spraying after it got to Colombia.

"Let me emphasize that this overflight was approved by the Cuban government," Rubin said.

Rat gnaws through wire at Honduran hospital

▸ SHORT-CIRCUIT kills 6 people.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — A rat gnawed through a wire and short-circuited cables providing electricity to life-support machines at a state-run hospital Monday, killing six people.

Five men and a 2-year-old girl were breathing with the help of the machines when the rat caused the power outage at Catarino Rivas hospital in northern Honduras, hospital director Gustavo Zuniga said. The hospital is in San Pedro Sula, about 115 miles north of the capital Tegucigalpa.

"A rat infiltrated the machine room," Zuniga said. "The animal ... blacked out the hospital for 15 hours."

"The remains of the rodent were discovered in the machine room next to an electricity cable, which it had tried to eat to calm its hunger," he said.

Two hundred patients were taken to nearby hospitals, Zuniga said, adding that he expected electricity to be restored today.

Rare, endangered animals found poisoned in crates as police bust smuggling ring

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LIMA, Peru — Alerted by barking police dogs, authorities found 1,000 animals — some rare or endangered — packed in crates to be smuggled to Los Angeles. A third of the creatures were already dead.

Among the animals found were anacondas, water snakes, black crocodiles, black-headed lizards, iguanas and several rare species of frogs and turtles from Peru's Amazon jungle, police said.

The animals, worth an estimated $500,000, were packed in boxes marked ornamental fish. They were found Saturday in the warehouse of the Chilean air carrier Lan Chile at Lima's Jorge Chavez airport, said Col. Aurelio Herrera, chief of the ecological police.

About 350 of the animals were dead in their boxes, apparently poisoned by the sedative given them by the traffickers.

Markings on the boxes said they were going to a company called Tower Group in Los Angeles.

"The company Yolima, under the pretext of exporting fish, has been trafficking in animals, and we are investigating the size of this ring," Herrera said.

Police have contacted Interpol to coordinate an international investigation, he added.

Peru's varied geography — which has 84 ecological zones from jungle to desert — makes it one of the world's richest countries in flora and fauna and a growing source of trafficked animals.

Peru has 374 species of mammals, 1,710 species of birds, 298 species of reptiles and 324 species of amphibians.

Herrera said $5 billion in animals are smuggled each year in the world, but had no figure on the amount smuggled in Peru.

Smuggling animals is illegal in Peru, and carries penalties of four to eight years in prison.

PARKING

"We don't enforce the rules any differently after school starts, but it becomes more visible and parking is more of a problem as school starts. Obviously, there are a lot more people trying to find parking places," he said.

An RCPD spokeswoman said at least 30 cars were towed just last week, and that higher numbers were on the horizon.

This year, Raynor said he hoped higher parking fines that went into effect at the first of August will help curb the problem. Police officials received complaints that motorists weren't moving their vehicles even after they had been ticketed because they didn't mind the $4 fine.

Raynor said research into Manhattan's parking fines found the city had the lowest fines in the state — 40 percent lower than any other city. That prompted the department to recommend a hike in the fines. A municipal judge granted that request.

"We're still one of the lower cities in the state," Raynor said, "but hopefully people won't just ignore the tickets now. That's why we recommended the raise."

American climbers found dead on Switzerland's Matterhorn

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ZERMATT, Switzerland — The bodies of two mountain climbers, both believed to be Americans, were recovered this morning from Switzerland's famed Matterhorn.

U.S. officials in Bern confirmed that one of the climbers was Sandra Eggers, 39, of Boise, Idaho. The other was a 41-year-old man from Los Angeles whose name was not disclosed.

The two were roped to a third man, an unidentified Briton, climbing the east wall of the mountain Sunday morning when they were hit by a rock slide and fell.

Police said Eggers and the Los Angeles man were fatally injured in a 160-foot fall.

The British climber fell into a crevice, where he lay pinned until rescuers could free him and airlift him to a hospital, police said. He was treated and released.

The climbers were among five killed accidentally in the Swiss Alps during the weekend. The deaths brought the number of people killed in the Swiss Alps since June to 56.

Mary Ellen Koenig, spokeswoman for the U.S. Embassy in Bern, said two other people died this weekend in the Swiss Alps, and that another American died after an Aug. 14 fall on the Matterhorn.

William Hogue, 22, of Tennessee, was rushing to catch up with a guided group when he fell into a crevasse. He survived the fall, but was wearing summer clothing and died of exposure before he could be rescued, Koenig said.

NEANDERTHALENE HYGIENICS

'G.I Jane'

All I can say is that it's about time.

For being one of the highest-paid and most-recognized female leads today, Demi Moore hasn't been much of an investment lately.

With three consecutive flops of "The Scarlet Letter," "The Juror," and "Striptease," Hollywood figured producers just need to pour in excessive amounts of money and hype the films insanely. "Sorry, no time for plot," they say. "We're too busy convincing people that Demi will get naked so they pay us their $5.50."

Well, I have very bad news for those who found nothing wrong with Moore's past three tries at a box-office smash. Not only does "G.I. Jane" have a decent story, but I don't remember any lap dances. It is one of the better-thinking action films I can remember in at least a year.

These are the plot basics: Sen. Lillian DeHaven (played by Anne Bancroft) launches a campaign to promote full integration of women into the Navy, including combat situations.

The Navy reluctantly agrees on the basis that it finds a few female candidates, DeHaven picks one to enter SEAL training — basically Navy commandos — and if she passes, DeHaven gets her way.

Enter Moore as Lt. Jordan O'Neil, a tactical officer who needs operational experience to advance in rank. Convinced that O'Neil would be the most marketable choice, DeHaven offers her the option to enter the most intensive military training program known to humanity — and make history with the senator's cause.

So, for the next three months, O'Neil must not only try to fit in as an unwanted experiment, but also attempt to pass a program that already has a 60-percent dropout rate. To tell any more of the plot would spoil a good movie that's worth seeing even at inflated evening prices.

That's what surprised me. The whole film was well-balanced and all those involved pull their weight, from the writers to the cast to the director.

I guess most of the appeal "G.I. Jane" had for me was that it didn't carry a chip on its shoulder like I thought it would.

This is not "Citadel: The Movie."

But O'Neil is lucky. The SEAL trainees are much more professional when it comes down to it.

Yes, the main story is still about O'Neil overcoming the odds as an outsider and you feel sorry for her. But you don't feel much more sympathy for her than you do for the men trying to pass the program.

Director Ridley Scott's backdrop of pouring rain and bitter cold helps the viewer get an adequate feel for the hell these recruits are going through.

Viggo Mortensen, playing the master chief running the program, was one of the best surprises of the film. He comes across beautifully as a sadistic demon who gradually proves to have more depth than any of his students give him credit for.

Between performances from Moore and Mortenson, the movie would have already been an OK drama. What impressed me the most was that "G.I. Jane" was an action movie that reminded me more of "Top Gun" than "Working Girl." It was a risk for the producers to take but I think it will pay off as a blockbuster.

While I'd like to think I'm not sexist, I've never been overly interested in the dreaded so-called chick flicks. The difference is that unlike most social-message movies, this one makes its point without beating you into submission. They save that for the recruits.

Congratulations.

We survived the first day. Now is the time to find a routine and settle in. Please remember to include the Collegian in it.

More specifically, remember the arts and entertainment section. It's the page that holds up the back half of the paper. We supply you with Dilbert and the crossword puzzle. We also give you band reviews, concert updates and movie reviews.

We also do a few other things: We cover the fun stuff, the stuff that college legends are made of.

The road trips, the lost weekends in Aggieville, and the plays the theater majors pour their lives into.

We cover the quirky stuff, like the Garden of Eden, Oktoberfest and the Kansas State Forest — it's one cottonwood tree, look for the upcoming story.

Our goal is to give you a reason to get off your couches and go live life a little.

So to that end, please tell us what makes you tick. I know, I know, every editor and their brother has asked you to do just that, and they all really mean it. But arts and entertainment thrives on this.

We love hearing about Derby Days and bed races. Tell us about the best Frisbee-catching dog in City Park and the guy in your house who has every Farrah Fawcett poster ever made.

Basically, I want you to feel like the Collegian is going where you go and doing the things you do.

If we get sidetracked, kick us back on course.

I can make a couple promises for the semester: First, we will not move the crossword puzzle. I know how hard it is to do in class when the fold is in a bad spot.

I too have boring lecture classes, and I feel your pain.

Second, I will, whenever possible, send knowledgeable people to cover events.

Before I was an editor, I was a reader.

And I hated to read a review and discover that I knew more about the subject than the writer.

It benefits nobody and makes us look bad. I have been given very diverse writers with many interests who should come through with flying colors.

Now I'll make you an offer.

If you feel we are doing a bad job and think you can do it better, don't sit in Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon and complain about what a rag the Collegian is. Get off your butt and come write. The Collegian is open to everyone. Heck, your fees pay for this paper. Contribute already.

So those are the ground rules upon which this semester will be based. They require a little something from each of us, but I think they are fair.

With that in mind, let's kick off the new year with determination and joy. If you get bored and burned out, look to the Collegian — we'll tell you what to do.

Descriptive art of sportswriting takes ugly fall

VIEWPOINT

D. SCOTT FRITCHEN

SCOTT is a senior in mass communications. You can send e-mail to Scott at ds17477@ksu.edu.

The story tells all. The college sports columnist jumping from his roof, narrowly escaping his fate and responsibility for hollow words. The mounting pressure shouldered by sports writers in the second half of this century — the pressure to be read, the pressure to make a statement — erupts one spring night with an impact on the grass of Manhattan.

An impact that is heard around America, sending shockwaves throughout the sports journalism industry, and exemplifying what coaches, players, the public and the allegiance of sports journalists have known for years.

Sports journalism is in trouble.

It's an undeniable fact that slapped me in the face in 1993 while sitting in the Tampa Stadium locker room, foreshadowing the uproar in middle America that would claim a college columnist and a college basketball player four years later.

As Tampa Bay Buccaneer's head coach Sam Wyche towered above the seated group of wide-eyed student sports reporters, his voice amplifying throughout the locker room, the point of his lecture was undeniable: The descriptive art that once captured the essence of sport with a magical combination of charm and flair on the sports page has been replaced by a breed of irresponsible journalism that has spread like a communicable disease among most newspapers in America today.

"I know personally that sports journalism is everything from misleading to out-and-out lying to their public," Wyche said. "I read it daily. It's manipulation of the sport... Accuracy is an inconvenience that they work around."

What has happened to sports journalism?

People once read optimistic stories offering highlights of the win and the passion of sports. Now readers are subjected to daily stories that primarily focus on player contract disputes, violence and unrelated personal problems — dirt that collects on the front of many sports sections.

Optimism is replaced by pessimism.

Information is replaced by rumor.

The passion of stories that once inspired the reader to relive a special moment of a game is discarded for an array of hideous jokes.

Words are stronger than any athlete's ego. But words should never be misused.

I'm reminded of the late major-league baseball commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti's 1988 address, a plea to the American Society of Newspaper Editors. He waved a white flag for modern sports: "The sports section — whether the athletes like it or not, whether the sports writers like it or not — the sports section is the only place in the paper where there are any heroes — where a modern society finds authentically larger-than-life figures who can do something better than anyone in the world," he said.

"Millions of people, and not just children, will live in awe or have their lives changed by the image of the valiancy — by the supra-mundane aura — of these athletes."

But, sports writers are powerful people. The public is always made aware of what athletes or coaches have said when their quotes are printed in the newspaper. Coaches and athletes know the strength of words and fall daily to arrant press.

They fall daily to the words.

As the college columnist demonstrated on that spring night, this time it was the sports journalist's turn to take the fall.

Willie the Wildcat to get fresh face

JON BALMER
staff writer

Willie the Wildcat's touchdown push-ups and leading the crowd in screaming "K-S-U" are time-tested traditions. Willie himself is getting an all-new look.

On his 75th anniversary as school mascot, Willie will celebrate with a makeover. The popular mascot's head has been modified to resemble the Powercat logo that originated in 1990.

"It was a group decision to change Willie's look," Steve Kirkland, head cheerleading coach, said.

Although Willie has yet to make an appearance in his new gear, Kirkland said the design will feature more color and a more futuristic look.

Changing a long-standing image is not always tolerated by the public, but Kirkland believes fan response to the mascot's new appearance will be positive eventually.

"Some people won't be happy with the change, but I believe the majority will get used to the new Willie and grow to like it," Kirkland said.

With the initial unveiling of Willie tentatively planned for Fan Appreciation Day on Thursday, debate already has begun to form among students.

"Willie has been around for a long time and built a reputation around his look," Chris Grant, sophomore in architectural engineering, said. "I think it's best not to tamper with tradition."

Although the Wildcat has been K-State's mascot for many years, its look has changed numerous times before this year's adjustment.

In 1922, a live bobcat, dubbed Touchdown, became the university's first mascot. And in 1965, a student

THE DEMAND for this season's K-State football tickets, which went on sale at 8 a.m. Monday, created two-hour lines that lasted most of the day. Some students began waiting as early as 1 a.m. Monday.

ICATastrophe?

Prospective members wait in long lines to join ICAT

Long lines snaked around Ahearn Field House on Monday as hundreds of students waited to buy ICAT memberships.

Sheri St. Clair, senior in nutrition and exercise science and ICAT board director, said she knew of a group that began waiting at Ahearn at 1 a.m. Monday.

When the campus started to come alive at 8 a.m., the line stretched around Ahearn and flowed down Denison Avenue in front of the Natatorium.

"We anticipated a crowd," St. Clair said. "We didn't anticipate it to be quite this large."

St. Clair said ICAT opened between five and 10 minutes early to accommodate the waiting students.

"There were complaints because the line was so long, but there was not much we could do," she said.

Jeff Macoubrie, senior in business, said he and his friends started waiting in line at 7:45 a.m. and were there until 10:20 a.m. Macoubrie said he wasn't worried about getting his tickets, but was concerned about securing an ICAT membership, which provides reserved seating close to the field and a T-shirt for a $30 contribution.

When Macoubrie's turn came, his group opted for the reserved seating section above the ICAT section.

"With just General Admission tickets, you have to wait in line three hours early to find a good seat," Macoubrie said. "It's my senior year, and I don't have time to get in line at a game that early. The reserved seats are almost as good, and they didn't cost extra."

Many of the students in line got there early to pick up ICAT seating before the 2,000 available seats were sold out. As popular as ICAT has become, St. Clair said she didn't expect to see an increase of membership from the current 2,000.

"We increased the ICAT section from 1,800 tickets to 2,000 tickets last season," she said. "It'd cut the regular GA section if we increased it more. Plus, with increased numbers, you have to have increased security personnel. It's best to leave it at 2,000."

Many students missed early classes to secure ICAT seating, a fact St. Clair said the workers regretted.

"That wasn't what we wanted," St. Clair said. "There were people who took turns waiting in line for their friends who had classes."

Kenny Wentworth, junior in public relations, said the inconvenience of being bothered with football tickets wasn't necessary on the first day of classes.

"Students should have attending classes as their first priority, instead of getting football tickets," Wentworth said.

Separate lines for people still needing to purchase tickets — and people picking up tickets — confused students, Macoubrie said.

"There was no marking of which line was what," Macoubrie said. "People saw the shorter line and got in it."

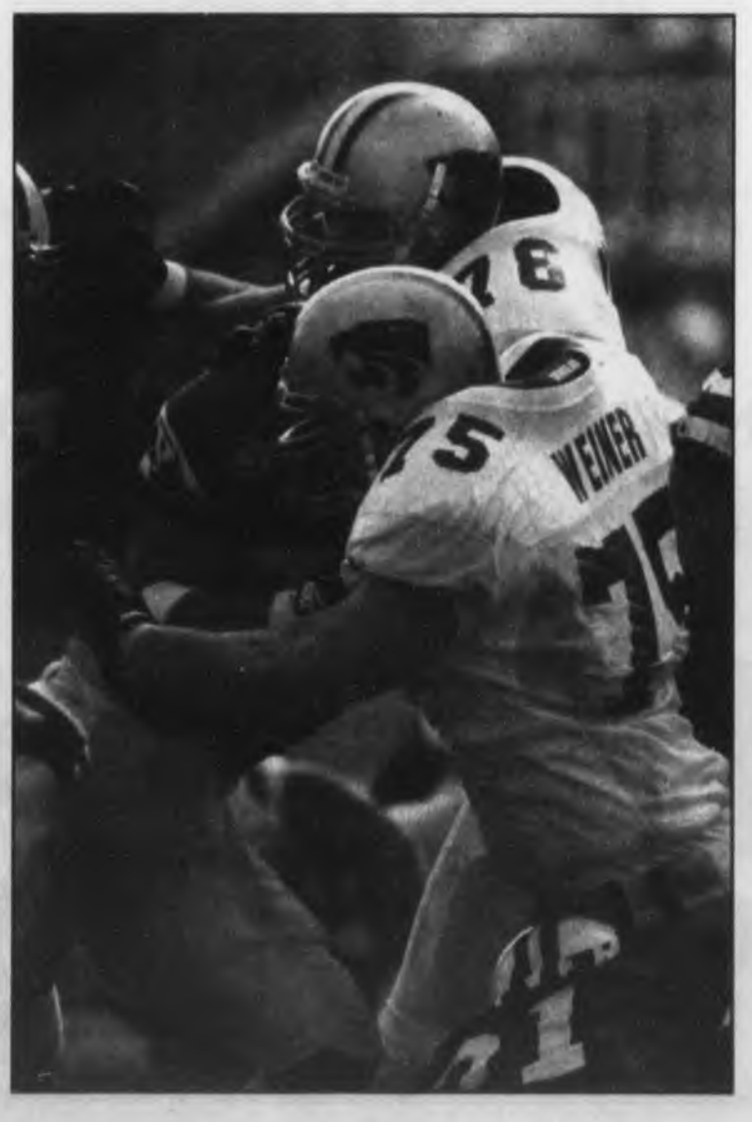
Later in the evening, the lines died down, and students still had the option to buy ICAT. Rob Mouser, freshman undecided, managed to buy the 1,628th ICAT ticket a little after 4 p.m.

"I stood in line for about five minutes at the most," Mouser said.

There were 150 ICAT memberships left for purchase at closing time on Monday. The benefits of ICAT make it worth the wait, Wentworth said.

"I like the fact that I don't have to come into the stadium two hours early," Wentworth said. "With ICAT I get into the stadium 30 minutes before kickoff."

However, Macoubrie said the pickup system needs to be revamped.



"A lot of people had to leave the line early to get to class, because no one wants to miss class on the first day," Macoubrie said. "It's just simpler to do it with fee payment, I think."

FOOTBALL '97: A TON OF OFFENSE

Offensive line one of K-State's biggest Bigger isn't always better.

But in the case of the 1997 Wildcat offensive line, the probable starting interior line weighs in at an average of 308 pounds. This spells success for the line and the quarterback who wins the race.

In the middle, senior Kendyl Jacox will move from right guard to center to replace NFL rookie Jason Johnson. Johnson started every game last season, and Jacox hasn't seen action at the position since 1995, when Johnson was injured.

Now, Jacox won't be on the field in any role, at least for four to five weeks. He injured his knee last season and is recovering from arthroscopic surgery. Junior left guard Jeremy Martin said he isn't worried.

Martin said Jacox played a lot of center two years ago and got the calls.

"But it'll take some time to work back into getting the calls," Martin said. "He'll be fine."

Martin started four games last season after Jacox was injured at Texas A&M. In the spring, he earned the title of Football-Lifter-of-the-Year, and he is slated to replace Ross Greenwood at left guard this fall.

Martin said the switch made no difference to him.

"Whether I play left or right doesn't matter," Martin said. "Throwing tackle into the mix was kind of difficult because they're so much different."

The depth of the line has been a question, because the probable starters are the only players with starting experience. Martin said the depth chart is deceiving.

"We're deep at guard and center," Martin said. "You look at the depth chart and think we're thin at tackle, but we're fine. We have some young guys there and some guys at guard who can move to tackle."

Tackles Ryan Young and Todd Weiner anchored K-State's line last season. Both started every game last season and are co-captains of the 1997 team.

"Todd and Ryan are the bookends for us and are very important," Martin said, adding their size as a tremendous asset.

Martin said Young is huge, and he works hard.

"He has all the attributes to be a great player. And he runs pretty well for being 330 pounds," Martin said. "If Todd can maintain his weight, he's a prototypical NFL player because he weighs 300 pounds now and can run a 5.1."

Young, the team's largest player at 6-foot-6, 330 pounds, had high praise for fellow bookend Weiner.

"To me, he should be an All-American," Young said. "He works so hard. He's not vocal. He's more like, watch me, follow me, something like a role leader."

Although the depth chart lists Jacox, Weiner, Martin and Young as probable starters, Martin said he knows anything can happen.

"I think everybody feels this year they have to go out and compete, and they don't know what's going to happen," Martin said. "I can't say I'm going to start. I hope I am, but you never know. We're going to put the best 11 on the field and start from there."

Stockholm's Olympics advocates scramble after bombing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — The leaders of Stockholm's bid for the 2004 Olympics scrambled Monday to rescue the city's chances after a second bomb attack on a stadium connected with the bid.

A predawn bomb rocked the New Ullevi Stadium in Goeteborg, 250 miles southwest of Stockholm, on Monday. The stadium, Sweden's largest, would be used for soccer if Stockholm's proposal wins the International Olympic Committee's vote on Sept. 5.

On Aug. 8, a bomb damaged Stockholm's old Olympic Stadium, where the games were originally played in 1912. It also is included in the 2004 proposal.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the blast in Goeteborg, but a letter claimed the Stockholm bomb was set by a shadowy group called We Who Built Sweden.

That letter contended that having the Olympics in Sweden would be a waste of public money.

No one was injured in either of the bombings or in a series of arson fires at tennis halls, ice arenas and sports grounds around Stockholm since May. But the attacks are seen as seriously undermining Olympic committee members' confidence in Stockholm.

A spokeswoman for the Olympic committee in Lausanne, Switzerland, did not return calls asking for comment.

Nonetheless, bid committee chairman Olof Stenhammar said many committee members "responded with both sympathy and encouragement" after Monday's bomb.

"Their expressions of support — along with the outpouring of support we continue to receive from the people of Stockholm and Sweden — have helped solidify our determination to stand firmly in the tradition of courage against international terrorism established long ago by the Olympic movement," he said in a prepared statement. "All of us have trouble believing that this professional sabotage started in Sweden."

In fact, low public support for the bid has been seen as its main weak point. Observers believe Stockholm has only a minimal chance in the competition with Rome; Athens, Greece; Buenos Aires; and Cape Town, South Africa.

A poll taken earlier this month showed that only 49 percent of Swedes support having the Olympics in Stockholm. Bid advocates said the poll showed a positive turn because the level of overt opposition had declined.

The bomb went off at 2 a.m. at an entrance to the stadium. The stadium, with a capacity of 45,000, was the site of the 1995 Track and Field World Championships.

Officials announced Monday that security was being increased at many sports facilities around the country.

A Swedish news agency said police in Goeteborg received several bomb threats after the stadium blast, including one that prompted them to evacuate people out of a covered shopping area in the city center.

decked out in a Wildcat costume became K-State's first Willie.

One student noted these changes when summing up his approval of the mascot's new looks.

"He represents the university, and in doing so, also represents the changing ways of K-State," Ryan Fowler, sophomore in chemistry, said. "A more modern look was due."

Debate about the issue will continue long after Willie celebrates his 75th anniversary as K-State's mascot, and adjusting to the new Powercat-like creature might take time.

However, Doug Haberstroh, junior in engineering, said it could be worse.

"As long as Willie doesn't look like the guy from Prodigy, I'll be happy," Haberstroh said.

Jewelry company investigated for possible investment scheme

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — A jewelry company used photos of its executives posing with President Clinton to help defraud 15,000 investors of almost $40 million in a pyramid scheme using cheap necklace kits, investigators say.

The executives fled overseas before the collapse of the fraud, one of the costliest credit card scams in U.S. history, authorities said.

Losses for banks and financial service institutions could run higher than $20 million after many investors tried to issue charge-backs to stop credit card payment to Unique Gems International Corp.

A judge shut down the company in March after authorities uncovered the illegal so-called Ponzi scheme.

In such a fraud, early investors are paid off — not through legitimate profits, but with money coming in from more recent investors. Some investors lost their homes and savings.

Richard Sharpstein, attorney for Unique Gems President Enrique Pirela, said the company was not a pyramid scheme, but was hurt by the premature enforcement by Florida's attorney general.

"We say Unique Gems was a well-intentioned business, not a fraud," Sharpstein said Monday. "The attorney general jumped in far too quickly to shut it down."

Lewis B. Freeman, a court-appointed investigator, said about 30 Unique Gems executives and workers attended a Democratic National Committee fund-raiser at the Biltmore Hotel in Coral Gables last fall, buying their seats to the Miami dinner with $85,000 that was contributed to the DNC by others. Investigators were trying to determine whether such violations by third parties might be a violation of federal law.

During the event, Freeman said, the executives posed for photos with Clinton, and later reproduced the pictures in newsletters mailed out to potential investors.

The fliers, showing a smiling Clinton with a company executive said, "The company has been honored by President Clinton for its role in helping many people with real opportunities to earn a well above-average income."

Attorney General Stovall strengthens position against tobacco companies

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Carla Stovall doesn't blink when she says the national settlement between the states and tobacco companies would provide Kansas with the best deal it could hope for.

She'll also look you straight in the eye and say, "You bet," when asked if Kansas is prepared to press its lawsuit to the limit if the agreement fails to win congressional approval.

Criticism by health advocacy groups — that the settlement lets big tobacco off too easily, or it doesn't give the Food and Drug Administration enough regulatory power of tobacco, or it won't really stop people from smoking — leave her unimpressed.

"If Congress will approve this settlement, we can get so much more out of the tobacco companies than we can ever get in court in Kansas," she said in an interview.

"We can do things in the settlement that a judge could never order."

Attorneys general of the states involved in lawsuits against the tobacco giants — led by RJR Nabisco and Philip Morris — signed off on the proposed settlement last June.

They had hoped President Clinton would give his blessing to the deal and Congress would approve it before its August recess. They now are hoping for approval by Thanksgiving.

While Washington dawdles with the settlement, Mississippi has settled its lawsuit on its own, and Florida announced its own settlement early today. Minnesota is next in line, with a trial scheduled for January. Kansas could get its case to trial by next summer.

Kansas was the 11th state to file a lawsuit, in August 1996. Now 40 states have filed suits.

As with other states, Kansas seeks recovery of Medicaid payments it has made over the years for citizens treated for smoking-related illnesses. It also wants court-ordered restrictions on tobacco company advertising and product availability — especially the focus on juvenile smokers.

Kansas, which stands to get an estimated $2 billion during 25 years from the national settlement if it goes through, asked for no set amount in its lawsuit, but the state has been making Medicaid payments for 31 years. Stovall said the state has been spending about $100 million a year on Medicaid.

Stovall said there is no doubt the state will proceed with its lawsuit in Shawnee County District Court if the national settlement fails to gain approval.

She was in court Friday for arguments on the state's effort to pry open more tobacco industry documents in the discovery phase of the case.

The companies have moved to dismiss the state's suit, but Judge Fred Jackson is waiting to see what happens with the settlement before he rules on that motion. If it is approved, the state will withdraw its lawsuit.

"We're still fighting a lawsuit, with every intention of it going to trial," Stovall said.

She was watching the Florida trial closely because, she said, the outcomes of lawsuits in other states will affect how each side structures its trial strategy here.

Despite her confidence in the settlement, Stovall admitted to concerns about the delay in getting it approved.

Under its main provisions, the tobacco companies would pay $368.5 billion during 25 years to reimburse the states for their Medicaid costs and provide money for anti-smoking educational programs and health insurance for children. It also sets restrictions on marketing, advertising and access to tobacco, and requires monitoring to ensure a reduction in underage smoking.

"There is strong support on the Senate side," the attorney general said of the prospects in Congress. "The House is waiting, we understand, to see what the White House does.

"The important thing at present is to be sure members of Congress have as much information about the settlement as possible ... and what it does for Kansas."

She said she is encouraged by the response of the Kansas delegation, and the support of Gov. Bill Graves, who has written Clinton urging him to recommend any changes he feels are important, so the suit can proceed.

Public health professionals in Kansas are supportive of the settlement, Stovall said.

"I'm enthused with the willingness of our delegation to talk about the issues and to understand them fully," Stovall said.

Anti-cigarette groups complain about Winston ads

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Public health groups asked the Federal Trade Commission to investigate R.J. Reynolds' new advertising campaign for its additive-free Winston cigarettes, saying the ads imply this brand is safer to smoke.

"We demand evidence to substantiate the claim that these cigarettes are safer than other cigarettes," said John Garrison, chief executive of the American Lung Association.

RJR recently reformulated its Winston brand to remove all additives, saying it makes the cigarettes with just tobacco and water. The ads push the brand with such slogans as "no additives, no bull" and "yours have additives — new Winstons don't."

Some ingredients added to cigarettes are listed as carcinogens, but the Lung Association said removing the additives doesn't affect the nicotine that makes cigarettes addictive or the tar that is largely responsible for lung cancer.

"Smokers will grab for anything they think might be less harmful, and Reynolds has an obligation to its customers to prove these new Winstons are any less dangerous than other cigarettes," Garrison said.

The American Lung Association, American Cancer Society and American Heart Association filed the petition with the FTC Friday.

"We give all petitions serious consideration, and particularly close scrutiny when there are alleged safety issues involved," FTC spokeswoman Bonnie Jansen said.

RJR had no comment.

Better hard-rock scene draws Back Porch Mary to Texas

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DIGHTON, Kan. — Out of the same soil that bore traditions of farming, hard work and strong values has come one of the few hard rock bands to venture from the wheat and milo fields of western Kansas.

Jeremie Krehbiel puts down the drumsticks and microphone during the week to help his father with the farm and his grandfather with house-building.

"I have always had to help my dad out with harvest," he said.

But on weekends, Krehbiel travels to Manhattan and other Kansas cities to play drums for Back Porch Mary, a hard rock band that has released its first compact disc, "Gather," produced under the recording label Gemini 21 out of New York City.

The CD cover features the three members, all 23 years old, sitting in the middle of a field, which is legitimate because two of the three members come from farming backgrounds. All three are from Kansas.

Back Porch Mary formed while Krehbiel was a student at Fort Hays State University from 1992 to 1994.

He joined another farmer's son, guitarist Mike Krug from Russell, to form the band. They were joined by a bass player and a rhythm guitarist.

But Fort Hays didn't prove the most fertile place to raise a successful band. Krug moved on to K-State, where Krehbiel joined him in 1994.

A couple bass players later, the band found Chris Henrie of Halstead to finish off their band.

Krehbiel's roots aren't dominated entirely by farming. His father comes from a family of singers, he said, while Krehbiel's mother plays piano. He also saw his aunt tour in a five-woman rock band and eventually play the Las Vegas strip in a two-person show.

Krehbiel said Back Porch Mary is the first hard rock band recorded by Gemini, which has mostly focused on solo classical and jazz musicians.

The band found a recording company through a network of friends, connections and coincidences.

"It's one of those friend of a friend of a friend things," Krehbiel said.

With the release of the first CD, the days of returning to help his father's harvests of wheat, milo and sunflowers are waning.

Krehbiel and the band are cutting themselves loose from their Kansas roots and moving on to Austin, Texas, in October, where the hard rock culture scene is stronger. He estimated 20-30 hard rock venues are in Austin.

"It's a much better market down there," he said.

Krehbiel said his father doesn't mind the move or the decision to pursue his ambitions in hard rock.

"He's all right with that," Krehbiel said. "He's got some good help around here."

Despite performances two to three times a week in Lawrence, Manhattan and other towns, the chances of making it in Kansas aren't very good.

"Slim to none," Krehbiel said. "We even had a tough time in Hays."

But he doesn't mean anything personal against his fellow Kansans.

"I'm not slamming Kansas or anything. There's just not enough people out here," he said.

With the better pickings in Austin, Krehbiel hopes to build a base of loyal followers for at least a year before branching out onto the national scene.

"We want it to happen pretty slow. We want to build a fan base at least in the Midwest before anything else happens," he said.

Krehbiel said he's been a little naive in some dealings in the music business, where he and the band have been endlessly strung along.

"It's kind of tough. I'm kind of a trusting fool," he said.

But when Krehbiel decides to finish his music career, he can foresee returning to his roots — the values, the trust and concern for others in the community.

"We've been in a lot of cities," he said. "And I always thought city people had something over the small-town people. But I don't think they really do."

Teachers, staff not aptly punished for sexual misconduct at school

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A published report says teachers and staff convicted or accused of sexual misconduct often keep their jobs in the Kansas City public schools, or are punished so lightly that they are able to find work in another district.

A three-month probe by The Kansas City Star found numerous cases in which teachers and staff molested or sexually harassed students. One case involved leaving pornographic computer disks in a classroom, the newspaper reported in a copyrighted story in Sunday's edition.

Several staff members suffered little if any penalty for the misconduct, the Star said. Employees were often able to avoid prosecution or losing their teaching certificates because of the lack of communication between schools, police, prosecutors and state education departments.

"It's regrettable that it's happened," said Superintendent Henry Williams, who was hired in July 1996, after many of the cases arose.

"We should not allow this school district that spends as much money as it does on educational programming and on teachers to allow these kinds of things to fall through the cracks."

Staff turnover has inhibited reforms, Williams said. He said he's trying to improve district rules to ensure problem teachers are weeded out.

Among some of the cases:

A fifth-grade teacher did not contest a felony sodomy charge in 1995 accusing him of taking a boy home, showing him a pornographic video and performing oral sex. Though he was ordered by a court to attend sexual abuse counseling and stop teaching during his four-year probation, the district only moved the man to an office job at the same salary. Only after the Star began its investigation did the district move to fire him.

Another teacher stayed on the district's payroll for more than a year after Westport Middle School students found pornographic computer disks in the classroom in 1995. After leaving the district, the man took a job in a neighboring school system. He said the Kansas City district never proved wrongdoing.

At least eight teachers accused of sexual misconduct with students — and at least six others accused of nonsexual offenses — were suspended with pay or moved to another building, sometimes over the objections of principals and district lawyers, the Star said.

Blackwell Sanders, a district law firm, contested putting these teachers back in the classroom, said Robert Jones, who worked with displaced teacher cases before leaving the district last November on a medical leave. "The district would say, 'Let's sneak them in someplace else.' They were afraid they would be sued," Jones said.

Even when the district got rid of a teacher, the process was lengthy. Records say the district continued for months to pay some teachers who had acknowledged wrongdoing before they quit or were let go.

Getting rid of bad teachers and staff is also slowed by union rules that allow teachers to appeal their punishments all the way to the school board and to the courts. Sometimes, the union represents even members accused of the most blatant offenses, the Star said.

One such example was Darryl Shaw, a Van Horn High School security guard, who was fired after accusations that he had consensual sex with a 15-year-old in his school office minutes after classes let out for winter break in 1994.

A union lawyer protested the dismissal and tried to win Shaw his job back, though the Missouri Division of Family Services found probable cause that the action occurred.

Shaw has denied wrongdoing, insisting the student made up the story. He said the union dropped his case after he unsuccessfully sought to overturn the Division of Family Services ruling. Authorities declined to file charges against Shaw.

Critics say the union goes too far in defending staff, but union officials say they're only providing defense to which its members are entitled. The union often talks problem teachers into retiring, said union lawyer Fred Wickham.

The Star said Missouri and Kansas lag behind much of the nation in investigating teachers' backgrounds and revoking certification for those involved in sexual and other misconduct.

Unlike most states, Missouri and Kansas don't require schools or courts to report teacher impropriety to the state. Both states rely instead on school officials, parents, concerned citizens and the media to report wrongdoings.

Many other states require fingerprinting or the reporting to proper state authorities of any allegations or charges of and convictions for immoral conduct.

Kansas City's public schools conduct background checks before hiring applicants. But such checks can miss criminal violations because court records in the United States aren't centralized and some sentences are suspended. Such checks also are unable to spot teachers who commit crimes after they're hired.

Some have suggested that fingerprinting teachers and staff could help identify convictions among job applicants and alert schools when employees are charged with crimes.

But lawmakers are reluctant, out of fear of violating the rights of innocent staffers.

"It carries in some quarters the connotation of Big Brother trying to keep track of everybody," said Bob Bartman, Missouri's education commissioner.

Hudson Foods to sell Nebraska beef plant if it can't replace Burger King as customer

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Hudson Foods Inc. said Monday it will sell a Nebraska hamburger plant linked to an E. coli outbreak if it can't replace Burger King as its main ground beef customer.

The nation's second-largest fast-food chain said this weekend it would stop buying Hudson meat even though there was no indication it received tainted meat.

Burger King buys more than half the plant's beef. Hudson opened the Columbus, Neb., plant in 1995 to process beef for the chain.

Wal-Mart said Monday it was committed to buying ground beef from the plant. Boston Market has also pledged to buy more meat, but the $16 million plant needs a bigger buyer, said Tom Reynolds, Hudson's treasurer.

An outbreak of possible E. coli contamination was reported in Colorado in mid-August and traced to the Columbus plant.

Hudson said it appears the contamination started with one of its suppliers, not inside the plant.

The company recalled 20,000 pounds of beef Aug. 12. A week later, the recall reached 25 million — the nation's largest ever. E. coli is a potentially deadly bacteria that can cause bloody diarrhea and dehydration.

The recall forced about 1,650 Burger Kings in 28 states — a quarter of the chain's U.S. restaurants — to serve only chicken, ham and fish, even BLT's, for a day or two.

Burger King began advertising in newspapers around the country Monday in an attempt to assure customers that its beef is safe.

Before being shut down by the U.S. Department of Agriculture last week, the Hudson plant was processing between 2 million and 2.5 million pounds of ground beef a week, Reynolds said.

Robert Udowitz, a Hudson spokesman in Washington, D.C., said the company wants its 230 Columbus employees to keep their jobs, and selling the plant would be one way to ensure that.

Army sexual misconduct hearing ends

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The six women who brought sexual misconduct allegations against the Army's top enlisted man were described Monday by prosecutors as heroes and attacked by the defense as opportunists.

"Don't let them down," lead prosecutor Lt. Col. Michael Child said of the women, as he urged that Sgt. Maj. of the Army Gene McKinney be ordered to stand trial.

But defense lawyer Lt. Col. James Gerstenlauer said McKinney is an outstanding soldier who has served this country proudly and is confronted by baseless allegations.

Charles Gittins, McKinney's civilian defense lawyer, said his client didn't get to be the Army's top enlisted man "because he's a lech. To become sergeant major of the Army he had to undergo an extensive background check."

To Child, McKinney was a manipulative man using his powerful position to prey on vulnerable women.

"He used even the death of his son as part of this manipulation," the prosecutor said. McKinney's son was killed in an automobile accident.

The Fort McNair hearing ended with both sides summing up their cases. Now a hearing officer must consider whether McKinney should be court-martialed or can return to his Pentagon post.

Col. Robert Jarvis, the presiding officer, has 15 days to make his recommendation. But given the length of the hearing, which began two months ago and included testimony from more than 30 witnesses, Jarvis could get an extension. The transcript runs thousands of pages.

Jarvis' recommendation would go to Col. Owen Powell, the next senior officer in the chain of command. The final decision on whether the case should go forward would be made by Maj. Gen. Robert F. Foley, commander of the Military District of Washington.

Gittins has said repeatedly that he expects the Army to order McKinney to stand trial on sexual misconduct charges.

Jarvis also can recommend revising the charges, and Child urged him to add rape to the list.

The first of the women to testify against McKinney, Sgt. Christine Roy, said she reluctantly had sex with McKinney when she was nearly eight months pregnant. The prosecutor said that incident amounted to rape.

Gerstenlauer said the recommendation by Child was offensive. He said there was no credible evidence to corroborate the charges by Roy.

If a court martial is ordered, Gittins has said he will file a motion saying McKinney is a victim of discrimination. To support that claim he said he will offer evidence that high-ranking white officers — colonels and generals — were allowed to quietly retire after doing the same things McKinney is accused of.

McKinney is the first black sergeant major of the Army.

McKinney, who has served in the Army for nearly 30 years, has asked to be allowed to retire. Gerstenlauer seemed to appeal to the Army to take

Book says richer students choosing public schools over private colleges

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. PAUL, Minn. — More affluent students — or maybe their price-conscious parents — are abandoning private colleges in favor of their cheaper, public counterparts, researchers said.

The big, brand-name schools such as Harvard and Princeton still pack in the well-to-do. But smaller, four-year private liberal arts schools are increasingly losing their full-paying customers to public universities, according to "The Student Aid Game," a book to be published in November.

Its authors said private colleges will adapt, but poorer students at public schools might not fare as well.

"The idea was always that you would create these great institutions that would then be accessible to anybody who had the motivation and talent to go. That kind of fundamental promise of higher education is really being thrown into question," said co-author Michael McPherson, president of the private Macalester College in St. Paul.

McPherson and co-author Morton Schapiro found that about 38 percent of college freshmen from the richest families enrolled in public institutions in 1994, compared with 31 percent in 1980. The richest families were those making more than $200,000 a year.

For upper-middle-income families — those who earned between $100,000 and $200,000 — freshman enrollment at public schools rose to 48 percent in 1994 from 42 percent in 1980, the authors found.

Part of the draw of public schools is the cheaper cost. Consumers also are making less of a distinction in the relative quality of public and private educations, partly because of the acceptance of well-publicized best-buy guides, McPherson said.

Money magazine's annual college ratings due out in September, for example, rank the University of Florida 80 notches above Dartmouth as a best buy.

But as more affluent families flock toward public universities, states end up subsidizing wealthier students. On average, a state subsidizes each student by about $12,000 a year, no matter how much their parents earn.

David and Linda Mona, an Edina, Minn., couple who own a public relations firm and several other businesses, let their two sons decide whether to go to public or private schools.

Kirk Mona chose the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis, while his older brother, Erik, chose Emerson College, a private school in Boston that cost $15,000 more a year.

"We wanted to work with the kids to make sure that they got what they wanted out of a college education," David Mona said.

Price was a consideration, the Monas said, but the biggest factor was what the schools offered for majors. Erik, who graduated last year, wanted an emphasis on creative writing and publishing. Kirk, entering his junior year this fall, wanted to major in social environmental education.

Private colleges will be able to adapt to fewer admissions by either lowering tuition or increasing course offerings, said Schapiro, an economist at the University of Southern California.

But as wealthier students take up seats and tuition rates go up, many poorer students are heading to cheaper community colleges where their chances of moving on to graduate with a four-year degree drop significantly, he said.

Kansas prepares for death penalty

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Kansas is confronting a task it hasn't faced in 30 years — putting a man on death row.

A Wyandotte County jury recommended Aug. 5 that Gary Kleypas die by lethal injection for killing 20-year-old Pittsburg State University student Carrie Williams. That decision gave the state its first would-be death row inmate in 30 years.

Kleypas is set to be formally sentenced Oct. 31.

If a judge confirms the jury's recommendation, Kleypas would be sent to the state prison at El Dorado, which doesn't have a special area designated for death -row inmates. But Kleypas would be locked in his cell 23 hours a day, officials said.

The state must also build a new execution facility, either at Lansing or another prison. The tentative plan is to hold condemned inmates in one location and execute them in another.

Charles McAtee, who served as prison director in Lansing between 1965 and 1969, agrees with the plan.

"If you've got any kind of human emotion, there's a natural tendency to become involved with these people," said McAtee, who supervised the state's last executions before capital punishment was abolished.

Richard Hickock and Perry Smith were executed April 14, 1965, and George York and James Latham were killed June 22 of the same year. Another prisoner was awaiting execution when the U.S. Supreme Court declared the law unconstitutional.

Hickock and Smith were drifters who murdered the Herb Clutter family of Holcomb in November 1959, killings later immortalized in Truman Capote's best-selling book "In Cold Blood."

Latham and York were absent without leave soldiers executed for the killing of a Union Pacific railroad engineer in Russell County.

On their appointed days, the condemned prisoners were driven from the gray stone Segregation and Isolation building, down a road and inside a warehouse.

The prisoners were led from the car and read an execution order one at a time before being escorted up 13 steps to the gallows.

The condemned were moved atop a trap door and nooses were placed around their necks.

After capital punishment was outlawed, the gallows was dismantled and donated to the Kansas State Historical Society, where it remains in storage.

McAtee said he believes in capital punishment, but he said death-row inmates should be kept separate to ease the strain on corrections staff.

"I still believe those men should have gone to the gallows, as they did," he said. "But after nearly five years of interaction, I came to see them as individual human beings."

Kansas has executed two dozen men, with another six executed in the state by federal authorities.

The military conducted the state's first execution July 11, 1862, when it hanged Pvt. John Bell at Iola. The state first hanged an inmate in February 1863.

Though records aren't complete, more than 200 people also are thought to have been lynched in Kansas, more than 100 of those in the 1860s and 1870s and about 90 between 1870 and 1932. Most of the people were accused of horse theft or murder.

DNC spokesman Steve Langdon said the Democrats have no record of contributions from Unique Gems and "to the best of our ability, we'll be assisting the receiver (Freeman) to determine whose names are connected with the donations. The DNC will refund the appropriate amount of money."

Will Dwyer, spokesman for the House Government Reform and Oversight Committee, said the information about the Unique Gems' contributions is being circulated among committee members who have focused their investigation on improper contributions to the political parties and to Clinton.

"I don't know that this has come up before," Dwyer said Monday. "If this has substantial interest, they would look into it."

Sharpstein said the use of Clinton's photo on brochures was ill-advised, but has been blown out of proportion.

Freeman said the DNC's involvement generated interest in the investigation, but the bigger story is about people coming into the country, stealing the money and going to Spain to be insulated.

Pirela was in Venezuela, while the three men who masterminded the scheme, including Swedish national Harry Abonde, were believed to be in Spain, authorities say.

Sharpstein said Pirela left the country because people were attacking him and his car after the attorney general shut down the company. No criminal charges have been filed, although the state attorney's office has been considering the case.

Early investors would give the company $3,000 for a kit worth about $100 to make necklaces out of beads and thread, and return them to Unique Gems for up to $4,800 per kit.

Those who charged the initial investment to credit cards could pay back the charge card and make $1,800 without spending a dime. Some invested more than $100,000 for the quick profits that were available at first.

that route when he said, "Is there a better way to handle this? Is there an administrative way to handle this?"

In their summations, the lawyers on both sides offered starkly different views of the accused and his accusers.

Child said the six women who came forward to say McKinney had made improper sexual advances to them knew they would face harsh examination of their personal lives.

"They knew exactly what they had to expect if they came forward and they came forward anyway," he said.

"They're heroes, they saw wrong and they were willing to report it."

"The government would have you believe women don't make false allegations," said Gittins, who described McKinney's accusers as a group of women opportunists.

Gittins and McKinney's two military lawyers questioned the accusers' stories.

"Baseless allegations like these, motivated by the basest of motives, only destroy discipline, breed timid supervisors and encourage contempt for the system," said Gerstenlauer.

Privilege Fee allocation budget

The main campus Privilege Fee budget for the 1998 fiscal year is $8,383,845, up $297,819 from the 1997 fiscal year budget. In 1997, it was $8,086,026.

Fees fund myriad of campus activities, services

STORY BY CLAUDETTE RILEY

This is the first part of a weekly series exploring the inner workings of student fees and how those fees affect the organizations involved. Look for more stories to appear every Wednesday for the rest of the semester.
Interested in giving feedback? E-mail the Collegian at collegn@ksu.edu or leave messages on the message board at collegian.ksu.edu.

Nearly one-fourth of the money students pay to attend K-State each semester are privilege fees assessed to provide services and activities. However, only a handful of students participate in deciding how the money is spent.

Although the Privilege Fee is paid by every student, few are involved in deciding fee levels or evaluating how the more than $8.3 million of student-generated fees are allocated.

These fees, $251 per semester for each full-time student, provide access to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, on-campus health care, a daily campus newspaper and the K-State Student Union.

Funds also provide for Union Program Council activities, a campus radio station and the expansion of Farrell Library, in addition to other services.

The fees are reviewed by Student Senate on a two-year cycle. During this 1997-98 Senate term, 52 percent of the fees will be reviewed and set.

Privilege fees up for review this year include Student Health, Student Publications Inc., Fine Arts, Bramlage Repair and Maintenance Reserve, Union Program Council, and Athletics.

Bill Muir, faculty representative to Senate, said students who complain about how much they pay should get involved during this important fee review season.

"I don't think people know the components of the $251, much less what it goes to pay for," Muir said.

"You have to decide what services you want to fund and at what level. Student fees are getting to be a big part of what we are paying and need to know why."

President Jon Wefald gave Senate the power to review and set all campus privilege fees. In 11 years, Wefald has never vetoed one of their decisions.

"The power that the president of the university has given student government is just absolutely unprecedented," Muir said.

"Some administrators would argue that too much power has been vested, but through my association with them, they take that power and run with it."

Thomas Schellhardt, associate vice president for administration and finance, said the administration supports student empowerment, especially in determining fee levels.

"We are certainly here to help, but student privilege fees impact the students and are used to establish, create or maintain activities that benefit students," Schellhardt said.

"Students and student government should be the ones to say yea or nay to privilege fee increases."

Senate, in turn, relies heavily on the research and recommendation of the Privilege Fee Committee.

"The full body usually goes by what they say because they are the ones who get the most educated and make hopefully reasonable recommendations," Muir said.

"Committee work is where it's at. It isn't in the final voting. By then it's too damn late."

The number of Privilege Fee Committee members will be set during Thursday night's Senate meeting. Aaron

Privilege Fee Committee responsible for allocating funds

STORY BY NATE JENKINS AND CLAUDETTE RILEY

Otto

▶ Get involved. The Privilege Fee Committee has open meetings Mondays nights at 8 in the Office of Student Activities and Services. OSAS is on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union.

The Privilege Fee Committee, which is in charge of recommending the student fees that pay for many of the services offered on campus, will have its hands full this year.

Fee allocations for each department are reviewed in two-year cycles. Those fees up for review by the committee this year total more than half of the overall privilege fee budget, compared to the 25 percent looked at last year.

Lafene Health Center, which normally receives about 35 percent of the student fee budget, will have its allocation amount examined this year along with another main benefactor of the fee, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. Last year, Lafene received $2.8 million, or 35 percent of all student fee money, and the athletic department got about $700,000, or 7 percent.

Other programs up for review this year are: Student Publications Inc, Fine Arts, Bramlage Repair and Maintenance Reserve, and the K-State Union's Special Programs.

The committee hopes to have a budget resolution passed by the middle of September and then move ahead with addressing individual budgets and passing their recommendations on to the Student Senate. Senate has the power to amend the recommendation before it is ultimately passed on to the Kansas Board of Regents for final approval.

Aaron Otto, chairman of the Privilege Fee Committee, said hashing out fee recommendations to give to Senate should prove interesting.

"We have a full spectrum of people on the committee," he said. "There are a couple of conservatives likely to be against any fee increase and a liberal as well. I'm excited about it."

To sit on the committee, senators presented applications and were appointed by Senate Chair Jeff Dougan. Three members are students-at-large with no connection to student government, two other members appointed interns that haven't been picked yet, and, finally, the chairman, Otto.

"It's going to be a very challenging year. Don't ever let me lead you to believe it's going to be easy. We have a really tough balancing act, but I don't think we have any absolute 'We have to do that' mentalities," Otto said.

"More of the committee's role is to be an advocate and an educator. The better we do that, the smoother the process goes," Otto said.

As chairman, Otto only votes when there is a tie.

"My role in a lot of ways is a facilitator. I feel really lucky that I have seen so much in the past. I am a good resource person for what they did before and what has worked in the past," Otto said. "I have a real mixed record of supporting them when I think they're right and not (supporting them) when I don't."

The students chosen to serve on the Privilege Fee Committee have been delegated a lot of trust, Otto said.

Red Cross short of 4 blood types in Central Plains

BRANDI HERTIG
staff reporter

Getting a pint of blood dribbled into a bag might not be the most enjoyable way to spend time, but the American Red Cross is feeling the effects of those reluctant to donate.

The Central Plains Region, which includes 88 Kansas counties, is experiencing a shortage of four blood types.

"We've never had four specific blood types in the red," said Lisa Timmermeyer, communications specialist for the Central Plains Region.

During the summer, the number of accidents is higher, and that increases the demand for blood, Timmermeyer said. Also, with most schools in recess, the American Red Cross does not receive units it normally gets from school blood drives.

Each week, about 1,900 units of blood are required to fulfill the Central Plains Region's needs. They are now averaging 400 units lower than that goal.

The Central Plains Region has a two-day supply of types A-positive and A-negative, and a one-day supply of types O-positive and O-negative. There is normally enough in stock for a three-day period.

"We've had a lot of problems with O type this summer," Timmermeyer said.

Anyone can receive a blood transfusion with type O-negative, and type O-positive is the most common blood type, so naturally the need for both will be greater, said Amy Simon, communications specialist for the Central Plains Region.

Blood shortages are not just a problem for the Central Plains Region, Simon said. Nationwide, regions are having trouble meeting goals.

A few regions each week appeal to the media to draw people's attention to the need for donations, she said.

There will be a blood drive between noon and 6 p.m. today at 1102 Eighth St. in Wamego.

Darlene Williams, blood drive chairwoman, said the target goal is 90 units, but she expects to collect 10 or 20 units more than that.

Wamego usually has three blood drives each year, but there was an extra one in June this year. Williams said that might affect the units donated because some people have already given at the June drive.

K-State's fall blood drive will be Oct. 6-10, and Manhattan will have one in December..

Blood Drive

Wamego is sponsoring a blood drive today from noon to 6 p.m. today at St. Bernard's Catholic Church, 1102 Eighth St.
Volunteers must:
- be at least 17 years old.
- weigh at least 110 pounds.
- be in general good health.
- have no history of virul hepatitus after age 10.
- not be a member of an at-risk behavior group.

K-State will also have a blood drive Oct. 6-10 at Derby food Center.

Last Chance makes Playboy's top-100 list

DAVID FAIRBANKS

Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, an Aggieville bar and grill, appears in October's issue of Playboy magazine as one of America's top-100 college bars.

The top-100 list was compiled through a telephone and World Wide Web poll.

Rusty Wilson, owner of Chance, said it was an honor to be named as one of the top 100.

"I do attribute this success in large part to my staff," he said. "They do a hell of a job for me. I wouldn't be where I am right now without them."

Wilson has owned Chance since 1989. He said the bar carries a lot of tradition.

"Chance caters to a really diverse crowd. It's not all greeks or cowboys. Everyone feels welcome here," he said.

Sam Haney, manager of Chance, said he was excited when he heard the news.

"We kept it to ourselves, waiting for it to come out. We didn't know for sure it was for real," he said.

In celebration, Chance is organizing a top-100 celebration. During this promotion, the bar will give away 400 copies of the issue containing the poll.

Wilson said he doesn't think the poll will increase business for the bar, but it is something to be proud of.

"I even told my mother," he said. "She's going to go buy one."

Playboy's October issue has already shown up on the doorsteps of subscribers, but it won't hit on news stands until Tuesday.

Derby school district to get more than $1 million for PepsiCo contract

WICHITA — PepsiCo Inc. agreed to give more than $1 million to the Derby school district in exchange for an exclusive 10-year contract for beverage service.

School board member Robert Hein celebrated the presentation to the Derby school board Monday night by wearing a gray T-shirt bearing the Pepsi logo and the advertising slogan "GeneratioNext."

The largest payment — $132,000 — will be used to establish the GeneratioNext Resource Center at Cooper Elementary this school year. Cooper is being transformed as part of the district's renewal project to meet the special educational needs of children from low-income families.

The money from Pepsi will be used to put computers in every classroom at Cooper: One for the teacher plus a mini lab or learning center for students, said superintendent Dennis Shoemaker.

Vending machines will carry only Pepsi products — from cola to juice to water. The football team will drink All Sport — four cases of it provided for free, along with six sideline coolers, 100 squeeze bottles and 5,000 sports cups.

Pepsi employees will be guest speakers in business classes, and a junior or senior student will be selected as an intern to work with Pizza Hut technology workers.

Over 10 years, the district will receive about $1.04 million — more if it raises vending machine prices.

The company chose Derby because it estimates that there are 206 "Pepsi households," or homes of people who work in one of the many businesses under the PepsiCo umbrella.

Boy, missing after playing hide-and-seek, found under clothes pile

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa — Bryce McCollister plays a mean game of hide-and-seek.

After his parents called police Sunday night just before 9 p.m. to say the 5-year-old Toledo boy was missing from their home, officers and firefighters searched the house but couldn't find him.

About 200 volunteers from the neighborhood combed parks, the cemetery and nearby corn fields.

After about 2 1/2 hours, an officer finally spotted Bryce's arm poking out from beneath a large pile clothes in the family's basement, where he had fallen asleep while playing hide-and-seek with his two older brothers.

"He said, 'I was just hiding, Mom,'" Irene McCollister said. "I said, 'I guess that you won.'"

Firefighter who copied blueprints guilty under new law

WHEELING, W.Va. — A firefighter who gave photographed blueprints of an FBI complex to a militia leader has become the first person to be convicted under a new federal anti-terrorism law.

The 1994 law makes it a crime to provide resources to someone planning a terrorist attack. It was intended to prevent terrorist acts, U.S. Attorney William Wilmoth said.

"I hope that we don't have many chances to use it," Wilmoth said.

Fire Lt. James Rogers, 41, was convicted Monday and faces up to 10 years in prison when he is sentenced. He was acquitted of a conspiracy charge.

Rogers, who has been fired from his job, was accused of providing photographs that Mountaineer Militia leader Floyd "Ray" Looker sold for $50,000 to someone he believed was a middleman for Middle East terrorists.

Prosecutors say Rogers slipped into the fire hall's basement and made 34 photographs of the blueprints. The pictures could be assembled to show the complete plans.

Prosecutors said there were preparations but no active plot to carry out an attack on the FBI's Criminal Justice Information Services office in Clarksburg, where about 3,000 people work.

Seven people with militia ties were arrested Oct. 11 after a 16-month investigation by the FBI. Two have pleaded guilty to explosives violations, while three others await trial.

Meet Don Byron, the Superman of jazz

Master of bebop, klezmer (a Jewish street music), and even Looney Toons tunes, Byron hurdles musical boundaries in a single bound.

His mind-bending solos and experimental leanings have made him the biggest clarinet star since Benny Goodman. And if you think the clarinet is all about squeaks and squawks—the sounds little sis made when she was learning to play one in the fifth grade—think again. At McCain he'll perform with his hot and spicy quintet.

But wait! There's more. McCain Auditorium's super season also features Grease, A Chorus Line, Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat, Shakespeare's Measure for Measure, The Nutcracker on ice, and 13 other great events. Manhattan gears up for football crowds

city editor

Manhattan business owners are already gearing up for the first wave of purple that will take the Little Apple by storm for the first home football game Sept. 13.

"With the success the team has enjoyed, along with many positive things happening in Manhattan, we see the fall as a great opportunity to put our best foot forward," said Monnie Applegate, marketing director of Manhattan Town Center.

Restaurants, bookstores, bars and boutiques will all be flooded with masses of football-hungry K-State fans. What these businesses will be doing to accommodate their patrons in the weeks ahead may prove to be events within themselves.

The Purple Power Play on Poyntz will kick off the football season. It's sponsored by KQLA-FM 103.5, KTKA-TV, TCI of Manhattan, Manhattan Town Center, Main Street Manhattan and K-State.

The event starts Thursday evening in downtown Manhattan. There will be tents set up with food vendors, displays, merchandise sales, a free concert and a pep rally.

The event will continue through Friday with more concerts, special promotions and a fireworks finale, Applegate said.

Along the same lines are the Wildcat Weekends in Triangle Park, beginning Sept. 12, featuring the K-State Marching Band, cheerleaders, and of course, Willie the Wildcat.

Steve Levin, assistant manager at Varney's Book Store, said, "We're trying to renew a pep rally-type atmosphere this fall."

To take care of the expected elevated numbers of consumers, Levin said Varney's entire 120-member staff will be on hand every weekend, as well as 20 additional workers. To cut down on store crowding, Varney's is also putting up three outdoor tents, which they will fill with K-State merchandise.

Becky Ballard, owner of Ballard's Sporting Goods, said it is important to offer new merchandise to fans.

"Because K-State's been so hot lately, we're trying to come up with stuff that people haven't seen yet," she said.

Ballard's is also putting up a couple of tents for its customers as well as hiring six to eight new employees to work game days.

"K-State football jerseys are one of our most popular items, so we usually need three or four extra people just to print numbers on the backs," she said.

Playing a big part in the promotion and organization of the events happening this fall is the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce. Dan Colantone, president of the chamber, said it has produced fliers, brochures and coupon books all intended to cater to community members and visitors.

"We're extremely excited about the fall. With an excellent football team and university bringing people into our community, we're looking forward to having a very successful season for the team and for business," Colantone said.

BSU announces theme for new year

The president of the Black Student Union announced its theme for the year at its first meeting of the semester Tuesday night.

Colette McLemore, senior in social science, recited the Swahili phrase, "Umoja Wajibu Amali," which means "Unity Commitment Action" before the room of BSU members.

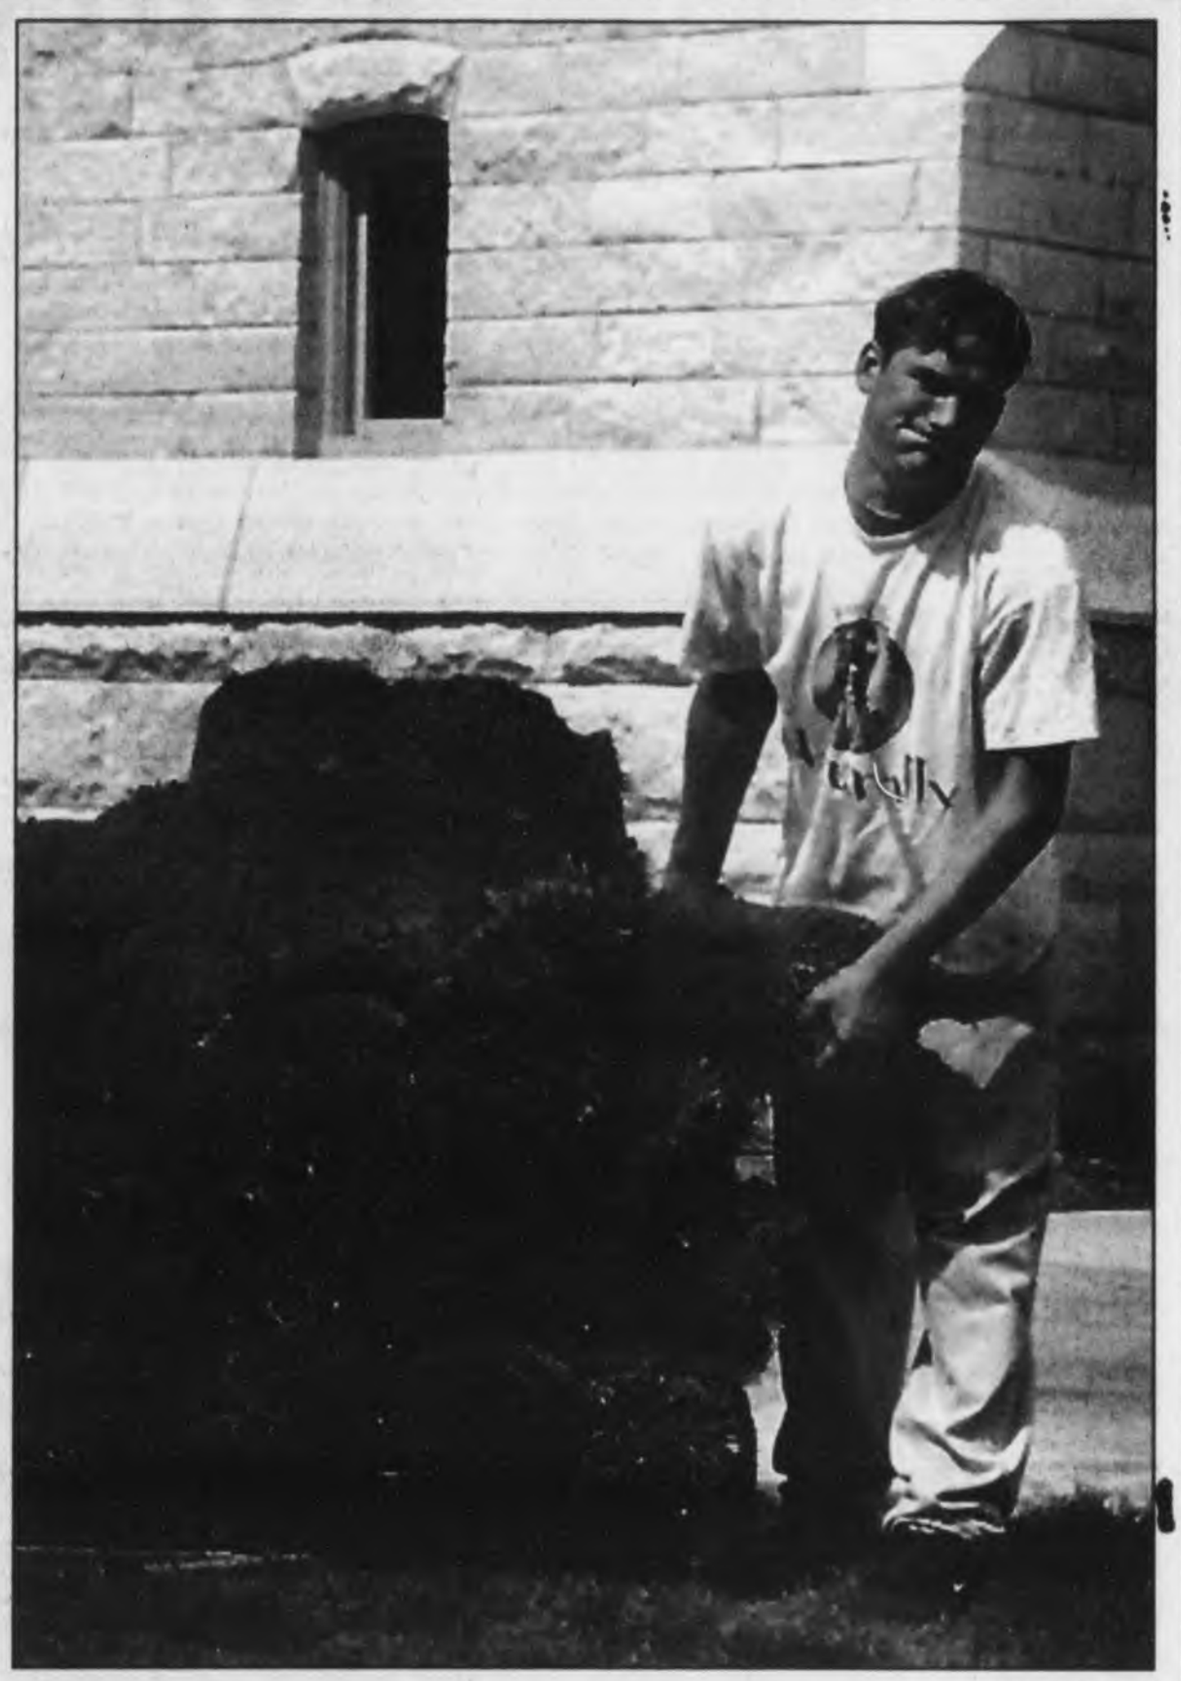
"This is going to be the charge for black students this year. I feel like I'm a bit closer to everyone on campus through BSU," McLemore said.

The first BSU black event of the year will be 3 p.m. Sept. 6 in the Quinlan Natural Area.

"It will be big time. We'll have a DJ, cards, dominoes and greek tables. Come and enjoy yourself.

"You don't even have to eat at Derby that day. We will be fixing the food," McLemore said.

BSU will also sopnsor its Black Alumni Weekend Sept. 12 through 14 and is looking for help with the event.



"This year we will be taking a bus to Ottawa, Kan., to greet and pick up the oldest living African-American male to graduate from K-State. This is always a big time for us," McLemore said.

In addition to helping with events, McLemore said there is a need for black students to fill leadership positions within BSU. There are four executive positions open: inside account specialist, public relations director, political issues director and special program director.

"This is a chance for black students to get involved," McLemore said. "Membership is only $5 and membership forms can be filled out at our next meeting."

Stacy Yeager, president of Sigma Gamma Rho, said it is tough for black students in the classroom.

"Don't be afraid to say hello to us on campus," she said. "We as black people need to stand together." x

Students should give input, guidance during privilege fee reviews

Name two out of the six fees coming up for review during the 1997-98 student fee cycle.

A few hints might help you out.

These six fees represent 52 percent of the total student fee budget, accounting for more than $4 million of your money. That's half of the $251 you pay per semester. Student fees account for one-fourth of your total tuition bill.

Do you give up, or are you savvy about these investments in your future?

Student Senate will review the Student Health Fee, which is the money going to Lafene Student Health Center. This fee now amounts to $3 million, constituting the largest fee. Are you absolutely sure you are getting your money's worth or that Lafene is spending the money in the places that best suit you?

The Athletic Fee subsidizes ticket prices and supports sports programs that don't generate big bucks on their own. There's also a lot of talk going around that the fee could be hiked to pay for stadium expansion. How does that make you feel?

Other fees include the Student Publications Fee, which ensures your free subscription to the Collegian and a reduced Royal Purple price tag. The Fine Arts Fee funds K-State theatrical productions and subsidizes student ticket prices at McCain Auditorium.

The Bramlage Repair and Maintenance Reserve Fee speaks for itself. The K-State Union Special Program Fee funds Union Program Council activities which is the cheap movies, recreational trips and big concerts.

If this all sounds a bit much, consider that you had a hand in electing the Student Senate that will decide the funding levels of these fees for the next two years. And, ponder the fact that President Jon Wefald has never vetoed anything the Senate has passed.

Senate needs guidance. Many times, senators don't know how to vote because their constituents haven't made their voices heard.

If you want to directly affect the fee process, think about attending a Privilege Fee Committee meeting at 8 p.m. every Monday night beginning Sept. 8 in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

Fake pervades at expense of real Manhattan might be boring, but at least it's real

VIEWPOINT

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
RUSSELL FORTMEYER is a senior in architecture. You can send e-mail to Russell at rmf@ksu.edu

Welcome to K-State. Prepare yourself for a real experience.

Good old K-State does remain one of the more real experiences left in the United States. Happily, this campus remains relatively detached from the rampant consumption-as-entertainment quality of the rest of the country.

Here ice cream is still made in Call Hall, Anderson Hall continues to awe new visitors and Aggieville has managed to stave off the Gap for another year. And one will find no prairie-inspired theme restaurants in Aggieville.

In other words, a majority of things are what they appear to be. Unfortunately, Manhattan must be one of the few remaining cities in the country where this is true.

After a summer living in the sprawling chaos of Los Angeles, where does one visit as a sort of decompression chamber from which one emerges, rather returns, to the so-called normal Kansas existence?

Perhaps a direct return to Manhattan would do the trick, but where now does one decompress in this city without total shock? The Manhattan Town Center?

So I stopped in what must surely be one of the last real places left in the American Southwest: Santa Fe, N.M.

Trendy? You bet. Expensive? Goes without saying. Amazingly authentic? So much so that one almost forgets there exists such a thing as popular American culture (excusing, of course, the endless Georgia O'Keeffe flower posters hanging and for sale throughout the city).

Santa Fe is a real place, the very sort that would make architecture critic Ada Louise Huxtable a happy camper. Her recent book, "The Unreal America: Architecture and Illusion," addresses the real and the so-called hyper-real, but it's about 20 years too late.

Huxtable laments the combination of historical preservation and consumerism and how festival architecture, much like the plans for the renovation of the K-State Student Union, reinforces consumerism and a detachment from reality.

She also rails against historical re-creations, such as Ellis Island, as shoddy reflections of the past. This comes from the same person who readily embraces anything Robert Venturi touches.

A much better, and less hypocritical, discussion of real vs. fake is critic and architect Michael Sorkin's collection of essays, "Variations on a Theme Park."

Little by little, the book's essays reveal, America is beginning to look the same everywhere. Sorkin writes, "Liberated from its centers and its edges by advances in communication and mobility and by a new world order bent on a single citizenship of consumption, the new city threatens an unimagined sameness even as it multiplies the illusory choices of the TV system."

That is why Overland Park, Kan., looks like Wichita looks like Phoenix.

My experience in Los Angeles proved that each shopping and entertainment complex in the city, whether it be Old Pasadena, Santa Monica's Third Street Promenade or Rodeo Drive, more or less consisted of the same international chain stores all coated in a fake architectural guise supposedly indicative of the area.

More worrisome is the harrowing sameness of the Country Club Plaza in Kansas City, Mo., to nearly every other shopping and entertainment complex in the country, minus the kitschy Spanish decoration.

And to think the celebrated Plaza dates back to the earlier part of this century. But, what can one purchase at the Plaza that one couldn't just as easily purchase in Denver?

Although consideration of the real and the fake is becoming a significant theme in criticism and intellectual discussion, Kansans rarely need to approach this subject.

Outside the realms of Wichita and Johnson County, Kansans have luckily escaped much of what Madison Avenue and corporate America have had to offer. You'll find no Gap stores in Council Grove. Thankfully, we can still treat a trip to an Overland Park mall as a somewhat novel experience. ("Oh, look what the city kids are wearing.")

Unfortunately, the fake is seeping into Manhattan in tiny amounts. It's popping up in our architecture, dining establishments, politics, entertainment, shopping and campus culture. Since Manhattanites (including students) are relatively blasé about each of those subjects, there's no cause for outrage.

However, I invite you to join me this year and begin to consider the pervasiveness of the fake.

DB92 change plays into hands of record companies

Editor,

I am protesting the proposed changes in KSDB-FM 91.9's format from new-album rock to commercial alternative. DB92's current format of new-album rock plays well-known bands like Nine Inch Nails, Pavement, The Posies and others. This also includes local music and bands on independent labels.

Commercial alternative, on the other hand, is the sludge du jour being forced down our throats on stations like KLZR-FM 105.9 in Lawrence. Huge record companies decide which bands will become popular by forcing commercial radio stations to play the songs by bands the record companies wish to promote.

If I want to hear bad music by cheese balls like Live, No Doubt, Dave Matthews Band and Bush, I could listen to the Lazer. I want to hear good alternative music, and DB92 provides that in spades.

Len Potillo is right in saying people have laughed at DB92. It's not that the music is so bad — it's the disc jockeys. That's exactly what Potillo should be concentrating on. The Collegian's article failed to note that Potillo is also known as Smooth B on the air at DB92. Smooth B is a great disc jockey. He is fun to listen to, and he plays good music.

This is not the case with most of the on-air personalities. In fact, with some, the word personality is a real stretch. Improving the skills of the people on the air and the cancellation of terrible shows like "A Purple Affair" are what is necessary to help DB92.

Trial of ages will not go as expected

VIEWPOINT

KEVIN BAILEY
KEVIN BAILEY is a senior in elementary education. You can send your e-mail comments to Kevin at (kevinsb@ksu.edu).

The courtroom was packed for the trial of the ages. The bailiff called the spectators to their feet. The expectant onlookers hushed in anticipation as the white-robed judge took his place behind the bench.

It seemed the whole world was there, waiting impatiently. What could cause so many people such anxiety?

No one knew who was on trial.

Perhaps it was a suspected pedophile. Or a serial killer. Or a murderous rapist. No matter. The accused was evil — sick and twisted beyond description. And, the people came for this and another reason.

The other reason was this strange trial's format. It would be a jury trial. The jury was to decide the guilt or innocence of the accused. The jury members would then recommend a sentence. However, the judge would pass the final sentence.

SHANE FOSBURG/Collegian

At last the judge called the first defendant.

"Sallie Mae Smith," the voice boomed across the vast expanse of the courtroom. The stunned woman stood and approached the bench. "You are called to a defense of yourself in the face of a charge of frequent gossiping. What do you have to say for yourself?" he asked gently.

"Why, your honor, I would never think of such a thing," the woman exclaimed with righteous indignation.

"Please take a seat in the witness stand," the kind judge said with a sad shake of his head.

"Jury, you will pay close attention to the video screen to your right," he added. There was a whirring sound and an image leapt onto the screen.

The woman recoiled in shock as she watched the tape. It was a scene from the preceding day — not one she was proud of.

She watched as she and her friend talked about another woman. They both were sure the woman was sleeping around on her husband.

She watched in horror as she was shown approaching another of her acquaintances, a woman named Betty, with the same story. When Betty inquired as to her source, Sallie bristled and said, "Well, she heard it from Thelma, who overheard Mary say something to her husband at church on Sunday. Why?"

Sallie hung her head in shame.

The jury deliberated less than five minutes.

"Guilty as charged."

The foreman's voice was uncertain.

"What is your recommendation?" asked the good judge.

"Ten hours of community service," replied the foreman, with a glance at Sallie Mae. "The jury does not consider this crime nearly as heinous as others we have heard and seen in the past."

Sallie looked relieved as she took a seat in the section reserved for the convicted defendants. However, the judge was still to pass the official sentence.

"Jeffrey John Hoolihan."

The judge's voice again rang out across the courtroom. The second defendant stepped to the bench.

This man was tried and convicted of greed in his business, based on more video evidence. The jury passed a comparable sentence on this man, citing extenuating circumstances surrounding the questionable dealings. The greedy man took his seat beside the woman with a relieved sigh.

One by one they came and were convicted. Anger, pride, lust, jealousy — the charges ran the gamut of what the embarrassed jury (for they had all done some of these things) deemed minor infractions.

Finally the last defendant took the stand.

"Frederick James Greenfeldt, you stand accused of being homosexual. What do you have to say for yourself?"

"I am."

A collective gasp swept through the gallery. He admitted it. How could he?

With no need to deliberate on the guilt or innocence of the man, the jury was barely out two minutes.

"We sentence him to death," the foreman said. The courtroom exploded with approval.

Frederick lifted his head, and took his seat next to the other defendants. They inched away ever so slightly.

The courtroom quieted. The judge would now decide the fate of the condemned. He would sentence the homosexual first. The man stepped slowly toward the judge.

With tears in his eyes, the judge said quietly, "The law requires me to sentence you to death. I am sorry."

The crowd cheered. The jury smiled smugly.

Next came Sallie Mae, the gossip.

Her look of relief melted as the judge pronounced her sentence with a catch in his voice.

"Once again, the law requires me to sentence you to death."

The courtroom shook with the shouts of the multitudes. The judge banged his gavel for silence.

One by one the convicted stepped before Him.

One by one they left, sentenced to die.

"Because all people have sinned, they fall short of God's glory."

El Nino likely to cause increase in global disasters

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GENEVA — The El Nino weather phenomenon brewing in the Pacific Ocean might be the largest climate event of the century, setting off an unprecedented number of global disasters, world climate experts predicted Tuesday.

Scientists at a three-day U.N.-sponsored conference estimate the El Nino system developing now — likely to last into next spring — shows all the earmarks of equaling or exceeding this century's strongest occurrence, which hit in 1982-83.

El Nino is a warming of the waters off equatorial South America that causes climate abnormalities around the world. Its name, a Spanish reference to the Christ child, comes from the historic Christmastime arrival of the system's warm waters in South America.

The system can cause flooding — or sometimes drought — in California, searing droughts in Brazil, Africa and Australia, severe storms in the central Pacific and a decline in hurricanes hitting the southeastern United States.

Water temperatures already are rising off Ecuador and Peru, indicating the new system will be a powerful one.

"It will likely be the biggest El Nino in 150 years," climatologist Jagadish Shukla said.

"We have never observed such high ocean temperatures in July in 150 years. And the only reason we say it will be the largest in 150 years is because we don't have any data from before then."

4-year-old survives being sucked through drainage pipe

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — A 4-year-old girl was all giggles and smiles the day after being sucked into a drainage pipe and at the brink of death.

Thomas Klucik broke down in tears as his daughter was released Monday from Yale-New Haven Children's Hospital. Julia, brown eyes alight and smiling broadly, clutched a balloon as her mother, Patricia, carried her out the hospital door to return home to Newtown.

She and her 8-year-old brother, Steven, were searching for crabs in the tidal pool at Hammonasset Beach State Park when the outgoing tide sucked her into a 228-foot pipe Sunday. "It was like she vanished in midair," the boy told his parents.

The parents thought nothing of the kids playing in the tidal pool because they had seen them playing there in the morning. But when the tide comes in late in the day, the water can surge to 4 feet.

More than a dozen people searched the water, then formed a human chain at the other end of the pipe spanning across the creek to prevent Julia from slipping past.

"Everyone helped tremendously," Patricia Klucik said. "I don't know any of their names, but they know who they are."

Julia wasn't breathing and was in cardiac arrest when she was pulled from the other end of the pipe about three minutes later.

"We started performing CPR on her, and a big blast of water came out her mouth, and she gulped for air," Thomas Klucik said.

Park staff put steel posts and a perimeter fence around both ends of the culvert Sunday night.

Ushers earn free tickets

LINDSEY FORTMEYER
staff writer

This year, more students might want to sneak into McCain Auditorium for a free performance. Director Richard Martin invites everyone to earn and explore the arts free of charge.

"Why not see a McCain performance for free?" Martin said.

Rather than raising performance costs with ushers' paychecks, McCain Auditorium offers a way for people to earn their tickets. For every three McCain events ushered, volunteers can attend their choice of events free of charge.

"The program is economically feasible," Martin said. "Theaters all around the area use volunteer ushers."

Shanieka Foster, house manager of McCain, said, "The McCain ushering program is a great way for people to take part in events and really handle themselves in a good manner. As long as a person follows McCain's policy, they can be an usher."

Foster said the training for ushers takes about a month and a half and includes instructions on greeting patrons, escorting people to their assigned seats, collecting tickets and watching the doors.

"Anyone is allowed to become an usher. You don't have to be a student or even be involved in the university, although ushers the age of 16 and 17 are about as young as we've had," Foster said.

Foster said all an usher needs is a white shirt and black or navy pants or skirt.

Ushering for McCain is not for everyone, although there are no requirements that voluntary ushers stay for the entire performance. After a job is finished, ushers receive their credit and are free to go, Foster said.

"Ushers that wish to stay for the McCain events usually miss the first 20 to 30 minutes. Parking ushers usually miss 10 to 20," Foster said. "But ushers are welcome to watch the rest of the performance. When the auditorium's not crowded, ushers even have the option to sit in the front row."

Ushers stand and watch the events, and some even sit on the stairs, she said.

"It's rewarding to see a show," Martin said. "People gain encouragement without having to work like a regular job."

This year, Martin hopes the pool of volunteers will be larger than previous years. He'd like to see more nonstudents involved.

"Those people who have never been to an opera and don't want to pay for a ticket don't have to," Foster said. "There are so many varieties of performances. Everyone can experience what McCain has to offer."

Some students usher around 10 to 12 performances a year, she said, while some volunteer ushers save their free, earned tickets and use several for the same event. "Ushering can be an easy way to pay for a date," Foster said.

McCain is offering meetings at 4 and 5 p.m. in the McCain lobby, for those interested in becoming an usher. A schedule of events, dress codes and handbooks will be available at the meeting.

YEARS OF WORK AND EFFORT PAY OFF IN A MUSIC COMPILATION KNOWN SIMPLY AS THE

'MANHATTAN PROJECT'

STORY BY PHIL KELLUM
SUFFERBUS PHOTO
COURTESY DAVID MAYES

▸TWO-DAY CONCERT WILL serve as recording session for local CD.

After years of toil and struggle to get its name out and about, the Manhattan music scene is finally getting a chance for some notoriety via "The Manhattan Project."

"The Manhattan Project" is a live compilation compact disc featuring all local bands.

They will record it Thursday and Friday nights.

Five bands will play each night at Bombers Upstairs, with a different band every hour, starting at 8 p.m.

The CD is the brainchild of Carrie Miller, former manager of defunct local band Roach Factory and reporter for The Manhattan Mercury.

Miller said she came up with the idea for the CD in mid-May, when she was going to organize a party to celebrate her graduation from college, and it grew from that simple idea to producing the compilation. The original plan was to have all the bands play outside on one day. It then grew to being stretched over two days and moved inside to Bombers Upstairs. Also, T-shirts were made and sponsors and bands were approached to help cover costs.

"The Manhattan Project" was the first choice of names for the compilation.

"It was a temporary name that just sort of stuck," Miller said.

Miller has had to juggle a full-time job at the Mercury, as well as other commitments, in addition to putting "The Manhattan Project" together.

"It's been pretty stressful. I knew it wasn't going to be easy," she said.

Robert Rebeck of Lawrence's Mercy Studios will be engineering the recording. In the past, he has engineered the "Loaded In Lawrence" series, which consists of live compilations of Lawrence bands. Also, he produced recent recordings by Manhattan bands Seraphine 7 and Jiffy Boy.

Miller said the local scene has taken a recent upturn and hopes the CD will give it an extra lift and take it past where it's been before.

An interesting and fun feature of the live recording atmosphere will be the placement of ambient microphones in the crowd to capture the crowd's responses.

"It will be impossible to mix it out. It will be a neat part of the recording," he said.

Each band participating and several sponsors each donated $100 to contribute to the cost of producing the CD.

Miller said none of the bands really balked at the $100 price. It will be cheap for people to buy because of the bands' donations, she said.

She also said the sponsors were very willing to contribute not only their money but also their services.

Sponsors include Streetside Records, KMKF-FM 101.5, Dean Liquor, Rock-A-Belly Deli, The Music Co. and more.

The Music Co. donated a guitar to be raffled off at the shows, and Streetside Records not only donated the $100 but also a $50 gift certificate to be raffled off.

Miller hopes the CD accomplishes several things, one being that it gives a boost to the scene.

"Manhattan has had really good bands for a long time but no vehicle to market it," she said.

Also, the bands can use the CD as a tool to market themselves to labels and to gain radio play, she said.

"It's a neat thing to have if they decide to break up or do other things," she added.

Proceeds from the shirt and ticket sales will be used to help pay for the production of the CD.

The ticket stubs from the advance tickets can be used for $1 off a shirt or CD after its release.

The CD is scheduled for release in late October.

Carmike Cinemas still possible in mall

▸A DEAL TO BRING movie theaters to Manhattan Town Center is back on the negotiating table.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Stalled plans to bring a cinema to Manhattan Town Center have gained new life in the past few weeks.

Carmike Cinemas bought out Manhattan theater operators First International Theaters this summer. Carmike is brokering a possible deal with Forest City Enterprises, owners of Manhattan Town Center, to bring eight cinemas to the mall. In the deal with First International Theaters, Carmike received all three Manhattan theaters.

Lamar Fields, vice president of real estate for the Columbus, Ga.-based Carmike, said it's a possibility Carmike would close one location in Manhattan to open a larger multiplex in the mall.

However, Fields said one theater could be converted to a bargain house instead of closing.

Fields said the companies are in the discussion stages, and nothing has been finalized.

"We would have to be larger. If we can't get it to where we can't do seven or eight theaters, we're not going to do it," he said.

First International's original plan called for the construction of four mall theaters.

Carmike's tentative plan for eight theaters aligns much more with industry trends toward larger, more technologically advanced theaters.

Fields said Carmike usually expands into new stand-alone buildings with stadium seating options if there is market demand. He said the deal with Forest City is appealing because the combination of mall food courts and theaters can be beneficial.

He said each Carmike cinema includes digital sound and occasionally THX.

"In a college town like Manhattan, you guys are pretty up to speed with stereo equipment, and we need to have a good stereo system because we'll have a lot of critics," Fields said.

Although Carmike is willing to discuss some of the possibilities a new theater could include, Forest City officials are keeping quiet.

Dave Favorite, vice president of Cleveland-based Forest City, said the negotiations are a confidential situation, and he had no comment.

Monnie Applegate, marketing director of Manhattan Town Center, said she couldn't discuss the details of the theater negotiations.

But Applegate said Carmike was looking at several options, including a possible addition to the mall and the original intent of First International to use vacant space in the south wing of the mall.

Bob Howard, general manager of Carmike Cinemas' Manhattan theaters, said the deal being brokered between the mall and Carmike wasn't complete.

Howard served in the same capacity with First International until Carmike bought it.

He said he wasn't familiar enough with Carmike's business philosophy to know if the company is pursuing the mall cinema development.

It also remains unclear whether Carmike will continue Westloop Theatre's recent practice of running art films in one theater as a substitution for the closing of the Varsity Theatre in Aggieville.

"It's a real possibility, but I don't know Carmike's philosophy," Howard said.

The Manhattan theaters are Carmike's first foray into business in Kansas.

Carmike owns 550 theaters encompassing 2,700 screens, making it the largest theater exhibitor in the world.

It operates in nearly 35 states, mainly in the Southeast, throughout the Midwest and the Pacific Northwest.

Mir crew fixes dangerous oxygen system failure; miscommunication with Russians causes brief scare

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Mir's crew solved a potentially serious problem by swiftly fixing the balky air supply systems — but the Russian ground staff was slow in telling the Americans, resulting in a brief scare early Tuesday.

The latest breakdown and repair job on Mir was filled with confusion due to the very different ways that Americans and Russians handle public relations.

The U.S. space agency NASA touched off a brief panic Monday when officials in Houston announced that both the main and backup oxygen-generating systems on Mir were not working.

The two Russians and one American on board would have to fix the systems within days, or face the prospect of abandoning the space station.

When NASA made the first announcement it was almost midnight in Moscow, where space officials had long since gone home without reporting any new problems aboard the Mir.

It wasn't until Tuesday morning that Russian officials announced that both oxygen systems had been fixed by 10:30 p.m. Monday — before NASA even announced the problem.

"Everything is fine," Vladimir Solovyov, the head of Russia's Mission Control, told journalists today. "We have no problems with the quality of air on board."

This is just the latest example of miscommunication — and differing approaches to problems — between the U.S. and Russian space programs.

Russian space officials, for instance, waited hours before notifying NASA about the fire that erupted aboard Mir on Feb. 23 and then played down its seriousness. It wasn't until American astronaut Jerry Linenger returned to Earth in May that NASA learned just how grave and harrowing that fire really was.

The Russian cosmonauts carried out tricky repairs Friday to bring the Mir's electric system back online. Solovyov said Mir was back up to 100 to 120 amps today, but other Russian space officials declined to say how close that was to full power. Other Russian space officials said that by week's end, Mir should be operating at about 90 percent of full power.

During Mir's many recent travails, NASA has on several occasions been the first to report problems, though they receive their information from their counterparts at Russia's Mission Control just outside Moscow.

The Russians have been slow to report some incidents, and have expressed less concern about many others in comparison to the American space agency.

After keeping Mir aloft for more than 11 years, the Russians view many breakdowns as routine and simply don't bother to announce them unless asked.

Mir has had more than 1,500 breakdowns during about 4,000 days in space, or about one breakdown every 2 1/2 days, space officials have said. Most are minor and not even reported by the Russians.

"There's a difference in philosophy between the Russians and the Americans," Geoff Perry, head of the Kettering Space Observers Group, said in a recent interview from Cornwall, England.

"The Russians accept these breakdowns and get on with them and don't bother to report them. NASA is very quick to report any malfunctions."

Solovyov, the Russian official, took a swipe at the media today, calling the latest reports a completely incomprehensible uproar.

"To our greatest joy, and I think to your deep disappointment, nothing extraordinary has happened aboard the station," he told assembled journalists.

Mir has been receiving much greater media scrutiny in recent months due to several serious problems, and the frequent announcements offered up by NASA since American astronauts began flying on Mir.

In Monday's incident, the primary oxygen system, the Elektron generator, could not be started, Solovyov said.

Following that, the crew was unable to ignite the solid-fuel oxygen canisters that are used as a backup system.

That system also failed until the crew replaced the mechanism that ignites the canisters, or candles.

The crew also managed to fix the Elektron system before going to sleep Monday, Solovyov said.

Even when both oxygen systems go down, Mir has enough oxygen to last several days. But if the systems couldn't be fixed during that time, the crew would have to abandon ship in the attached Soyuz capsule.

There have been repeated problems with the Elektron generator, but it was the first time since February that a crew had had serious trouble with the backup system.

One of these canisters burst into flames six months ago, filling the station with smoke

2 Weight-loss drugs skew animal brain functions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Two popular weight-loss drugs have been shown to disrupt brain function in animals, but researchers cautioned Tuesday that they don't know whether any of the 50 million people who take the drugs would have the same reaction.

Dexfenfluramine and fenfluramine, sold under the brand names Redux and Pondimin, have been shown in animals to disrupt levels of an important chemical, called serotonin, that relays information through the brain, according to the review of 128 medical articles that was published in Wednesday's edition of The Journal of the American Medical Association.

"We don't know if this happens in humans. We took the data from animals," said the study's lead researcher, Dr. Una McCann of the National Institute of Mental Health. "The serotonin is gone in certain brain areas where you'd expect to find it."

If the same thing occurs in people, it could lead to behavior problems, McCann said.

"Things to look out for are depression, anxiety, memory problems and cognition problems," the researcher said.

Philadelphia-based Wyeth-Ayerst Laboratories, which makes both drugs, announced last week that it will begin a two-year study of Redux in humans to answer some of the questions raised by the animal trials, said Philip de Vane, the company's vice president of clinical affairs and U.S. medical director.

Company officials cite 17 previous clinical trials that have shown the drugs are a safe treatment for obesity when used in proper doses.

They say the animal data are based on extremely high doses — sometimes as much as 10 times what is recommended — and that there have been no significant reports of disrupted brain function.

Both drugs reduce the user's appetite by stepping up the production of serotonin, a chemical that makes the brain think the stomach is full even when it's not. Redux can be used indefinitely, while Pondimin is typically prescribed for short periods of time.

Serotonin is also responsible for a host of brain functions including cognition, memory, mood regulation, sleep, appetite and aggression, McCann said. Problems may occur when serotonin levels are disrupted, she said.

McCann's review did not examine effects of the widely publicized diet drug fen-phen, a combination of the medications fenfluramine and phentermine. A recent Mayo Clinic study found that taking fen-phen dramatically increases the risk of heart-valve irregularities.

Doctors need to remember that drugs are not the only way to treat obesity, said Dr. Michael Steelman, an Oklahoma City doctor and president of the American Society of Bariatric Physicians.

"They're not to be passed out as a simple way for doctors to get overweight patients out of their office," Steelman said.

Romance novelist files law suit against rival writer for plagiarism

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Romance novelist Janet Dailey, who admitted she ripped off some of fellow novelist Nora Roberts' bodice-ripping style for three of her books is being sued for plagiarism.

Roberts, whose books include "Sweet Revenge," filed the lawsuit to protect herself after settlement negotiations with Dailey broke down, her lawyer said Tuesday.

The two had been trying to work out their differences after Dailey admitted she had copied Roberts' work in three books, "Notorious," "Scrooge Wore Spurs" and "Aspen Gold."

Dailey said last month she was under stress at the time, adding it was brought on by the cancer deaths of two brothers and her husband's lung-cancer surgery.

"I can only apologize to Nora, whom I've considered a friend, and to my readers for any pain or embarrassment my conduct has caused," she said at the time.

The authors were trying to reach an out-of-court settlement, but on Tuesday Roberts' lawyer, David Hashmall, said they could not come to terms.

The suit was filed Friday in federal court in Manhattan to prevent Dailey from any additional copying, Hashmall said.

Dailey's lawyer, Kenneth P. Norwick, said that "not all copying constitutes copyright infringement."

Dailey, of Branson, Mo., has written 93 books in two decades. More than 200 million copies have been sold in 98 countries and 19 languages.

Calif. Attorney General endorses 3-year study of medicinal marijuana

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO Calif. — Attorney General Dan Lungren, lampooned in the comic strip "Doonesbury" for raiding a marijuana buyer's club in San Francisco, said Tuesday he'll support a three-year study of the drug's medical value.

The conservative Republican was a vigorous opponent of last November's Proposition 215, which legalized the cultivation, possession and use of marijuana for medicinal purposes.

That position — and a raid last August on the Cannabis Buyer's Club in San Francisco — won Lungren the attention of "Doonesbury" creator Garry Trudeau, who portrayed the club in a series of strips in October as a sanctuary for dying AIDS and cancer patients and ridiculed Lungren for ordering the raid.

"Although I still believe Proposition 215 was a dumb idea, and that most voters didn't know about the legalization agenda that was behind it ... the voters in California have made it clear that they want — in the words of the initiative — 'seriously ill Californians to have the right to obtain and use marijuana for medical purposes,'" Lungren said.

"That's a reasonable and rational position to take," he added.

But it leaves unanswered the question of when marijuana use might be appropriate, and what conditions the drug might help treat, Lungren said. He added that the study will help answer those questions.

On Tuesday, he joined Democratic state Sen. John Vasconcellos, one of the Legislature's most liberal members, in supporting legislation authorizing and funding the research.

Officials from the state narcotics officers' association and the district attorneys' association also announced their support.

The bill would create a Marijuana Research Center at a campus of the University of California and would fund it with about $1 million a year for three years. Private donations would also be accepted.

The proposed law also would protect researchers from any legal penalties, while stating that it is not intended to condone recreational use of the drug.

said.

"I have some of the biggest, strong-willed people that Senate can hold. It's not a big ego group but large mental capacity and a large amount of experience. They are not puppets," Otto said.

Otto said the committee would strive to be a microcosm of Senate and that in addition to being educated about the fees, members of the committee would seek feedback from the student body.

"Student fees somehow impact a great number of students on this campus. They read the paper, they go to an event, they hear a speaker, they are in a club or whatever," Otto said. "I would tell students they have a lot of money invested in these fees."

There might be some changes in how the committee reviews program budgets this year, Otto said.

In the past, the committee has requested budget and fee recommendations that resembled a single annual report.

If a department wanted to receive more student fee money, it gave the committee a budget that showed where that money would go and then recommend that it receive that amount. The committee then had the option to approve the request or adjust the amount before handing it to Senate to amend and approve.

"We bring in the director, the board of directors or the students that are involved in the service. We bring them in and say, 'What would you like to do if you had more money' and ask them what they foresee as increases," Otto said.

If the new system is approved by the committee, entities that serve the campus through student fees, such as Lafene, will submit three budgets to the Privilege Fee Committee. One would show the benefits of increasing student fee allocations. The other would be a status quo budget requesting the same amount of money, and the last budget would show the effects of decreasing allocated money.

The purpose is twofold.

Asking for three different budgets forces both the departments requesting student fee money and the Privilege Fee Committee to be more creative in their approach to distributing student fees.

Instead of simply asking for more funding to maintain a high level of service, departments might be inclined to look at the potential benefits of having user fees or increasing existing ones. Privilege Fee Committee members would have the ability to review all three budgets and, Otto said, make more informed decisions.

The process of adjusting requested fees isn't solely the responsibility of the committee. Representatives from fee-using departments are able to negotiate with committee members at weekly open meetings if there are disagreements, and input from students is also accepted.

FEES

Otto, Privilege Fee chairman and senior in political science, said there's a reason Senate usually votes the way the committee recommends.

"We have a committee that authors six major bills a year, and that's it. We do a lot of preparation and work and spend a tremendous amount of time on this," Otto said.

"With maybe one or two exceptions, every single thing that the committee has recommended has been passed by Senate eventually."

Although the Kansas Board of Regents will not receive the signed bills and new fee levels until mid-April, Otto said the committee will begin reviewing annual reports and previous fee proposals in September.

Otto, along with Tim Riemann, student body president, and Jennafer Neufeld, student body vice president, said student input and feedback is vital in the fee process.

"Jennafer and I have an open-door policy, and any student is more than welcome to tell us how they feel about a fee or any issue," Riemann said.

"We haven't made any unconditional statements about fees — raising or lowering. Any fee increase would have to be extremely justifiable before we would sign our names to it."

Any increase or decrease in the fee would require a two-thirds vote from Senate after the Privilege Fee Committee has made a recommendation.

The reason Student Governing Association has so much power is that senators take their responsibilities so seriously, Riemann said.

"The reason President Wefald has never overturned a decision is because he knows every single decision has been toiled over and toiled over and nothing is made by a whim," he said.

Riemann said students interested in how much money is spent on fees should get involved by attending the Privilege Fee Committee meetings at 8 p.m. on Mondays in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

Money spent by Senate should reflect the concerns and input of the student body, Riemann said.

"The tone that we would like to set is one of informed decisions. We want students to rest assured that any decision that we make, whether it's to sign what Student Senate passes or veto it, that it's going to be informed," Riemann said.

EXPERIENCED RUNNING BACKS JOIN ROOKIE RECEIVERS ON THIS YEAR'S TEAM

Running Backs

Of all K-State's 1996 running backs, no lettermen were lost and one returned to the active roster. And that one is looking better than ever.

Eric Hickson had a good summer and a good spring, Coach Bill Snyder said.

"He's had some contact in the past, but he does need to get back to it. We won't hold him out when we get started," Snyder said.

Hickson, who was out for the entire 1996 season while recovering from a broken leg, said at the Aug. 13 K-State Media Day that he'd been bulking up in anticipation for this season.

"I've been working out this summer, and I've spent a lot of time in the weight room," Hickson said. "I'm ready to get back."

Hickson said his weight is at 200 pounds now, which is only five more than last season. However, he's increased his strength, and fellow back Mike Lawrence said Hickson's presence was strong even while he was on the sidelines.

"It's gonna be fun," Lawrence said. "He's always been there, regardless of whether he was out of pads. He's gonna add a lot more."

K-State generally runs a pro-set offense, allowing one back on the field when using this formation. Lawrence was the starting man eight times for the Cats last season, and he said he knows Hickson's return could change that.

"There will always be competition," Lawrence said. "It's going to always be a battle, but I'm gonna go out there and do what I need to do. I don't plan on giving it up that easily. I just plan on letting the offense know that I'm here. And I'm always gonna be here to get the job done."

Lawrence, a senior, was 18 rushing yards shy of a 1,000-yard season. At the beginning of this season, his 1,660 career rushing yards place him fifth on the K-State career list. His goals for 1997 could push him further up in the ranks.

"My personal goal is to help my team to win a Big 12 title, to gain 1,000 yards and not come up 18 yards short," Lawrence said. "Just be totally focused the whole year and not let anything distract me."

Wide receivers

Last season's receiving core had solid starters Jimmy Dean and Andre Anderson, with Jarrett Grosdidier and Justin Swift taking turns at tight end. And, if all else failed, there was All-America wideout Kevin Lockett to pick up the pieces.

Grosdidier and Swift remain, but Dean and Lockett graduated and Anderson was dismissed from the team in the spring. This put a dent in the receiving core's armor.

The Cats needed someone to step up — and fast. Snyder said Tuesday that although some positions are not yet determined, one wideout spot is.

Twelve community college players will play at K-State, and seven or eight of those will be involved with the two-deep, Snyder said.

"Everett Burnett will be a starter," he said.

Burnett transferred from Kemper Military Community College last spring, and passing game coordinator Greg Peterson said Burnett is ironing out the rough spots.

"He did a nice job catching the ball in the spring, but he's still got to revise some things tech-wise," Peterson said. "He's a big target, has nice hands and can run a bit."

So, Burnett did what anyone would do in his position. He rolled up his sleeves and got to work.

"I had a few rough spots in the spring, and I got a chance to come in and look at them and talk to my coach," Burnett said. "We came out here in the evening and played 7-on-7, and the things I didn't know, I asked the players. So, I think I pretty much polished up a few rough spots."

Burnett is a junior, but has a freshman's amount of experience at K-State. He had the benefit of being on campus this spring, and shared all he knew with the incoming freshmen.

"As soon as they got out of school, we just opened our arms to them," Burnett said. We're just trying to get them adapted to the program."

Other possible starters include redshirt freshman David Allen, who moved from running back to receiver this season. Junior redshirts DeAndrea Robinson and Gavin Peries will see playing time, with Robinson coming off action at Southern Methodist University from 1994 to 1995.

The youth of this group has Peterson adjusting his practice styles, he said.

"Anytime you have an inexperienced group of receivers, you always want to make sure you slow your pace down as far as what you're teaching," Peterson said. "You have to build a base and continue to go forward."

Fantasy football simply a dream for this writer

I'm looking for a fantasy football league to join.

I've consulted NFL guru Mel Kiper (well, some Mel Kiper wannabes), and I have the inside track on players to grab and players to blow off in 1997.

Now, I'll share this information with you all, on one condition. Any monetary winnings must be split 50-50 with your insider — that's me.

If I'm lyin', I'm cryin'. If I had a league, these would be my men.

Bargain-Basement Buys

Eddie George (RB, Oilers) — George proved himself worthy of that terrific trophy last season as a rookie in Houston. Scoring eight times and rushing for 1,368 yards, this firecracker can pop through the holes of any defensive line. Quarterback Steve McNair will contribute to the 1995 Heisman man's success by opening up the Oiler offense. A solid back-up who could achieve superstar status.

Robert Brooks (WR, Packers) — Move over, Antonio Freeman: Brooks is back. You could take this guy as late as the fourth round and be thankful for it later. After his reconstructive knee surgery last Oct. 18 for one of football's most heinous injuries next to William Floyd, Brooks said he's progressed quickly. He's looked good this preseason, and he'll repeat his 1995 double-digit touchdown season.

VIEWPOINT

SUN DEE MILLS

SUN DEE MILLS is a senior in electronic journalism. You can send your e-mail comments to Sun Dee at sundee@ksu.edu

Mark Brunell (QB, Jaguars) — I admit, he was my man for 1997 before the preseason blow to the knee, but he's still my man. My backup man, that is. When he returns (and he's saying as early as Sept. 22 at their home game), he will supersede last season's 19 touchdown passes by at least six. Brunell's great in leagues where passing yards count. He had last season's NFL-high 273 yards per game.

Big, big, big busts

Jeff George (QB, Raiders) — Supposedly, the Chiefs made a huge mistake by letting George go. Go ahead and make this "mistake," too. He's changing offensive schemes in Oakland and hasn't looked very comfy in the pocket in the preseason. Not a good idea.

Anthony Miller (WR, Cowboys) — Maybe you think it was a good career move. As I see it, he's going from Easy Street to a crime-infested alley in Dallas. (Do I hate the 'Boys? I think so.) Seriously, Miller was da man at Mile High until the thin air affected his brain and he flew south. Plus, Michael Irvin suddenly loves his job again and could have a record-breaking year. Whatever. Just stay away.

Carolina Defense — The Panthers let Kevin Greene go and picked up former Wildcat Percell Gaskins. Gaskins is great, but one player does not a defense make. I saw these guys in Kansas City against the Chiefs' shaky offense: The Panthers were kittens. Five turnovers. Ouch! Don't go there. It's just a waste of a pick.

Sun Dee's star top 10:

1. Brett Favre (QB, Packers) — Duh.
2. Barry Sanders (RB, Lions) — Expensive, but worth it.
3. Terry Allen (WR, Redskins) — Great shape, high billing.
4. Herman Moore (WR, Lions) — A Moore-Sanders package? Good luck.
5. Curtis Martin (RB, Patriots) — It's all in the name.
6. Jerry Rice (WR, 49ers) — Rice is nice.
7. Jerome Bettis (RB, Steelers) — Bettis is best bet.
8. Carl Pickens (WR, Bengals) — Carl + red zone = $$
9. Terrell Davis (RB, Broncos) — Hate Denver, but …
10. Jon Elway (QB, Broncos) — See No. 9.

Well, that's it. You'll find no Cowboy players on my top 10. If they're just going to get arrested midseason, why bother?

P.S. Send the money to Kedzie 116.

Intramurals let students play football without making the varsity team

MICHAEL RYAN
staff writer

If you're one of the 20,000 students at K-State who's not on the football team, don't worry. You can still get a little playing time.

Flag football, one of more than 40 intramural sports offered by Recreational Services, starts Sept. 7, and it's not too late to sign up.

Last year, 2,500 students participated on 170 football teams, Steve Martini, associate director of intramurals, said.

"This campus is full of competitive students, and this is a competitive place," Martini said. "Students also want to be active and social."

Flag football might be the most competitive intramural sport. Tau Kappa Epsilon won the fraternity championship last year and went on to be the overall fraternity champions in total points.

"Flag football is something for the house to rally around. It brings us together," said TKE senior Randy Jones. "The team was successful because of their work ethic and their desire to be good."

The TKEs should be good again this year, with about 60 percent of the team returning, Jones said.

Martini said the other big team sport in the fall is soccer. Last year, more than 800 students participated on 50 teams. The first soccer games will be Sept. 10.

The intramural format is divided into three separate divisions — men's, women's, and coed. The men's division is further separated into three divisions — fraternity, residence halls and independent.

All K-State students are eligible to participate in intramural activities. Team and individual sport participation fees, as well as intramural rules, are explained in the Intramural Sports Program available at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

The entry deadline for the first nine competitions is 5 p.m. Friday. The first managers' meeting of the year is at 5 p.m. Sept. 3 in Union Forum Hall.

This year, students will have renovated playing conditions. The biggest changes are the new dirt infields on the softball diamonds and new backstops that extend down the foul lines. The facility will also get a new sprinkler system.

A 10-time NJCAA cross country coach of the year comes to K-State

FRY BY JOEL WHITE

For new K-State men's and women's cross country coach Randy Cole, challenge has become more appealing than inevitable success.

"If you're in one place for a long time, you get into a rut, but it was a good rut," Cole said. "I needed a new challenge, and this was my chance to work in the Big 12."

During the past 12 years as a Barton County Community College cross country and track and field coach, Cole ascended into an elite group of community college coaches.

Although he was a 10-time NJCAA National Coach of the Year, recording four in cross country and six in track, Cole said he was ready to leave the community college ranks.

"I left on great terms," he said. "I wanted the chance to work with people for more than just two years at a time."

In Cole's 12-year reign as the BCCC head cross country coach, he was a fixture at the NJCAA national meet. His women's teams won four national championships, and the BCCC men's teams accumulated three top-five finishes in the national meet.

As the BCCC track and field coach, Cole's teams amassed seven indoor and eight outdoor national titles. BCCC had 400 NJCAA all-Americans under his tutelage.

"I've coached the national champ in everything from 800 to 10,000 meters," Cole said.

Cole's athletes have also excelled at the international level.

"Last year, I had six people that were former Barton athletes in the Olympics," he said.

Emily Diederich, team member and junior in kinesiology, said she is excited about Cole's accomplishments.

"It says a lot when a coach comes in and he's already reached a goal with other athletes that I want to reach," Diederich said.

Sophomore cross country runner Kelly Andra attributes Cole's success to his concern for the athletes.

"He's always asking how we are reacting to the training and if we have any questions," she said.

Cole said the team can expect full commitment from him.

"I'll be straightforward with them," he said. "I'll be able to assist them beyond the racing, as far as school work."

Freshman Joe Letourneau said Cole has a no-nonsense style of coaching.

"He seems very well-organized, and he's down to business," Letourneau said.

Andra reinforced that sentiment.

"His program is very structured," she said. "We know all of our workouts for the week."

An additional explanation for Cole's success is that he has been able to bring top runners into his program.

"I look at physical make-up, running form and mental attitude," Cole said. "They say a lot of distance runners are introverted, but I think they have to have a little bit of an attitude. Part of the attitude is the willingness to pay the price in training and in racing."

Diederich said he was optimistic about the future of cross country.

"He's very firm in his philosophies. He knows where he wants to go, and he's been successful in the past," Diederich said. "He knows how to get the job done."

Informal rush helps fraternities recruit members

DAVID LOTT
staff writer

Weekend parties, following Interfraternity Council rules and recruiting, for more than one week a year are all part of fraternity rush at K-State.

As of Aug.18, 380 men have associated with K-State's 24 social fraternities, Jason Heinrich, IFC recruitment coordinator, said.

Fraternities use informal rush to recruit members unlike the sororities, who use a formal Rush Week, Greg Davis, IFC and Sigma Phi Epsilon president, said.

Theme parties like pool tournaments, sand volleyball and casino parties are popular ways for fraternities to introduce rushees to the houses and their members, Davis said.

Some houses use the entire chapter body to invite a rushee to pledge, or the recruitment chair is the primary person responsible for bringing in new members, he said.

"The recruitment chair is the most important person in the house," Davis said.

Rushees sign pledge cards to affiliate them with their chosen house. Cards are to be sent within 48 hours of signing so their names can be taken off the IFC name list, he said.

"It's simply a courtesy rule," Davis said. It notifies other houses certain rushees have already signed with a house.

IFC rules are applied to keep fraternity rush running smoothly, he said. Every house signs a dry-rush agreement to keep alcohol out of the rushing process.

"Houses are not allowed to entice an individual to sign with their house by the use of alcohol," he said.

Fraternities hold each other accountable for following the dry-rush policy, Davis said.

IFC also provides chapter recruitment chairs to meet and share ideas about rush, he said.

Recruitment 2000 was started last year to help improve rush by the exchange of ideas from different chapters. All fraternities were invited to attend the three sessions that were hosted in the spring by IFC.

Davis said IFC's goal is to help all fraternities with questions about rush, not just a couple of chapters.

"IFC can't grow if the chapters don't grow," he said.

"We've got a great associate class coming in," said Scott Kelly, rush chairman and vice president of Pi Kappa Phi. The Pi Kapps rushed 22 men this year, the largest class in a long time, he said.

He said they contact rushees from the list of men interested in joining a fraternity that comes from the Greek Affairs office.

After they contact the interested men, Kelly said the Pi Kapps take guys out to dinner to meet them.

"High school kids care about what they are getting into," he said.

Collecting names of rushees from alumni is one way Farm House fraternity recruits, Dustin Petz, vice president and past recruitment chair, said.

Men in the house also submit names to contact for rush, he said.

Invitations are sent to the rushees and confirmation calls are made to make sure they are planning to attend the theme parties they sponsor, Petz said.

Weekend visits include the parties, movies, going to church and eating formal lunch on Sunday before the rushees leave, he said.

Fraternity rushees have more input on which house they want to sign with because of longer visits, Petz said.

"I think I like our way better," he said.

K-State robot wins national competition

LESLIE NACHTRAB
staff reporter

The days when robots can clean houses might not be too far in the future. At least, not for K-State.

K-State's Willie the Robot proved this when it won first place at the sixth annual American Association for Artificial Intelligence Mobile Robot Competition and Exhibition July 25-Aug. 1 in Providence, R.I.

The contest required each robot to identify and retrieve objects while navigating in an environment that resembled a house.

The 3-foot tall robot identified four items including a bunch of grapes, a pill box, a carrot and a coffee cup.

No other team's robot was able to identify the objects in the simulated house, so the teams dropped out, said David Gustafson, professor of computing and information sciences and adviser to the K-State robotics team.

The team's members were Mike Novak, graduate student in software engineering; Todd Prater, senior in computer science; Brian Rectanus, senior in computer science; and Steve Gustafson, junior in computer science.

The team members found out about the competition in January and worked on programming the robot for about a month before the contest.

"They put in a lot of time and effort. It's a hard task. You have a map of the environment, and you have to program the robot to navigate through it precisely. One student spent hours just calculating the precise point where the robot should stop at the edge of a table. It's hard," Gustafson said .

One serious problem the team faced was the lighting changes from K-State to a big convention hall at the competition. The robot functioned partly from a color camera. "When you switch the lighting, the images change on the camera, causing problems. It requires you to do a lot of on-sight testing," Novak said.

The event coordinator of the competition did not expect any robot to identify more than one object, but Willie the Robot identified four and could have identified more, Gustafson said. "I've been very impressed with the team. The students are great with software programming. They really outclassed the competition."

As for robots cleaning houses in the future, Novak said he thinks that could still take awhile. "To the general user, I'd say it will probably be a while before that happens. It might be able to be done within three or four years, but it would be costly. I'd say maybe in five to eight years. But that's just a guess."

Roommates can make or break your life

BILL KRAAI/Collegian

"WE REALLY GOT INTO IT. SHE SOLD MY DOG WITHOUT ME KNOWING IT."

STEPHANIE WHARTON, JUNIOR UNDECIDED

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

They can be your best friends — great to hang out with.

They can be your worst enemies — Satan personified.

College roommates can make or break university life for students who live on or off campus. With the beginning of the fall semester, countless students are beginning their relationships with new roommates.

Todd O'Donnell, director of K-State's Consumer and Tenant Affairs office, said the first weeks of school usually determine whether roommates will make it through the year.

"Problems usually happen within the first month," he said.

"They've been together a while, and then it comes time to pay the bills, and not everyone is doing their share."

O'Donnell, whose office handles an average of 20 off-campus roommate conflicts per month, said problems between residents stem from a variety of causes. The most important safeguard against problems, he said, is to keep a written agreement.

"It's good to get everything in writing with a roommate agreement. If you have particular things that will need done, assign tasks that each person will be responsible for. Get in writing who will be responsible for what bills and make sure that each person is doing their share," O'Donnell said.

Knowing a roommate in advance can be helpful, O'Donnell said, but if tenants aren't expecting their roommates to change when they move to college, they might be in for a surprise.

"It depends on how well you know them. When you come to college, it's a whole different scene. You meet different people and develop habits. If the person they are living with is not willing to adjust, there will be some conflicts," O'Donnell said.

Todd Graham, senior in agribusiness, said he knew last year's roommate — his sister — too well. Graham lived with his freshman sister for the entire year, but he wasn't sorry to see her go, he said.

"She had rats, and they stunk, and she couldn't understand why I didn't like them," he said. "She has this really long blond hair, and she was shedding everywhere. Her hair was all over the place. It clogged the vacuum cleaner."

Graham's sister transferred.

For other students whose roommates aren't family, conflicts with roommates have been worse.

Stephanie Wharton, junior undecided, filed a lawsuit against her roommate after her Labrador disappeared.

"We really got into it," Wharton said. "She sold my dog without me knowing it, so I sued her. She didn't tell me why she did it, and she never admitted to it, but I know she did it. One of my friends was with her when she sold the dog."

The suit was settled in Wharton's favor, and she moved out.

She received $3,000 in compensation. The dog originally cost $600.

Though cases like these are extreme, O'Donnell said problems between roommates are fairly common. The key, he said, is communication.

"The first step is to communicate with that person. I don't mean yelling at the top of your lungs. I mean sit down, talk to that person and see if you can work out a compromise," he said.

Off-campus roommates who can't resolve the problems on their own can ask the Office of Consumer and Tenant Affairs for help.

"If that doesn't get resolved, they can come to our office, and we can explore the issues in depth. We will see if we can come up with an agreement that they are both satisfied with," O'Donnell said.

The office offers mediation and counseling services for tenants who are having problems with roommates. In some cases, though, O'Donnell said his clients are reluctant to change their views.

"By the time they come here, they usually each have their own opinion and aren't really willing to move away from that," he said.

To make problems easier to solve, O'Donnell said students should call his office before the situation gets out of hand.

"That would be easier for everyone involved," he said.

Group protests book featuring naked children

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Members of a citizens' group protesting the sale of a book they believe constitutes child pornography will continue to fight until the books are pulled off the shelves.

Carrying bright orange signs, the protesters set up camp outside two Wichita bookstores Monday and outside a fund-raiser for Rep. Todd Tiahrt, R-Kan., on Tuesday to protest Jock Sturges' photography book, "The Last Day of Summer," featuring poses of naked children.

"We know the child pornography statutes, and there's no doubt in our mind that action needs to be taken," said Lois Cunningham, a member of the ad hoc citizens' group. "We're committed to staying here until something changes."

Priced at $65, the 200-page book features children and teen-agers posing on mountains, in streams and in a bed. Critics call the book child pornography.

Officials for Borders Books and Barnes & Noble, the targets of the protest, say that the book has artistic merit and that they won't censor what customers read.

"They can stay out there as long as they want," Sarah DiFrancesco, regional community relations manager for Barnes & Noble, said of the protesters, "but as of right now, the book stays on the shelf."

The protesters are digging in, saying they won't leave until the stores pull the book off their shelves and local law enforcement officials take legal action.

The ad hoc group, numbering about 250 members, has been critical of Sedgwick County District Attorney Nola Foulston and U.S. Attorney Jackie Williams for not taking legal action.

"We're not seeing these child pornography laws upheld, and I just think it's a tragic lack of leadership," Cunningham said.

The protesters say they'll return each day during rush hours until action is taken.

Williams declined to comment Monday on the protest.

Foulston was unavailable for comment, but in June she said, "This is a pedophile's delight, but whether it flies under current obscenity laws is very questionable."

Both stores have sold out of the book. Officials say they'll restock the book as more copies are available.

"We understand that there are people who object, but we believe that customers should have the right to choose," said Jody Kohn, a spokeswoman for Borders.

Borders and Barnes & Noble aren't the only bookstores in Wichita that stocked the book, but members of the citizens' group said those two stores displayed the book prominently and were a starting point for the protest. The group says it might expand its demonstrations to other bookstores.

Jewell reaches settlement with former employer

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jewell

ATLANTA — Former Olympic bombing suspect Richard Jewell has settled his lawsuit against his former employer, Piedmont College, for an undisclosed amount of money.

Jewell's attorney, Lin Wood, said Tuesday that the north Georgia college will be dropped this week from Jewell's libel suit against The Atlanta Journal-Constitution. The newspaper will remain as a defendant, he said.

Jewell had alleged that Piedmont President Richard Cleere and a college spokesman, Scott Rawles, slandered him in statements to the newspaper about his job performance and personality.

Wood declined to say what led to the settlement or how much money Jewell will get.

"Obviously we're very pleased," he said. "We can now focus on the real culprit."

Cleere would not comment, and there was no answer Tuesday at Rawles' office at the college in Demorest.

Jewell, 34, worked as a campus security guard at Piedmont before taking a job last summer as a security guard at Centennial Olympic Park in Atlanta.

He was hailed as a hero for helping clear people away from the bomb before it exploded in the park July 27, killing one person and injuring more than 100. But three days later, the newspaper reported that he was the focus of the FBI's investigation.

In October, the Justice Department cleared Jewell in the bombing.

Jewell filed suit Jan. 28 against the newspaper and the college, saying the newspaper portrayed him as a person with a "bizarre employment history and aberrant personality who was guilty of criminal involvement in the Centennial Olympic Park bombing."

The Journal-Constitution responded that its reporting was "fair, accurate and responsible."

In addition to Piedmont, Jewell has reached monetary settlements with CNN, NBC and an Atlanta radio station. Time magazine agreed to print a clarification about its Jewell coverage, but no money was involved in that agreement.

"We feel like the agreements have been satisfactory both in terms of the compensation monetarily and the fact that there is a measure of accountability for what was done to him," Wood said.

He declined to say whether the settlements would leave Jewell wealthy.

"Richard needs to work, and he's still actively looking for a job," he said. "There's no question a number of people will view Richard as being wealthy. ... What I would say is that fair-minded people will view Richard as someone who is step-by-step obtaining some vindication against the people that did him so wrong."

Co-defendant to cooperate, help build murder case with police

ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDEPENDENCE, Va. — One of the two white men arrested in the death of a black man who was burned alive and decapitated will help prosecutors build their murder case against his co-defendant, an attorney said today.

Federal officials are investigating whether the July 25 killing was a racially motivated hate crime.

Emmett Cressell Jr. appeared in court Tuesday and was denied bail on charges of first-degree murder and robbery. He could face up to life in prison.

His co-defendant, Louis J. Ceparano, is charged with capital murder and robbery and could face the death penalty in the slaying of Garnett P. Johnson.

A witness, Hazel Louise Anderson, told The Associated Press she heard one of the men threaten to burn Johnson on a cross before he was killed. The men also pinned Johnson down and stripped him of his watch, she said.

Cressell's lawyer, Mark Claytor, told the judge Tuesday that his client will cooperate with prosecutors in making their case against Ceparano, who also is being held without bail.

Cressell, 36, and Johnson had been "drinking buddies for years," Claytor said.

"We want everyone to know his (Cressell's) involvement. I think people will be surprised," Claytor said in arguing that Cressell should be allowed to post bail.

Claytor would not discuss Cressell's role in the killing but denied that he is a racist.

"I don't know what Ceparano's motives were, but to call my man a racist

Nigerian university campuses plagued by violence from secret student societies

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAGOS, Nigeria — Fire bombings, bloody gang battles, extortion rackets. Across Nigeria, these are part of campus life at universities terrorized by student members of violent secret societies.

▶ Student terror. In the past two years, at least 20 killings have been blamed on secret societies that proliferate Nigerian campuses. These societies started in 1952, when a group of idealist students formed a secret group called the Pirates.

At least 20 killings in the past two years have been blamed on the dozen or so groups, among them Black Ax, the Buccaneers and the Green Berets.

Society members fight rival gangs and prey upon professors and students who are not members. The societies have been blamed for rapes, extortion, assaults and arson attacks, and are widely considered the most serious problem facing Africa's largest university system.

Critics claim authorities sometimes shy from tough action because many members of the groups are from wealthy families, but there have been some crackdowns.

More than 500 students at Nigeria's 39 universities have been expelled in the past five years for activities related to the secret societies. In July, seven students at the University of Ibadan were charged with killing two students in a gang fight, and three students at the Bida polytechnic university received three-year jail terms for secret-society activities.

Obi Nwankama, a leading writer and journalist, joined one of the first secret societies, the Pirates, in the 1980s while a student at the University of Jos in northern Nigeria.

He said that at the time, the group was approved by university officials and was open only to students whose marks were above their class average.

"There was never anything secret about our fraternity," Nwankama said. "It was essentially a counterculture — a romanticized version of sea pirates of old."

Nwankama said the Pirates were formed mainly out of a desire to promote more academic freedom and also to correct societal ills.

He said part of the blame for the rising violence rests with Nigeria's military government because it banned politically active student unions and put undercover agents on campus.

"These agents militarized the consciousness of the undergraduates," Nwankama said. "And when the government destroyed unions on the campus, undergraduates began to associate not on the ideals of scholarship, but on a new set of values."

Other academics blame the violence on a general erosion of moral standards.

"When society witnesses developments as we have had in Nigeria, cultures break down, and people begin to look for substitutes for the vacuum being created," said P.B. Ogunlade, a sociology teacher at the University of Lagos.

A law professor at Lagos State University, Mike Ikhariale, said he was too scared to discuss the societies.

"It's no longer safe for me to comment on the activities of secret cults on either my campus or any other," he said.

His fear is understandable. In June, a fire bomb wrecked the office of an administrator at the University of Calabar who had been trying to rein in the secret societies.

Reasons for joining the groups appear little different from those of students who join fraternities and sororities at universities in other countries.

Thomas Lawal, a student at the University of Technology in Akure, said he was seeking a sense of identity — and security — when he joined a secret society two years ago.

But in early July, Lawal renounced his membership at a forum organized by university officials. He gave a chilling account of initiates being buried in the bush after dying in secret rituals.

Another group's initiation ritual was depicted recently in the Lagos Tribune. It described a recruit at Adoekiti University walking into a circle of about 40 drunken members, holding out his left arm to be slashed by a knife, then letting his blood drip into a dried bottle gourd.

To an extent, the groups are all an offshoot of the Pirates, formed in 1952 by a group of idealistic students at the University of Ibadan.

Its founders, including Wole Soyinka, a Nobel laureate in literature, sought to promote more academic freedom and social awareness on campus. Now in political exile, Soyinka has denounced the trend toward campus violence.

"The Pirate ship has gone aground," he said.

In the early 1970s, a splinter group that wanted to be more radical broke away from the Pirates to form what became the Buccaneers. The breakup triggered violence, and more gangs began to appear.

This year alone, gang rivalries have led to deaths on at least seven campuses. Four people died in two clashes at Lagos State University. At the University of Benin in western Nigeria, the gangs have been blamed for six killings and a fire that burned down the computer department building.

Jelili Omotola, vice chancellor of the University of Lagos, wants college officials to regain the power to select students for admission. A central board now decides on admissions to all 39 universities.

"There is need for the university to know the kind of people it is admitting," Omotola said.

Sound off on our message board.

Gangsta rapper lives on in courtrooms, law offices

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Tupac Shakur, incarcerated before his birth and murdered before his 26th birthday, spent much of his too-short life outside the law. His tattoos proclaimed his philosophy: "Outlaw" on his left forearm, "Thug Life" across his torso.

His death has changed all that.

The gangsta rapper's unlikeliest legacy, forged in the year since his still-unsolved slaying, is legal, not musical — a litany of coast-to-coast litigation that could drag on for years.

Shakur lives on in the staid world of courtrooms and countersuits, law offices and legal papers. His posthumous alter ego is a white New York attorney — Richard Fischbein, co-executor of the Shakur estate.

Even Shakur's unreleased music — more than 150 songs, valued at $100 million — is tied up in a court battle. Fischbein says he expects more "vultures" to "come out of the woodwork."

"Tupac has an estate," Fischbein said bluntly. "He's dead. People see a payday."

Fischbein and Afeni Shakur, who gave birth to the slain rapper one month after her acquittal in a 1971 conspiracy trial, became co-executors Oct. 23, 1996. Since then, the flow of lawsuits has been as hard and relentless as Tupac's lyrics:

● A $7.1 million suit by Death Row Records, demanding reimbursement for cash advances that Shakur allegedly used for cars, houses, jewelry and other expenses. The estate filed a 41-page countersuit, accusing Death Row of looting $50 million from Shakur to maintain the extravagant lifestyles of label head Marion "Suge" Knight and other executives.

Shakur

More important than cash is control of at least two unreleased Shakur CDs and 152 additional unreleased songs. Death Row now has custody of the master tapes. A Death Row spokesman and label attorney David Kenner both declined to comment on the legal fight; Knight is serving a nine-year prison term on a probation violation.

● A $10-million lawsuit by C. DeLores Tucker, a virulent opponent of gangsta rap. Tucker, who once labeled Shakur's music "pornographic smut," claimed lyrics on Tupac's 5 million-selling album "All Eyez on Me" were so demeaning that it affected her sex life.

Two songs derisively mentioned Tucker by name. On one, "How Do U Want It," Shakur rapped: "DeLores Tucker, you's a (expletive)/Instead of trying to help a nigga, you destroy a brother."

Tucker did not return calls to her Washington D.C. office. But in her lawsuit, she alleged Shakur had caused her "great humiliation, mental pain and suffering" — and damaged her sexual relationship with her husband, William.

● A contentious lawsuit filed by the rapper's father, William Garland, seeking 50 percent of Tupac's estate. Afeni Shakur angrily charged that Garland was a gold-digger who ignored his son for 18 years. Garland blamed her nomadic lifestyle for making it impossible to find Tupac.

"I'm the only person in here who lost somebody," Afeni Shakur said in early August. "He don't even know my son's birthday."

Garland's lawyer, Leonard Birdsong, called Afeni Shakur as an egomaniac upset by publicity for Tupac's father.

He also mentioned her past crack addiction and alcohol problems. Tupac had said those woes forced him to leave his mother's house at age 17.

Fischbein dismisses Garland as a deadbeat dad who gave his son "$500 and a bag of peanuts over the course of his life."

Birdsong indignantly charges Fischbein with "rewriting history to vilify my client." Garland only filed suit after Afeni Shakur twice submitted legal papers saying Tupac's father was dead, Garland says.

This parental struggle could give birth to another lawsuit. If he wins, Garland wants to be named the estate's co-executor.

● A November court award of $16.6 million to Jacquelyn McNealey, who was shot and partially paralyzed at a 1993 Shakur concert in Pine Bluff, Ark. Fischbein is vigorously trying to set aside this judgment. The estate's Arkansas court papers carried the names of 17 attorneys and asserted that Shakur was never even notified of this lawsuit.

● A successful lawsuit by the estate to gain merchandising rights to Shakur's image. Previously, it received nothing from the lucrative sales of Shakur T-shirts, hats and other memorabilia.

There remain a handful of "smaller, irrelevant" lawsuits — including a libel suit stemming from another lyric on Shakur's last album "The Don Killuminati" — that are unresolved, Fischbein acknowledged.

What the plaintiffs lined up at the Tupac trough might not know is that the rapper, whose last two albums sold more than 8 million copies, left very little behind.

Tupac's bank account contained $150,000 when he died at 4:03 p.m. on Sept. 13, six days after he was shot on the Las Vegas strip.

"He owned no real estate," the estate claimed in court papers. "He owned no stocks and bonds. He owned two cars."

Where was the money? The estate's lawsuit against Death Row alleges the label should have provided him with $12 million royalties on the album "All Eyez on Me" and a $5 million advance on his next album.

Instead, with Shakur locked up by a handwritten, three-page contract he'd signed in prison, Death Row refused to provide Shakur with any financial accounting, the estate says.

Even worse, Death Row allegedly charged Shakur for items the rapper never owned or knew about: $115,000 for jewelry, $120,000 in rent for a Malibu home and $23,857 for Porsche repairs. Shakur didn't own a Porsche; Knight did.

because he was at a party when the crime occurred is unfair to him, and the facts will bear it out," he said.

Claytor noted that Cressell had never fled from prosecutors in his earlier scrapes with the law. Just three weeks before the killing, Cressell was accused of punching a man and breaking his nose.

"You can tell by my record that I will stay here," Cressell said in a low, soft voice.

Claytor also noted that Cressell and one of two women at the party drove eight miles to report Johnson's slaying to authorities.

Commonwealth's Attorney J.D. Bolt argued against bail, citing Cressell's alleged involvement in the attack just three weeks before Johnson's death.

A preliminary hearing for both Cressell and Ceparano is set for Oct. 7.

Nurses, service workers, computer analysts to be in demand

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — People who want good jobs should be learning about computers or taking nursing courses.

Otherwise, their best opportunities during the next few years might be waiting tables or working as cashiers in stores.

Among occupations, the highest percentage of job growth in Kansas will be for computer systems analysts, the State Department of Human Resources reported Tuesday.

In a study, it predicted the state will have nearly 87 percent more jobs for computer analysts in 2005 than it did in 1993.

The study also predicted that the number of jobs for registered nurses, nursing aides and orderlies will increase by more than 30 percent.

At the same time, the study said, the demand for servers and cashiers also will increase significantly.

"Right now, there seems to be a demand for anybody with any kind of computer knowledge," Wayne Franklin, secretary of human resources, told reporters during a news conference.

The study projects continued job growth in the state for eight years, predicting that the increase from 1993 will be about 200,000 by 2005.

In July, the state set another employment record, with more than 1.36 million Kansans holding down jobs.

Franklin said Kansas seems to be attracting companies.

He said that since 1996, because of a surplus of funds, most companies have not had to pay the assessments used to finance benefits for jobless workers.

Also, he said, Kansas is perceived as a good place to raise a family.

Bill Layes, the department's chief of labor market information services, added, "I wouldn't discount the Kansas work ethic."

According to the study, computer systems analysts will be in demand, but their jobs still will be relatively few — only about 8,200 by 2005.

In contrast, the state expects to have more than 21,000 servers and 34,000 cashiers by 2005. Layes said restaurants and stores simply are more labor-intensive businesses.

Manhattan tops list in violations

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

Kansas Alcoholic Beverage Control agents made 27 arrests and issued 18 license violations in Manhattan last weekend as part of a statewide liquor enforcement effort in college towns.

Sheila Walker, public information officer for ABC, said 16 agents traveled to Manhattan, Emporia, Hays, Lawrence and Pittsburg to combat underage attempts to buy and consume alcohol.

Manhattan led the list of cities in violations.

Agents working in Manhattan checked drinkers' and buyers' ages throughout the city.

"They went into the bars and checked the ID's of people who were already inside. They also did some checks at liquor stores in the towns," Walker said.

Walker said agents issued the 18 license violations to ABC-licensed drinking establishments that were violating liquor laws. Walker could not release the names of the businesses who were cited.

Of the 18 violations, 10 were issued against one establishment.

The 27 arrests were all minors; 14 possessed or consumed alcohol on the premises of a licensed drinking establishment, 12 attempted to purchase alcohol at a retail liquor store, and one attempted to use a fake I.D.

Businesses that violated their ABC license could be fined a maximum of $1,000 per incident. Individuals who were arrested face a possible $250 fine or up to 30 days in jail.

Walker said the beginning of the semester is traditionally when ABC makes its presence known.

"We try to do this at the beginning of the semester because it's just a good time to educate people working in the establishments about the rules," she said.

The operation also sends a strong message to minors.

"This lets them know that there are people watching, and if they are breaking the law they will have to pay the consequences," Walker said.

Several other liquor enforcement efforts are planned for the remainder of the year, Walker said. If businesses continue to violate liquor laws, Walker said the ABC director could suspend or revoke their licenses.

The small Manhattan community appeals to Gayle Spencer, although few would find the Little Apple small compared to the University of Notre Dame.

Spencer replaced Kelley Fink as the coordinator of student activities at K-State.

She was appointed to the position on July 1 and has made a smooth transition into Manhattan and the job duties.

"The community has great people, and I have been very pleased," Spencer said.

She has a positive outlook on what she can accomplish in her new position coordinating student activities.

"My job is to serve as a resource for the students," Spencer said.

Spencer's goals for her office are to become more efficient, provide better services and to provide the best opportunity for students.

She will serve as an adviser to the Student Governing Association, Phi Eta Sigma and the Fine Arts

Campus department's goal to make K-State safe for work, play

ANDREA COREY
senior staff writer

The Department of Environmental Health and Safety handles all issues of campus safety except police and security.

For Steve Galitzer, director of the department, the idea that governs the department is basic.

"What we do is we try to make sure the university is a safe place to work and study — and play as well," he said.

But the responsibilities of the department appear to be vast. The department handles everything from testing air quality and removing hazardous waste, to keeping track of all radioactive materials on campus. The office also offers training for employees in 40-hour occupational safety and health administration training.

One of those employees is Brett Speidel, a radiation safety technician and 1996 K-State graduate in geology. He now works full-time for the department, testing radiation levels in about 15 buildings on campus.

He started at the department in September 1994, while he was an undergraduate student.

He said the training he received at the department was helpful for his future, and an excellent opportunity for students.

"The training is, like I've said, phenomenal," he said. "That's one of the main benefits of working here."

Galitzer said the students are helpful.

"We couldn't run the program without them," he said.

While the department trains its own employees, it also works with other groups on campus.

"We provide training in any area in environmental health and safety that departments are interested in," he said.

The training is not just for departments. Galitzer said his office has trained residence hall residents to use fire-safety equipment properly.

The department also teaches classes on campus. Radiation Safety in the Research Laboratory is taught in the Division of Biology by Ronald Bridges, assistant radiation safety officer. The class begins discussing the basics of radiation, and becomes more detailed as the class progresses.

"What we're looking at then is more basic — what is radiation, what are the regulations under which you operate," he said.

As a radiation safety officer, Bridges spends much of his time keeping records about radiation levels and who has what radioactive materials, and where they are being stored. The office receives and distributes radioactive materials. Bridges said the approach is a cradle-to-grave kind of mentality.

"We are responsible for it from the time it gets here until forever," he said.

Locking doors, hiding valuables best ways to prevent auto burglaries

JOHN HENDERSON
staff writer

Thirty-two incidents of auto burglary took place in Riley County during the month of July this year, 30 of which occurred in Manhattan, according to the Riley County Police Department.

William Reece, RCPD sergeant, said that number is actually a drop from 40, the average number of auto burglaries from the previous six months.

Most auto burglaries are crimes of opportunity, said Capt. Steve French. Thieves won't stake out a particular car, because they usually don't have to, French said.

The majority of the burglarized cars were left unlocked, with valuable items left in plain sight by their owners, he said.

"A lot of people just don't lock their cars," he said.

During the school year roughly 19,000 people return to Manhattan, 95 percent of whom own vehicles. Auto burglars read those numbers as an easy way to make money on the side, he said.

That's part of the reason Reece said he doesn't like to use average figures. The numbers jump around a lot for Manhattan, and the K-State school schedule is a big reason.

"You can see the differences in that statistic," he said. "Over Christmas break, there's usually a decline, then when the semester starts up, there's a short increase. Then when summer comes, it goes down a little."

In June, he said, there were 15 reports of auto burglaries.

There has always been a market for items stolen from cars, French said. Once it was CB radios, then cellular phones. Now the big market is for compact disc players, he said.

French advised car owners to get a player with a detachable face, and to either take the face with them or put it in the trunk.

"In several cases, if car thieves didn't find the face plate, they didn't take the player," he said. "If you're going to take it off, don't just stick it in your glove box, or leave it on the seat. A lot of people do that."

Manhattan has had a steady increase in the number of new apartment complexes, another grand opportunity for car burglars, Reece said. This is because the parking lots are full of vehicles owned by tenants.

"They can literally pick and choose," he said.

If anybody witnesses a burglary or any other crime, or knows information that might help police catch a criminal, French said they should contact Crime Stoppers of Manhattan at 539-7777.

"Find out as much as you can," he said. "If you can tell us the tag number from a vehicle, or someone's name, that's better than just a report."

He also said that if anyone is approached by a stranger offering CD players or other items at suspiciously low prices, then they should call Crime Stoppers. Chances are the items were stolen.

French said he doesn't think most auto burglaries are well-organized. They're mostly perpetrated by people acting alone and are generally pretty easy to prevent. Just remember that anything valuable in a car has a potential to be stolen, he said.

"It's the rule of supply and demand," he said. "If there wasn't a market, they wouldn't be stealing."

Attorneys general in Minnesota, Connecticut urge Nestle to stop selling chocolate-covered toys

MINNEAPOLIS — The attorneys general in Minnesota and Connecticut Wednesday urged candy giant Nestle to voluntarily remove from store shelves a new product that features plastic Disney movie figures like "Hercules" encased in a chocolate-covered plastic ball.

"This illegal product literally sugarcoats potential death and injury — wrapping in chocolate small toys that may cause choking or worse," Connecticut Attorney General Richard Blumenthal said.

Minnesota Attorney General Hubert Humphrey III said officials were asking Nestle to "take all steps necessary to protect our kids" and pull Nestle Magic from the market.

Nestle last month began selling a ball of chocolate wrapped around toy figures of Disney movie characters, but federal health officials have said Nestle Magic chocolates appear to be safe — the toy inside is too big to choke someone and is encased in a plastic shell not expected to chip teeth.

Arthur Whitmore, a spokesman for the Center for Food Safety and Applied Nutrition at the Food and Drug Administration, said today that the agency has reviewed safety data submitted by Nestle and has received assurances from the candy giant and from the safety commission that there is "no identifiable safety problem" with the Nestle product.

Humphrey contended that the product violates federal and state food safety laws, which he said prohibit the sale of candies with non-food items embedded inside.

Searchers rely on rope — and cooking oil — in rock rescue

PALMDALE, Calif. — An 11-year-old boy was stuck in a crevice on a house-sized boulder in the Mojave Desert for three hours until rescuers came up with a slick idea to get him out: vegetable oil.

Paul Hartness was treated for cuts and bruises at a hospital Tuesday after the rescue 70 miles northeast of Los Angeles. He left on crutches.

"That was really tiring," he said. "Just sitting there for 3 1/2 hours — you'd get tired, too."

Hartness clambered up on the boulder but slipped into the crack and couldn't get out. The foot-wide crack narrowed to a few inches where his feet were lodged. A friend alerted authorities.

"He pinned himself in such a tight ravine from his waist down that it twisted his feet, pinned his knees," rescuer Don Roy said. "Every time he would breathe in and out, he would shift a little bit further down."

Had he slipped farther, it "would have squeezed his chest, and he wouldn't be able to breathe," Fire Inspector Henry Rodriguez said.

Rescuers put ropes around Hartness, smeared him with cooking oil and slipped him out.

Store owner's vigilance leads to arrest of security guards

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A grocery store owner caught three security guards looting his business after repeated late-night burglar alarms prompted him to conduct his own stakeout.

Dennis Meiners, hiding across the street, spotted the thieves early Tuesday coming out of his Plaza Market with duffel bags loaded with beer, wine and cash.

He called police, who later arrested the three guards. The guards are employed by Plaza Security, which is run by the J.C. Nichols Co., owner of the renowned Country Club Plaza.

David E. Felix, 24, of Fairway, Kan., Matthew D. Weinriech, 29, of Raytown, and James G. Martin, 49, of Independence, all were charged Tuesday with second-degree burglary and felony stealing.

Martin, a sergeant on the security force, was a decorated former New York City police officer, a J.C. Nichols Co. official said.

Roshann Parris, a spokeswoman for J.C. Nichols, which owns the Plaza and operates Plaza Security, said the company was very disturbed about the arrests.

"I think it's very safe to say they're very disappointed and they feel betrayed, and they're mounting an exhaustive investigation," Parris said.

The three guards had worked for the company for 18 months to three years and had no prior police records. Plaza Security employs 45 officers, who go through an extensive background check, hours of training and twice-yearly reviews, Parris said.

a sugar plum fairy doing double axels?

Chill with The Nutcracker on December 7. Order season tickets and save 75 percent on 19 cool events. Or purchase individual tickets for half-price every day.

It's a Freudian field day

The St. Petersburg State Ice Ballet's Nutcracker is a perfect way to brush up for your psychology final. The Nutcracker's storyline—a young girl dreams of a dancing (and skating) nutcracker, a sugar plum fairy, and tin soldiers—screams out for analysis.

Does the sugar plum fairy represent a repressed childhood urge? Are the evil mice—the scariest skaters since Tonya Harding—the result of severe indigestion? You make the call. Maybe you can convince your professor to give you some extra credit.

But wait! There's more: McCain Auditorium's super season also features Grease, A Chorus Line, Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat, jazz star Don Byron, Shakespeare's Measure for Measure, and 13 other great events. Order a student season ticket, and you can see it all for less than $5 per show.

Don't let the savings slip by

Buy a season ticket and save 75 percent on a year of entertainment.

You can assemble your own season of seven or more shows and save 10 percent off the student price, which is already half off regular admission.

For best seats, order before individual tickets go on sale September 2.

Call McCain at 785-532-6428

You can charge your tickets to VISA, MasterCard, or Discover. Or stop by the box office, noon to 6 p.m. weekdays.

Students search for long distance

JOHN HENDERSON
senior staff writer

Residents on the K-State campus will be hard-pressed to find better long-distance service than through K-State Telecommunications, director Fred Damkroger said.

Off campus, it's a different story, he said. Competition between AT&T, MCI and Sprint, the three largest services, is heavy and often bare of ethical standards, he said.

"It's a jungle out there," he said.

Damkroger and his staff work out of East Stadium and provide local telephone service to the campuses in Manhattan and Salina. For the residence halls, voice mail, call forwarding and call waiting also are provided without extra fees.

Telecommunications also provides long-distance service to interested students, not all of whom live on campus, Damkroger said.

Each customer is given a code number that can be used by dialing 1 plus the long distance number from a campus phone or by dialing a special number, he said.

Anyone can use it, regardless of where they live, he said. Customers just need a touch-tone phone to enter their code and the call will be billed to them, he said.

Patti Sexton, who directs student services for KSU Telecommunications, recommends the service for off-campus students who have roommates. That way when the phone bills come, the roommates don't have to figure out who made what call, she said.

"It helps protect individual students," she said. "Especially for 1-900 calls."

Alternate services can be used by on-campus residents so long as it's a system that involves dialing a special number, she said.

Damkroger said the long-distance service is provided by AT&T on a three-year contract that is reopened for bids once it runs out. He said AT&T has always provided the service.

What's more, he said, the long distance that Telecommunications sells is 25 percent less than AT&T's normal rate. Telecommunications's service is fully funded, and doesn't need to charge the higher rates, he said.

"We make a profit. We just make less profit," he said. "We don't make, and never have tried to make, a major profit from students."

The exact rates were unavailable at press time, Sexton said, but by the end of the week there will be an automated hotline in place that customers can use to find out how much a long distance call would cost.

Customers would tell a computer what number they want to dial, and it would tell them how much it would cost, she said. Once it's in place, she said, students can call 532-1200 to find out their rates.

Sexton said long distance rates are lower after 11 p.m.

Student turns computer hobby into local business

AMY BICKEL
staff reporter

A small hobby blossomed into a local business for a K-State student.

Justin Geering, senior in history and secondary education, and his friend Jonathan Wilie turned their love for computers and the Internet into more than a money-making part-time job.

Geering and Wilie started Intercan.net, a computer Internet access service, about a year ago.

"We saw other companies doing it, and we got the idea in our heads and thought 'Hey, we can do this,'" Geering said.

Geering is president of the business. Wilie, who lives in Lawrence, is a stockholder and still helps with the business through telecommunication.

Geering said the business had a lot of potential and is a great industry.

"We supply Internet access to two-thirds of K-State students and faculty. Faculty want to get hooked up at home so they can check their e-mail," he said.

The business also sells hardware to other companies and schools like Texas A&M and South Carolina State.

"It's a lot of work, but I enjoy it," Geering said. "It's a real challenge every day. You're always learning or reading new things. The market and technology is changing fast. I have to decide where to take my company with educated guesses."

To keep up with the changing technology, Geering said he reads an estimated 200-300 pages of magazines or books a week.

Also, through another local company, The Computer Shop, Geering teaches Internet classes on Tuesday and classes that are specific to the World Wide Web on Monday, Wednesday and Thursday.

He tries to keep the classes small so everyone can get personal attention. Class members have their own computers.

"A lot of people don't know how to use the Internet and get all they can out of it. If people think they can get by without the Internet or computers in general, they're sadly mistaken. Computers are used more and more all the time," Geering said.

He works an average of 80 hours a week, seven days a week trying to keep his business going.

"It's really hard to do all my studying. I'm taking three to six hours a semester, and I hope to graduate in spring next year," Geering said.

Much of his business comes from word of mouth or advertisements in The Manhattan Mercury and the Collegian. Others have found the business's Web site and called for information.

"We even had a deal with India — they found our Web page," Geering said.

He said younger and older people both were getting started on the Internet. Students like to get hooked up and e-mail parents and friends at other schools.

"It's cheaper than a phone call or letter," he said.

Bars, liquor stores must take on responsibility of carding

Congratulations Manhattan, Aggieville and K-State.

Last weekend, this town beat out every other town in the Kansas Board of Regents system. It wasn't for debate competition, football sales or quickest newspaper delivery time.

Rather, Alcoholic Beverage Control handed out 18 alcohol violations — more than Lawrence, Pittsburg, Hays and Emporia.

What does this say about K-State and this community?

Improvements must be made.

Bars and liquor stores in Manhattan must do a better job spotting fake IDs. There were 27 arrests for minor in possession of alcohol. Out of the 18 violations, 10 were from one place.

Take a tip from Scoreboard and TW Longhorn's. Those establishments pay bouncers for confiscating fake IDs. A monetary incentive might result in bouncers doing their jobs more thoroughly.

Bars should also take preventative steps to decrease the chances of underage drinkers entering illegally. Better lighting would help bouncers spot fakes. Hiring more bouncers for busy weekends, such as the weekend before school starts, would ease the burden of the people already working the doors.

Bar owners should not be concerned with revenue they might lose if underage drinkers don't frequent their business. That revenue is gained illegally and many of-age drinkers will purposely avoid a bar that is known to serve minors.

Bars should take responsibility for the age of their clientele. Bars should not rely on ABC to patrol for underage drinkers. That duty falls squarely in the lap of any responsible drinking establishment.

But the responsibility for the infractions does not just fall to the bars.

Students should also be responsible for knowing the laws and how they pertain to them.

Although it might be easy to obtain a fake ID in this town, students should resist that temptation. Showing false identification is a felony in Kansas.

Minors don't have to press their luck by attempting to enter bars illegally. There are legal alternatives, such as coffee shops and juice bars, that could prove to be just as fun.

Losing loser could salvage self-respect

How do you lose a loser?

The first step is to identify them as a loser. When you're in love, your view of people and situations can be clouded by emotion. With this in mind, it's essential to take a non emotional inventory of your relationship and its soundness.

Afterward, if there is essential stock missing from the shelves of your life, move on. There is someone out there looking for a person interested in a mature, balanced relationship. Your time should not be wasted on someone who wants nothing for you.

This is not a male-bashing kick I'm on, and I'm not a player hater by any means. There are both male and female losers, and identifying them and moving on is a must.

Keep in mind that you don't need anyone to be complete. Shop around. Be selective, and don't be the item on the shelf — be the person pushing the cart.

Take a look at people's relationship with their families. If their families avoid them, maybe you should too. If creditors are calling all day, every day, the $20 you lent them will not be a priority for them to pay back.

If they are married, separated or newly available, don't even bring your cart. Trouble is lurking around every corner in these cases. If you're looking for pain and heartache, any of these situations would be ideal.

Dating people with children is another situation where caution should be used. Dating them means spending time with their children. In most cases, you can count on dealing with the ex. If you are not prepared for these elements, you may not be ready for that relationship.

If you broke up with them once, chances are your gut feeling was right. This is the first stage of knowing things aren't right, and the person probably isn't right for you.

Find someone with the same interests as you. If you want a career and they want to spend their days hanging out, smoking, drinking and occasionally attending class, one of two things is going to happen. One is you're going to spend your energy trying to change them. The other is they will bring you down with them.

This is a key element in the identification of a loser. It's one thing to look at the positive characteristics a person has with optimism. However, if that person is not interested in utilizing and applying those characteristics, you should not be interested in that person.

If you do, slowly the wear of your efforts will show in everything you do, from school work to your personal appearance. Time devoted to one area takes time away from others.

The second of the two scenarios could also happen. In order to spend time with that person more and more frequently, you could find yourself hanging out enjoying the life of the complacent with them.

My grandpa always told me complacency means you're not going anywhere.

What you will find out after you have distanced yourself from thse people is that they will find some who share their interests and the two of them will do badly together. Knowing full well what kind of people they are, luck is all you can wish in their new relationship.

It all sounds too easy, I know. Just remember — it's a mistake if you do it again. Learning from these experiences is not only helpful but essential. When you're not looking, someone will come into your life and will be an asset as opposed to a liability. Finding that person isn't going to happen easily — it's a workout. Make a decision and stick to it. Focus on a goal, then keep your eye out.

Don't settle for a loser.

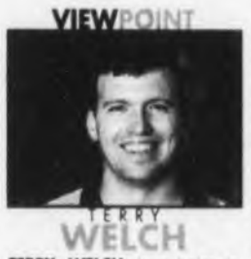
It's the WAR that's the problem, NOT THE DRUGS

The recent debate about unequal sentencing laws concerning the use of crack cocaine and powdered cocaine — critics say that harsher crack-related sentencing laws unfairly focus on blacks — have pushed the problems of the drug war back into the national spotlight.

It seems time, however, that the United States reviews the effects of the prohibition of drugs and comes to the realization that the only way to stop the problem of drugs is to legalize them.

It will never matter what the Drug Enforcement Agency or Congress do, there will always be drug users. No one can legislate desire or addiction.

As long as there are users, there will always be willing suppliers to match them. The harder government works to stem the flow of drugs to its consumers, the more valuable those drugs will be in a market with an unchanged demand.



I may have dropped most of what I learned in macroeconomics at the classroom door on the way out — it was a light bundle, I assure you — but I believe that this is one of the laws of supply and demand. When supply goes down, price goes up. When you are dealing with an illegal substance, however, it could also be said that as supply goes down, the violence associated with that product increases.

This theory was proven early in this century by Prohibition. If you think that the drive-by shooting was invented in Compton, Calif., flip through some newspapers from 1928 Chicago or check out the recent A&E documentary on the subject.

The way that Prohibition differs tragically from the drug war is that most of the violence surrounding the drug trade is enacted upon and committed by relative innocents. Your money keeps that cycle going.

The first thing you should know about drug policy is that the tax dollars supporting its enforcement are being wasted. This is a bipartisan belief. Newt Gingrich admitted recently to a group of African-American Republicans that the $300 billion (his number) spent on the drug war since 1982 has done nothing but jail a generation of urban blacks.

VIEWPOINT

TERRY WELCH

TERRY WELCH is a junior in radio/TV. You can send your e-mail comments to Terry at tlw1915@ksu.edu.

William F. Buckley, who estimates that $75 billion of public money is used to fight drugs annually, wrote in National Review that drug policy enforcement is not only futile, but is also "responsible for most of the ills associated with America's 'drug problem.'" Baltimore Mayor Kurt Schmoke and former Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders, among others have agreed with this assessment.

Another economic principle is at work here — the concept of opportunity costs. That means, simply put, what we could have done with our money if we hadn't been using it to fight drugs. In a time when public school teachers are paid less than garbage collectors, imagine what $40 billion could do for education. Think of the hope we could have purchased by investing in urban renewal projects, addiction treatment centers or college scholarships for low-income families.

Instead, we have invested tax dollars worse than uselessly, providing an economic force to ensure the street value of illicit drugs and a reason for gang members to continue slaughtering each other.

Our current get-tough policies of passing stricter sentencing laws and removing the means of rehabilitation from prisons show just how confused our culture is about drugs. To imply that criminals are beyond rehabilitation, but drug users, especially those addicted to drugs, should be able to "just say no" is ludicrous.

Legalization would eliminate the need for street drugs, the quality of which is responsible for most deaths directly related to their use. It can be reasonably expected that gang violence would fade, if not disappear altogether, making cities safer for everyone.

Those who would say that drug abuse would increase should understand that, according to Buckley, 80 million people have used drugs without making them a habit. It should also be pointed out that use does not equal abuse. Not every person who drinks alcohol is an alcoholic.

Laws should be designed, as they are with alcohol, to punish problem users and keep drugs out of the hands of children.

If people want to use drugs in their own homes, that's fine with me, but because drugs are illegal, I and my family are placed in harm's way. And I'm paying for the privilege of being there.

Quest for knowledge difficult in old Farrell Library

After years of searching, answers are finally found in the renovated library

To me, this is the place where just a few years ago I would find out whether books could be easily borrowed, or if I would be better off purchasing books from the local bookstore.

It's at this place students would find trouble understanding the system.

This place is Farrell Library, folks. Starting last summer, at least, the building opened its doors officially to me.

It was only earlier this decade, in my first semester here, that I had the honor of visiting the library to complete an Expository Writing I assignment. I was dazed and confused when I tried to comprehend the complex library system.

The help was there, but how many times could I ask the friendly supervisors questions before they weren't so friendly anymore? After some time, I felt like I was quizzing the administrators to see if they knew how the library functioned.

The bewildering, gloomy library stacks suffocated me and made me practically experience asthma attacks — and I don't even have asthma. Hours later, the crisis eventually ended when I coerced a student worker to get the books. The moment was splendid. Things made sense after that.

I had to visit the library again for a class project during my senior year. Much to my surprise, the exact same computer system was in place. I felt as if I had gone back in time four years.

There were new people around, with the exception of one — a senior citizen who worked at the reception desk. The lighting was dim — probably because the sun was too bright outside. The carpet was the same. There was some cleaning done, but otherwise, the same problems that ailed the library four years earlier still existed.

I felt betrayed. My four years of out-of-state tuition went nowhere as far as the library was concerned. This time, I had spent nearly half the time from my previous visit looking for books.

Finally, to my elation, I heard one day during my senior year the library was going to be modified.

Construction was to begin soon. Parking lots were going to be removed. Halls were to be demolished. The library border was going to be extended. This project, my fellow K-Staters, was an admirable way for K-State to enter the new millennium.

Through delays and budget extensions, the library has indeed turned out to be an outstanding monument.

For those of you who have not yet had the opportunity to stop by the library, you should do so. It is as big inside as it looks on the outside. The carpet is new — with a fresh smell. The place is packed with computer terminals and laser printers. The lighting is perfect. There are also student helpers to assist you.

The study desks are brand new — you may still be the first one to study at one. Not to mention the vast book space the library possesses to accommodate the new books in the upcoming years. The user-friendly software at the computers also lets you search the databases of other library systems. This, my fellow students of knowledge, can with certainty be called a library.

One day this summer, when I once again had the honor to visit the library, I spent only 10 minutes searching to find the book I needed in the stacks. This is efficiency with technology at its best.

Certainly, with time I may still be able to find books more quickly and possibly try to break a record — but that's another story.

Bailey's view of homosexuality not representative of all Christians

Editor,

Kevin Bailey's column, titled "Trial of ages will not go as expected," is worthy of critical discussion. I had a series of responses to the article, including confusion, anger and finally appreciation for a portion of what I interpret as the author's argument.

In his column, Bailey uses a judge and jury as metaphors for God and society. The jury gloriously condemns a homosexual to death for his sin, while it hesitantly sentences a gossiper and a greedy executive to community service. All the jurors recognize that they have gossiped and have been greedy in the past. In the end, the judge condemns all sinners to death.

On the positive side, I think Bailey offers a compelling criticism of the gay-bashing movement. As I understand the author's point, one who believes that homosexuality is a sin should not be casting stones.

According to Christian teachings, each of us commits sin. Therefore, those who condemn others based on religious principles are clearly hypocrites.

Bailey's beliefs and rhetoric, however, openly perpetuate the anti-homosexual currents running through our campus and our society. I encourage all Christians to critically examine the assumption that homosexuality constitutes sin.

The Bible is certainly not clear on this point. The story of Sodom and Gomorrah is only one example of a misinterpretation perpetuated by the Christian right.

I also have never met someone who could explain to me how love can be a sin, especially when two people are in a long-term, monogamous relationship.

If some Christians continue to view homosexuality as a sin, I merely encourage them not to have intercourse with people of their own sex. Do not impose your dehumanizing moral code on others through your rhetoric or your laws.

Using the words gay, queer or fag in a derogatory manner perpetuates misunderstanding and hatred. Supporting legislation such as the Defense of Marriage Act undermines family values by discouraging gays and lesbians from entering long-term, monogamous relationships where a family can be created out of love.

Finally, for those who look forward to a day when gay bashing is considered to be as reprehensible as racism, I encourage you to join the Progressive Coalition to work for common-sense change on our campus, in our society and in our government. The Progressive Coalition will have a meeting at 8 p.m. Tuesday in Union 204.

Stop the hate.

Planners expect high numbers to attend Million Woman March

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Organizers said they expect a huge crowd of black women in Philadelphia Oct. 25 for a rally designed to recapture the spirit of the Million Man March in Washington two years ago.

Starting a network of black independent schools, helping black women released from prisons and encouraging black female entrepreneurs are among the goals, Zola Aminata, national spokeswoman for the march, said at a news conference Wednesday.

"We are sisters who are concerned," Aminata said. "Women are in crisis in general. Any woman living in this society is dealing with at least one of the problems we plan to address."

Details on the planned march are murky at this point. South African activist Winnie Mandela is the only speaker who has been announced.

Aminata said the organizing group met with Rep. Maxine Waters, D-Calif., chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, and expected her cooperation.

However, Waters, who was contacted after the news conference, said she hasn't met with anyone from the group. She said she will not support the effort until she determines whom the organizers represent, who will finance the march and whether people will be charged to attend.

"It might be a wonderful event, but I've asked them for information and I haven't received a thing," Waters said. "I can't do something like that willy-nilly."

The lack of announced speakers did nothing to dampen the enthusiasm of the 15 women at the news conference, many dressed African-style, who said the march would help start a new era of activism.

"I have great expectations that once we network in Philadelphia, we will return to our communities to resolve the problems," said Tisa Mitchell, a secretary at the Housing and Urban Development Department.

Aminata said a national network of 25 separate local organizing committees is helping to coordinate the event.

Asked whether women of other races and ethnicity would be welcomed, Aminata said that for now, the march would be focused on women of African descent and that women from other groups should organize among themselves if they want to combat societal ills.

The planned Philadelphia march isn't the first time women have sought to duplicate the 1995 Million Man March in Washington, a largely successful march and rally organized by Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan, that drew hundreds of thousands of participants.

Female activists in Los Angeles organized what was billed as a Million Woman March last June and met with limited success.

Los Angeles police officials refused to grant a permit for the event, citing confusion and disorganization by its planners. About 1,000 people attended the event.

Food fight! The running of the tomatoes in Spain

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EDITOR'S NOTE : The eastern Spanish town of Bunol draws an ever-larger crowd for the frenzy that is its annual tomato food fight, filling the streets ankle-deep with the pulp of 1 million tomatoes. Associated Press Andrew Selsky reporter donned old clothes and swim goggles to report from the front line.

BUNOL, Spain — The throng around me jumps up and down in unison, working itself into a frenzy, screaming, "Tomato! Tomato!"

I am wearing standard uniform for the battle that is about to begin — shorts, T-shirt, goggles. A man nearby wears a firefighter's helmet with a plastic visor. Onlookers on the balconies above, wasting no time in adding to the excitement, hurl buckets of water on those of us packed body-to-body in the streets below.

With the boom of a rocket, one of Spain's fastest-growing — and weirdest — festivals is under way.

I'm here to report on the annual Tomatina festival, which this year has attracted journalists from as far away as Japan and South Africa. The crowd is mainly teen-agers and 20-somethings, and ready for action.

The first of the six trucks carrying 137 tons of tomatoes rumbles down the street. A half-dozen people in the truck scoop up armloads of tomatoes and dump them into waiting hands. In seconds, hundreds, then thousands, of soft red missiles are whizzing through the air.

One smacks me on the side of the head. Then another hits squarely on my forehead, splattering my face and hair with pulp. The goggles protect my eyes from the acrid juice.

Everyone is being pelted, but I realize my height — 6 feet 2 inches — makes me a prime target. I duck down, and fumble for tomatoes to throw. They are quickly being trampled into salsa.

I grab a hunk of juicy tomato, rise up, and throw it randomly at some guy I've never seen before. In a wild cross fire, I am pummeled by tomatoes in return.

My hands scrabble on the pavement to snatch up more tomato. I want to get my licks in. I've got the fever now.

There is a constant squish-squish sound as tomatoes hit flesh, sending up volcanic spouts of red pulp.

Then someone notices I still have a shirt on.

"T-shirt!" he yells. Several hands grasp the shirt and pull in different directions. It comes off in pieces. Women, knowing they will lose their shirts, wear swimsuits underneath.

The Tomatina started a half-century ago when young people from this working-class town, 25 miles west of the Mediterranean city of Valencia, hurled tomatoes at some rich kids whose parents had vacation homes nearby.

About 20 years earlier, the town fathers had canceled bullfights that were part of annual festivals, believing them to be cruel. Throwing tomatoes at each other seemed like a good alternative.

Over the years, word of Bunol's food fight spread. Spaniards from elsewhere in the region, then from afar, joined in.

But since the international media discovered the Tomatina in recent years, its popularity has boomed.

RISING STAR
WOMACK REALIZES HER DREAM OF BECOMING A PERFORMER

CHRIS DEAN
news editor

A rising star will be watching her dreams come true in Fort Riley on Sept. 20.

Lee Ann Womack has come a long way since the days when she went to the radio station with her disc jockey father and dreamed of becoming a star. Womack is on tour opening for such acts as George Strait and Clay Walker, for whom she will open at Fort Riley, and she is watching her music climb the charts on the Decca Records label.

The 30-year-old Jacksonville, Texas, native started out the hard way by enrolling in the music business program at Belmont University in Nashville. From there she entered the music industry as an intern at MCA records.

After a short break to get married and start a family, Womack returned to music as a songwriter and singer. She concentrated on her songwriting and one of her own songs, "Am I the only thing you've done wrong?," is featured on her own compact disc.

After signing a contract with Decca Records, Womack quickly soared into the spotlight. Her first single, "Never Again, Again," was placed on Billboard's Hot Country Singles and Tracks the week before its official release date of March 10.

Critics are comparing her vocal styles to such traditional country artists as Dolly Parton, Loretta Lynn and Reba McEntire.

"Those were the women that were popular while I was growing up," Womack said. "They really knew what they were singing about, and they sang from the heart. I hope that is the comparison people are making with me."

Womack began her national tour July 4, just one month after her Grand Ole Opry debut in Nashville and two months after the release of her self-titled CD, which was released one month ahead of its scheduled date.

Her tour consists of fairs, festivals and military bases across the South and Midwest. Womack said her concerts include a mix of traditional country and swing music.

"When I say swing, I mean both the expected Western swing and swing from the '40s and '50s. We are also working on a Dean Martin song," she said.

Between concerts, Woma keeps busy taking care of her 6-year-old daughter, Aubrie. Because Womack home schools her daughter, Aubrie goes on tour with Womack, which can sometimes be difficult.

Humor, ambiguity combine in Willard Gallery

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior writer

Looking at the work of artist Carl Grupp is like listening to the artist's laugh.

Both are rich, heavy and intensely full — revealing a lifetime of creative development apparent in both Grupp's personal and artistic accomplishments.

Grupp, art department head at Augustana College in Sioux Falls, S.D., is the featured artist in the Willard Gallery's first show of the school year. The show closes Sept. 12.

To local art enthusiasts, Grupp's work is sure to remind one of the prints and drawings of Jim Munce, associate professor of art. Munce, who shows regularly at Strecker Gallery, has most recently developed a rich series of prints based on a story of St. Francis restoring a cathedral. Grupp last showed at K-State in the late 1970s.

The same sumptuous detail and attention to narrative found in Munce's work is equally realized in Grupp's. Is it any surprise, then, Grupp and Munce have been close friends since 1953?

In the pen and ink drawing "Nero's Nightmare" (1992-93), Grupp presents a cast of characters, including himself, his dog, a nude female figure, and a duck, framed in a circus context. The characters represent autobiographical subjects of his life and are found in nearly all of the other drawings.

This grouping in "Nightmare" is balanced confusion, with ambiguous double images suggesting the passage of time or motion and notes in pencil suggesting the work confronts pollution and waste: "Do you ever wonder what to do? While the world runs out of fossil fuel."

But how serious is Grupp about this political message? He admits to the outrageousness of some of his work and points to his early influence from cartoonists as explanation.

"I grew up with comic strips like the early Mad comic books," he said. "I always put little signs in the background like they did — little rewards if you look close. I'd like people to be able to look at my work and have a lot of fun and maybe something to think about."

The fascination with the life of the circus, albeit most obviously a Picasso influence, also comes from the artist's love of Fellini and early Bergman films. The ambiguous nature of the work owes to his love of jazz and its improvisational style.

Color doesn't play a large role in his drawings and feels a bit unwelcome when it is applied, but Grupp doesn't shy away from using color in two oil paintings included more for fun than purpose.

"Monk's Dream" and "Oooops" require the use of special 3-D glasses to fully appreciate, as both paintings were made with the intention of illustrating for his students the concept of regression and projection of colors. Grupp was trained as an abstract expressionist and apparently it all hasn't quite left his system.

The pen and ink drawing "Self-Portrait with Bessie" illustrates

"Of course it was easy for the media to identify us with dope. We did exemplify a generation that grew up with that, and first impressions are the most gullible. So we never fought it. You want to identify us with dope? Cool." — Cheech Marin, denying that he and partner Tommy Chong celebrated the use of marijuana in their movies and tapes.

"All you can do in filmmaking is somehow just raise the standards of everything — of audience expectations, of the material, of finding what you're trying to say." — Ridley Scott, director of "Blade Runner," "Alien" and "Thelma and Louise." His latest film is "G.I. Jane," starring Demi Moore.

Graves may upgrade state parks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Gov. Bill Graves plans to recommend a multimillion-dollar upgrade of Kansas' park system.

No figure has been settled on, spokesman Mike Matson said Wednesday, but Graves could propose that the Legislature appropriate as much as $10 million to improve the 24 state parks — in addition to the Parks Division's annual $6 million budget.

Graves disclosed to the editorial board of The Wichita Eagle this week that he intends to recommend the money.

Matson said Steve Williams, secretary of the Department of Wildlife and Parks, will refine the proposal and develop a total amount to be sought.

The governor's recommendation, based on conclusions of the Wildlife and Parks Commission's Task Force on Outdoor Kansas, would be used to upgrade camping utilities, repair toilets and showers and bring the parks into compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

Wildlife and Parks has an annual operation and maintenance budget of $28 million. Of that, the Parks Division operates with $6 million — $3 million derived from park fees and $3 million from the state's general fund.

"I'm very excited that the governor has indicated that kind of support for the department's programs and more importantly for park patrons and other folks involved in outdoor recreation," Williams said Tuesday.

"And when our folks hear it out in the field, it couldn't help but boost morale. They've been struggling for years and years, trying to make ends meet, and this would be a tremendous infusion of money."

Williams emphasized that the new money would be used only to upgrade or repair items identified by the task force.

"All we're talking about is taking care of what we have without further expansion," he said.

Matson said state government is benefiting from a good economy, which gives Graves flexibility to address problems like those in state parks.

The parks' maintenance budgets have been underfunded for years, and many of them sustained severe flood damage in 1993.

The 13-member task force was created in late 1995 to identify problems and seek alternative funding sources to correct those problems. The group involved Wildlife and Parks Commission members, lake associations, business people and park users.

Earlier this year, the task force issued a report outlining capital improvement needs for each of the parks.

Tom Warner of Manhattan, chairman of the task force, said Graves supported the group's findings and wanted to seek ways to make the necessary repairs.

"He is an individual that is supportive of a quality environment, and a quality living experience," Warner said. "This has been tried in the past, and it just never took hold. I think our approach has worked, and we've come up with very viable recommendations."

Chemistry professor studies chemical sensors

MATT KREPS
staff writer

A K-State chemistry professor is doing research that could lead to better chemical sensors.

Maryanne Collinson, an electrochemist, is studying the properties of a special group of porous gels that form high-purity glasses when dried.

The gels, known as sol-gels, are made of organic and inorganic substances. When the individual molecules are mixed in the proper proportions, they form long chains in a process known as polymerization. The chains become a gel material. When exposed to air, the gel dries into a porous glass.

"This has been around since the 1800s, actually," Collinson said.

It was not until the 1900s that sol-gels became popular as a form of high-purity glass. More recently, science has turned to the materials as possible sensors for the future.

Special chemical compounds can be attached to the chains in the polymerization process. These compounds will react with certain substances found in the environment or manufacturing processes.

By measuring the chemical reaction, scientists might be able to test for toxic chemicals, pesticides or substance purity in the future.

"Our goal is to get something that is selective, very specific," Collinson said.

Using the gels to be hosts for sensors could also reduce cost and waste. Since the gels harden to a glass, they could be reused for several tests if the indication reaction is reversible.

"We don't want to generate a lot of waste, we want to reuse things," Collinson said.

Actual use as a sensor is still well in the future. Right now, Collinson's research focuses on the properties of the gel. Her research group is studying properties such as pore size, polymer connectivity and how stable the glasses are in solution.

The goal is to find out how to make better hosts for the sensor chemicals, Collinson said.

One problem with using the material as a sensor is that the gel changes with time. This makes it important to understand the material so the sensor will be reliable, Collinson said.

Collinson hopes to be producing working sensors in five to 10 years.

Once the properties are understood and working sensors are developed, producing the gels should be relatively simple, Collinson said.

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian

MARYANNE COLLINSON recently was awarded a four-year grant to study the reaction of molecules in glass. Collinson has been teaching in the Department of Chemistry for three years.

Federal, state cuts mean welfare benefits limited; social-service agencies brace for winter months

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DODGE CITY, Kan. — Private social service agencies in southwest Kansas are bracing for a flood of aid requests, particularly from legal immigrants, in the wake of cuts in state and federal welfare.

The reforms limit the amount of benefits and the length of time people can receive them. Last October, Kansas began enforcing the federal changes, and private organizations have been trying to fill the gaps.

With winter coming, many agencies fear running out of resources.

Legal immigrants, who can work and live in the United States but are not citizens, are particularly affected. They lose access to food stamps if they haven't been working in the United States for at least 10 years.

Last year about 26,000 legal immigrants were on public assistance in Kansas, which was about 1.7 percent of all recipients. Southwest Kansas, with a large immigrant population, will be especially hard hit.

"We're going to start seeing more and more people coming in," said Martha Archuleta of Garden City's Harvest America. "They're going to start coming to us, and to other nonprofit agencies like the churches, for help."

Donna Sanchez-Jennings, a development worker with Liberal's Mexican-American Ministries, said her group already is seeing an increase.

"Ever since the reform went through, our work has increased," she said. "We're pedaling along and hoping to get by."

Agencies say the problem goes beyond higher demand for food to the overall effect of a drop in family income. Many entry-level jobs pay little and lack health benefits, prompting people to seek private groups' help for everything from food and medical care to school supplies.

For the Hamilton County Food Pantry, local support has smoothed problems, according to director Lenore Dikeman.

"We've got an ideal situation here," she said. "The people in Hamilton County have always been generous. I think if more communities did that, there wouldn't be as much of a problem."

Cooperation has also helped Mexican-American Ministries.

"It's not a big problem yet because in Liberal we've always been well set up," Sanchez-Jennings said.

Coordination with other agencies, such as the Salvation Army, has helped, she said.

For Harvest America, resources are tight, Archuleta said.

"We're afraid we're not going to have enough resources with winter coming," she said. "Last year we ran into a situation where we couldn't keep up with help for utility expenses. We're going to be seeing them not just for utility help, but also nutritional help."

The welfare changes might help increase the emphasis on programs that help families become more self-sufficient.

For example, while Harvest America has a food pantry and other types of short-term help, its focus is more on helping end families' dependence on aid, Archuleta said. That includes things such as helping with budgets, education and employment and encouraging clients to prepare for, and take, the U.S. citizenship test.

Government promotes voluntary warning labels

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON D.C. — The government wants makers of unpasteurized apple juice and cider to voluntarily warn customers that the drinks are not treated to kill dangerous E. coli bacteria — meaning children, the elderly and people with weak immune systems could be at risk.

Some cider-makers criticized the move.

"Why stir up a storm when it has been pretty quiet?" asked Bill Aeppler of Oconomowoc, Wis., who sold 80,000 gallons of unpasteurized cider last year. He said many consumers don't know what E coli is.

Only a small share of the nation's apple juice is not heat-treated to kill potentially deadly bacteria such as E. coli. At issue are fresh juices, sold mostly as trendy, gourmet brands or at roadside cider stands.

The Food and Drug Administration's call for voluntary warning labels comes after an E. coli outbreak in unpasteurized apple juice a year ago killed a child and sickened 66 other people.

A significant industry group called the request prudent.

Rick Kimes of Kimes Cider Mill in Bendersville, Pa., said he had no intention of adding warning labels. "I wasn't even aware of E. coli being in cider," he said.

The FDA hopes to combat that lack of E. coli awareness with an education campaign for cider-makers and consumers that will run next month.

And the government said the call for voluntary warnings was a first step, taken just as the fall apple season starts. Later this fall, the FDA said, it will propose stronger federal regulations that could force makers of all unpasteurized juices, not just apple drinks, to take new safety steps.

The voluntary warning labels could come in the form of stickers on bottles, placards at roadside cider stands or consumer leaflets distributed with each cup, Julia Daly of the U.S. Apple Association said. The apple association is preparing such labels so small companies won't have to undergo the expense.

Meanwhile, the FDA is preparing to propose federal regulations requiring makers of all unpasteurized juices to adopt stringent new safety steps that track juices from harvest to grocery store. The program may force companies to take some bacteria-killing processing steps. Full pasteurization or the quicker "flash pasteurization" method aren't the only options; fruit also could be rinsed in chemicals or steamed.

And pasteurization, Kimes argues, destroys cider's distinctive tangy taste and turns it into traditional apple juice.

But one small cider-maker who quietly began "flash pasteurizing" after last year's outbreak says consumers are demanding change.

McCutcheon's Apple Products of Frederick, Md., didn't immediately label its cider as flash-pasteurized for fear that customers who demand an "all-natural" cider wouldn't buy. But now, says Robert McCutcheon III, customers are so scared of E. coli that they don't mind the slight change in flavor

Court grants McVeigh's request for new attorney

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — An appeals court on Wednesday replaced Stephen Jones as lead attorney for Timothy McVeigh with another member of the defense team.

McVeigh had wanted Jones off the case, contending the attorney had told him a series of lies and "screwed up badly."

Jones denied the allegations but said last week he, too, wanted off the case. He said McVeigh had become so angry and self-destructive that he felt he could no longer represent him.

In a two-page ruling, the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals appointed Robert Nigh Jr., already a member of McVeigh's legal team, to handle his appeal.

In a statement issued from his office in Enid, Okla., Jones said: "An enormous professional responsibility and burden has been lifted from me and, for the first time in 2 1/2 years, my life is again my own and I have returned, as I said I would, to the practice of law in Oklahoma."

A secretary at Nigh's Denver office said he was unavailable for comment, and there was no answer at his home or office in Tulsa, Okla. Prosecutors declined comment.

McVeigh, 29, was sentenced to die for the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. The blast killed 168 people and injured more than 500 others.

Co-defendant Terry Nichols is scheduled to stand trial Sept. 29 on identical charges of murder and conspiracy.

Jones was appointed McVeigh's counsel on May 8, 1995, but his relationship with his client apparently deteriorated earlier this year.

In a series of interviews published in The Buffalo (N.Y.) News this month, McVeigh said his frustration with Jones grew after The Dallas Morning News published a story shortly before his trial began that said McVeigh had claimed responsibility for the bombing.

After he was convicted in June, McVeigh wrote to U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch, saying he would prefer that Nigh, Richard Burr and Randall Coyne handle his appeal. All three were part of the defense team led by Jones.

The appeals court agreed to compensate Nigh at a rate of $125 an hour and said he could decide whether to request any additional attorneys be appointed to the case.

In a related development, Michael Tigar, Nichols' defense attorney, filed another motion in U.S. District Court seeking to remove U.S. Attorney Patrick Ryan of western Oklahoma from the Nichols' case.

On Aug. 14, the day after Matsch refused to remove Ryan from the case, Tigar said Ryan hired attorney Randal Sengel of Norman, Okla., from a private law firm that has been involved in representing bombing victims and planning memorial activities.

Tigar requested a new hearing on the motion.

Council. She will supervise the Office of Student Activities and Services which includes the SGA, University Activities Board and Student Legal Services and Consumer and Tenant Affairs.

Jon Kulaga, new assistant dean of student life, is optimistic about the effect Spencer will have at K-State.

"Kansas State University will benefit at the student and national level from her expertise," Kulaga said. "She has a lot of experience."

Spencer received her bachelor's in business administration at the University of Nebraska at Omaha and her masters in college student personnel at the University of Western Illinois in Macomb, Ill.

The differences that Spencer sees between K-State and her previous job at Notre Dame are the living situation and enrollment numbers.

"There are more students that live on campus at Notre Dame," she said.
That would not be quite as unusual if the enrollment numbers for the Irish were higher, since K-State has almost twice itsnumber of students.

Professionally, she has served as the campus activities adviser at the University of Houston and prior to K-State served as the assistant director of student activities and programming at the University of Notre Dame.

TOMATOES

Russians, Americans, Britons and other foreigners who had seen TV coverage on the Tomatina were elbow-to-elbow with Spaniards on Wednesday, flinging tomatoes.

About 30,000 people attended this year, a third more than last year. Town hall spent about $14,000 on tomatoes.

After an hour, another rocket explodes, signaling an end to the town's tomato tumult.

The muck is ankle deep. Everyone is so covered in red that it looks like some hellish disaster had occurred.

"It's fantastic! Wild! It's unique in the world," exclaims Sam Armour, a 26-year-old Englishwoman who, on normal days, works as an advertising executive in London.

Hoses spray down the spent revelers and the stained walls. The red hour is over — until next year.

Wanted ONE STARTING QUARTERBACK

BY SUN DEE MILLS

JOHATHAN BEASLEY took the field against Nebraska on Oct. 5 after talking to Coach Bill Snyder. Sophomore quarterback Beasley will be one of the choices for this year's starting quarterback position.

There's no question about the quarterback candidates stepping up and making themselves known. All three players have done so, plus one dark horse who put himself back in the running. And that is making Coach Bill Snyder's job harder than ever.

"I'm pleased with all three," Snyder said in Tuesday's Big 12 coaches teleconference. "It's not an easy decision. It's not clear cut."

What is clear cut is Snyder's thinking that each one could do the job.

"In all honesty, all are capable guys," Snyder said. "They have their good days and bad days. They must show consistency and can't have one good day and one bad day."

However, Snyder said the foggy situation is coming into focus. He hoped they would have a decision perhaps as soon as today or Friday, so the week before the first game at Northern Illinois could be spent getting used to the new man.

"I knew we had to have a decision," Snyder said. "It's hard to go into game time without a decision. I've set a timetable toward the end of the week."

One thing is certain: Each man hopes to be the man for the job.

Jonathan Beasley

The only quarterback with Big 12 game experience, sophomore Jonathan Beasley stands out of the crowd with Wildcat game stats.

"I have a little more playing time, so that will help out, but we're all in the same thing," Beasley said. "We all have to get in the game and learn the system and get it right."

Beasley knows first-hand the pressures of the deafening stadiums and the quick decisions, and says it's all in a day's work.

"It's just something you have to deal with," Beasley said. "Not every game are you going to get in the right play every time."

Beasley impressed fans in eight games as a true freshman in 1996, and threw the season's longest pass for a 57-yard touchdown play against Indiana State. He said he owed a lot to former Cat quarterback Brian Kavanagh.

"Kav really helped me out," Beasley said. "He said to ask if I ever had any questions on stipulations in a route or making sure of what to do on a play."

Starting for the purple team at the spring game, Beasley contributed on both offenses. He threw 11 completed passes, including one touchdown pass, and rushed for 40 yards.

"After the spring game, I was more confident in what I could do," Beasley said. "It helped my confidence a lot that I went out and moved the No. 1 and No. 2 offenses well."

Having the most practical knowledge of the playbook, Beasley said he's focusing on pinpointing the target.

"I just have to be more accurate and get the plays and checks down right," Beasley said. "Accurate as in putting it right where it has to be."

If Beasley doesn't win the battle, it's very possible he could be redshirted. Although he very much wants the starting nod, Beasley said he could live with that.

"If I have to redshirt, I can help the team longer, which would ultimately help the team more," Beasley said.

Anyone can play role of Jerry Jones in fantasy football

SAM FELSENFELD
staff writer

Tim Shearer, senior in milling science and management, takes classes during the day just like 20,000 other K-State students.

But once he's finished with his course work, that all changes. Then it's on to his other role — running a professional football team. Shearer calls all the shots — from draft-day decisions to free-agent pickups and making trades.

He has to keep a constant eye on every NFL player. Some are on his team and playing well. Others need to be traded. And then there are some he needs to play on his side.

It's a lot of pressure. One player can make the difference between winning and losing, and Shearer knows this. That's why he watches so closely.

And if he's lucky enough to win it all, sort of like the Green Bay Packers did last year, the big money starts rolling in.

In Shearer's case, that's around $100.

Welcome to the world of fantasy football, where people who would never have the chance to run a real NFL team can prove they know more about on-field personnel than Kansas City Chiefs general manager Carl Peterson.

"The big thing I like about it is that it gets you more into the football season," Shearer said. "I'm not a fan of the Broncos, but if I've got Terrell Davis as my running back, I want to see him every time he carries the ball."

There are thousands of leagues out there, all run differently, but most have similar principles.

All participants have their own teams. Usually there is a draft, and team managers select the players they want from the remaining pool. Other leagues have a salary cap, so more than one person can have a particular superstar.

Either way, it's not possible to have the best players available, so talent evaluation of second-rate players goes a long way toward a fantasy football team's success.

Winning a fantasy football league depends on point accumulation. Individual players receive points for their actual on-field performances, and the team with the highest score wins.

Most leagues only use quarterbacks, wide receivers, tight ends, running backs and kickers, because it's too difficult to get statistics for defensive players and offensive linemen.

Selecting players can be tricky, because although a player might be a real-life superstar at his position, he could be a fantasy dud. Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman is a prime example of this.

Very few football fans will deny that Aikman is one of the better quarterbacks in the NFL — he led the Cowboys to three Super Bowl titles in four years.

However, the Cowboys are notorious for putting the ball in running back Emmitt Smith's hands when they get inside the red zone, thereby stripping Aikman of touchdown passes and his fantasy football value.

Selecting a league can also be tricky. The prices on leagues vary. CNN-SI is offering a free fantasy football league on its World Wide Web page, Shearer will pay $25 to play this year, and several national leagues cost more than $100 to enter.

The rewards also vary, though. Jason Pomeroy, a Manhattan resident and former K-State student, is paying a $35 entry fee this year with hopes of claiming the $175 jackpot. On the other hand, some of the larger leagues have grand prizes of more

Unanswered questions surround teams

VIEWPOINT

CRESTON KUENZI

CRESTON KUENZI is a senior in computer engineering. You can send your e-mail comments to Creston at creston@ksu.edu.

We are about to embark on one of the most critical years in K-State athletics history.

There are so many unanswered questions, so many doubts, so many possibilities.

For instance, will this be a rebuilding year for the football team or a reloading year? The ability to reload year after year separates the perennial powerhouses from the boys.

Coach Bill Snyder has often said he doesn't like the term reloading. Instead, he prefers to think of it as improving year after year. With the loss of eight defensive starters and six offensive starters from last year's team, the word reloading seems appropriate.

Another bowl appearance is a given at this point, especially considering the three lackluster nonconference opponents. However, a six- or seven-win season and a date at the Copper Bowl would be a big step backward for a program looking for a Big 12 Championship.

The women's volleyball team faces a unique situation this year.

When Jim Moore took over as coach three years ago, the Wildcats had just finished a three-year stretch with a combined record of 0-36 in the Big 8.

Last year, Moore led the Cats to a 26-9 record, a No. 24 ranking and their first-ever NCAA Tournament appearance. That completed, perhaps, the second most impressive turnaround in K-State sports history.

The reins have now been handed over to Coach Jim McLaughlin, who left his assistant coaching position at the University of Notre Dame to take over the Cats. The big question is, will McLaughlin and the Cats be able to pick up where Moore left off?

With the return of four starters from last year's team, the transition looks as if it'll be a smooth one.

The men's basketball team has also reached a crucial point in the Tom Asbury era. The Cats suffered with a dismal 10-17 record last year, including a 3-13 mark in the Big 12.

That leads us to ask, can the Cats claw themselves out of the cellar and into the middle of the pack, or will they remain stranded in mediocrity?

The Cats will be an experienced team with the loss of only three players from last year's squad. The problem is that experience doesn't always translate into wins.

The women's basketball team will enter this season with a little more optimism than the men's.

In her first year, Coach Deb Patterson took the Big 12 by storm and brought a lot of success and excitement to K-State. Last year's impressive run included a second-place finish in the conference tournament and the first berth into the NCAA Tournament in 10 years.

Now, can the Cats vie for the Big 12 Championship?

It's not going to be easy with the loss of Andria Jones and Missy Decker, who combined to provide solid leadership and a significant portion of the statistics.

The Cats do have senior Brit Jacobson returning to take over the leadership role. They also added a solid recruiting class that looks to step in and contribute right away, so the conditions are right for another big step forward.

Similar questions abound for the cross country teams, the tennis team, the baseball team and basically every sport at K-State.

So sit back and enjoy the show because with so many questions yet to be answered, it's sure to be an entertaining year in Wildcat land.

Tennis tryouts

The tennis team will be conducting walk-on tryouts 3 p.m. Tuesday, at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area tennis courts. Interested women should call Coach Steve Bietau at 532-7198.

LETHRIDGEleader

LUBBOCK, Texas — When Texas Tech and No. 5 Tennessee meet Saturday, a quarterback already among his school's all-time best at his position will trot into Neyland Stadium to begin his fourth year as a starter.

Peyton Manning? Nope.

He's Zebbie Lethridge, Tech's mobile, strong-armed leader who is being counted on more than ever following the departure of star tailback Byron Hanspard and the rest of the team's depth in the backfield.

"Zebbie needs to have a great year, and we have all the confidence in the world in Zebbie," four-year center Jay Pugh said. "We know what he does and he knows what we do."

While outsiders haven't always considered Lethridge an elite quarterback, he's admired by his peers and opposing coaches, who named him to the Big 12's second all-conference team last winter.

Red Raiders coach Spike Dykes has been driving Lethridge's public relations bandwagon all summer.

"I think, certainly, he will be everything we ever thought he would be this year," Dykes said. "And, I think this, his senior year, all the leadership and all the hard work will pay off. He is the most fierce competitor I have ever coached."

TERRY'Squest

LAWRENCE, — Let the Terry Allen era begin.

Kansas launches its 108th season of college football Thursday night under its 34th head coach, a 22-year veteran of the Division I-AA program at Northern Iowa.

The theoretically overmatched opponent is Alabama-Birmingham, launching its seventh season of college football and its second at the Division I-A level.

No doubt, the Blazers remember Kansas well. Three years ago, as a I-AA team, they traveled to Lawrence and absorbed the third-worst whipping any Jayhawk team ever dished out — 72-0.

"The frightful thing is ... embarrassment can fuel a lot of fires," Allen said.

CORNYschedule

LINCOLN, Neb. — Why is No. 6 Nebraska, which won back-to-back titles in 1994 and 1995, opening against Akron, a Mid-American Conference team that went 4-7 last year?

Coach Tom Osborne said the Cornhuskers' 36-game winning streak at home may frighten potential opponents. Not so, said the University of Southern California, which wants Nebraska to promise to play there before it will commit to playing here.

Unwilling to give up a home game in future schedules, Nebraska ends up tuning up for No. 3 Washington by playing Sept. 13 against Central Florida and on Saturday against the Zips in a big mismatch.

Osborne said Tuesday the Huskers had tentative agreements from Arkansas, USC and Utah to play this weekend, but those teams backed out.

USC and Utah officials discounted the claim, saying they never negotiated to play Nebraska this season.

Players appreciate fans at Fan Appreciation Day

JEFF PALMER
staff writer

As evidenced by the enormous line at Ahearn Field House for ticket pickup Monday, K-State students are ready to show their support for the Wildcat football team.

The football team wants to return the favor by showing its support and appreciation for the fans at Fan Appreciation Day this afternoon at KSU Stadium.

At 4:30 p.m. in the west parking lot, fans can gather for free hot dogs donated by Flint Hills Foods.

At this time, schedule posters of the Wildcats and magnets will be available to fans. Willie the Wildcat will be roaming the parking lot greeting fans and taking pictures.

"This is my fourth year, and there always is quite a crowd," Jennifer Keller, Sports Information assistant, said. "Each year it gets a little bigger."

Keller said the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is expecting a few thousand people to come out and support the football team.

Fan Appreciation Day is not just for the students, however. Local residents and alumni can come out and enjoy the festivities.

At 5:30 p.m., the gates to the football field will open. Fans will be able to watch the end of the Cats' practice. Since Coach Bill Snyder routinely closes off practice to the public, this will be a treat.

"This is my first year up here, and they have a good team, but I couldn't get tickets," Jason Shearer, freshman in mechanical engineering said.

"I'm going to go watch the practice because it may be my only chance to see them in person."

After the practice has ended, Snyder is going to speak to the fans and introduce the captains of this year's team.

When Snyder has finished speaking and the captains have been introduced, fans will be able to go on the field, talk with their favorite players, and get autographs and pictures.

"I think it will be cool to meet the players, see what they are like off the field," Shearer said. "I've heard it's real fun, so I'm going to go check it out."

than $10,000.

Regardless of the lure of the big payouts, Pomeroy is sticking with the smaller league.

"It's more fun when it's just between you and your friends," he said. "Besides, you have a lot better chances."

Aside from manning the war room during the draft and scrutinizing every box score on Monday mornings, loyalty can be one of the toughest parts of fantasy football.

What do you do if you're Shearer, and you have Denver quarterback John Elway earning points for you in crucial matchup with your favorite team — the Chiefs?

"I want my players to do well, but I want the Chiefs to win," Shearer said. "It's kind of bittersweet."

Micheal Bishop

The man discussed most but least seen took practices by storm, sending a rumored 93-yard pass from the 40-yard line into the stands.

Junior transfer player Michael Bishop has the two Blinn Community College national championships, the two undefeated seasons and the arm: Why doesn't he have the job?

The high expectations about Bishop are unfair, Snyder said.

"If we thought that all the expectations were true, he'd be our No. 1 quarterback, and we wouldn't have to go any further. There are a lot of things he still has to learn about our system," Snyder said.

Bishop said he was concentrating on putting the plays against the defense and learning the playbook. Snyder was sure Bishop had the work ethic required for the job.

"He's not afraid to work," Snyder said. "He'll spend whatever time is necessary on his own to develop the skills and the knowledge of the system."

Snyder said Tuesday that Bishop has picked up the system in last week's two-a-days better than first anticipated.

"We knew Michael was a good athlete," Snyder said. "He's proven in the last couple of days that it's true. He throws the ball extremely well. Great velocity, in fact. Mechanically, he is good."

Bishop's take-charge ability has impressed Snyder as well.

"I like his approach. I like his leadership capacity," Snyder said. "He has the ability to be a strong leader, which you want in all your quarterbacks."

Teammates like wide receiver Everett Burnett are noticing his desire to be No. 1, and are excited about the competition pushing each man to be better.

"He's a very talented quarterback," Burnett said. "He's definitely putting the heat on the other two quarterbacks, but it's still hard to say who's going to start and who's not going to start."

If it's not Bishop, he said he would be disappointed. But he could live with it.

"It wouldn't be a letdown not to start," Bishop said. "If coach doesn't think I'm ready, then I'm not ready. But through two-a-days, I hope I can prove that I'm ready."

Adam Helm

As the self-proclaimed underdog in this battle, junior Adam Helm said he's right in the running.

"I think it's a wide-open competition when we go in there," Helm said. "Whoever performs the best is going to come out on top."

Helm draws his experience from his one start for the white squad in the spring game. From that experience, he said he learned what to work on.

"I've only played in one game, and in the spring game there was a little bit of pressure," Helm said. "I've been in the weight room a lot, and spent lots of hours in the film room and talking to the coach and talking to the other players on the offense."

All the competition is working to make each competitor stronger, and Helm said he was no exception.

"I think I can run a little bit and throw a little bit and make plays. And I can take a hit," Helm said. "I need to step up and take charge. Just make plays and perform in practice."

Most people in Helm's position would be wary of their every mistake. Helm said he's not perfect, but who is?

"I don't see a margin of error," Helm said. "Everybody's going to make mistakes, and I don't see me as having a disadvantage of any type."

And as he sees it, Helm says he's in the perfect position.

"If there's any pressure, I think it's going to be on the other two guys coming in highly touted," Helm said. "Everybody's watching them to see what they can do, and I'm kind of the dark horse."

With the race drawing to a finish, Helm said he is ready. He's through with third place and wants to move up.

"I was laid back at the beginning, but I know it's time to get started," Helm said. "I'm going to come out and work hard and prove that I'm the guy."

Cody Lee Smith

To make the question even more intriguing, Cody Lee Smith has told local media outlets he is ready to step back onto the field.

All-American Smith came to K-State in 1995 from Mount San Antonio Junior College but hasn't had the chance to see game action. He developed a rare stomach disorder called rumination disease, causing him to lose anything in his stomach and his position as the next Cat quarterback.

Snyder said Tuesday that Smith could reappear on the field this season.

"I've talked to him during the summer," Snyder said. "I know that he's always had the desire to come back, but health prevented. He has a chance to do it, but he must be released by his medical department. He should be back in Manhattan and will give it a try."

Minnesota's pilot welfare project shows success for long-term clients

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. PAUL, Minn. — A Minnesota pilot welfare project that combines a work requirement with generous cash benefits shows promise for moving long-term recipients off assistance, traditionally the toughest group to help.

According to a study being released today, the program was most successful in urban areas, where long-term single parents were 39 percent more likely to be employed and 16 percent less likely to continue living in poverty. Long-term clients are those on assistance for more than two years.

"It is among the most significant efforts in the nation, and it is now proved to be so," said Deborah Huskins, assistant commissioner at Minnesota's Department of Human Services.

However, the study of 9,000 welfare recipients found the program did not move people off the welfare rolls any faster, and it cost the state $45 more per person than the old welfare program, called Aid to Families with Dependent Children.

"It's awful early to say that we have any answer to the long-term dilemma or even the medium-term dilemma," said Sid Johnson of the American Public Welfare Association.

Minnesota's welfare rolls have dropped dramatically in the past few years — down 19 percent since 1993.

But the pilot program found a way to increase employment while reducing poverty — a unique achievement, said the report by Manpower Demonstration Research Corp. of New York, a social science research firm that has evaluated dozens of welfare-to-work programs across the country.

Welfare reforms that push people into jobs often fail to pull them out of poverty because the work pays so little, the research firm explained.

The key was requiring single adults to start working within two years of receiving benefits while also allowing them to keep more of their monthly welfare check, said one of the study's authors, Virginia Knox.

Families on the pilot project received benefits until their combined incomes reached $22,470, or 40 percent above the federal poverty level, for a family of four. According to Aid to Families with Dependent Children, they would have lost assistance once their income reached about $13,600.

Minnesota increased employment and reduced poverty for people who were working, Knox said.

The project, called Minnesota Family Investment Program, has been operating since 1994 in eight counties. Lawmakers used it as a blueprint for a new statewide welfare law that takes effect in January.

Sontha Reine of Minneapolis, who has been on assistance since her husband left her with two young children five years ago, said the differences between Aid to Families with Dependent Children and the trial program were astounding.

"I was pretty much penalized for working when I was on AFDC. With day care and transportation costs, it pretty much put me in the hole," she said.

Reine, 36, now works 20 hours a month in security at the Mall of America in suburban Bloomington, earning $18 an hour. She estimates her annual income with public assistance at about $13,000 a year. And with her children now in school, she plans to look for full-time work this fall.

The increased benefits kept families on assistance longer. In their 16th month on the program, about 81 percent were still on welfare compared with 77 percent collecting Aid to Families with Dependent Children.

Former NBC programming wizard dies at age of 48

Tartikoff

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Brandon Tartikoff, the former NBC programming wizard who transformed prime-time television in the 1980s with such landmark shows as "Hill Street Blues," "L.A. Law" and "The Cosby Show," died Wednesday of Hodgkin's disease. He was 48.

Tartikoff died at UCLA Medical Center, where he had been undergoing chemotherapy. The one-time chairman of Paramount Pictures was hospitalized earlier this year after suffering his third recurrence of the disease, an often fatal cancer of the lymph nodes. He had battled it off and on since he was 23.

Tartikoff became the youngest entertainment president in network history in 1980 when he took over NBC's moribund programming at age 30. He promptly turned the lowest-rated network into the nation's most popular through groundbreaking comedies and dramas, including "Cheers," "Family Ties," "Miami Vice" and "The Golden Girls." NBC was the No. 1 network for five consecutive seasons under his leadership.

In the 1982-83 season, his first full season building the schedule from top to bottom, Tartikoff's slate included "Cheers," "Family Ties," "Knight Rider," "The A-Team" and "St. Elsewhere."

Other highly rated series he introduced included "Night Court," "Hunter," "Highway to Heaven," "Matlock," "227," "ALF" and "Empty Nest."

He left NBC for Paramount, where his 15-month tenure was met with mixed results. The studio released the smash hit "Wayne's World" as well as the disappointing "1492: Conquest of Paradise" during that time.

He left Paramount in 1992 to spend more time with his daughter Calla, who was seriously injured in a car crash at the family's Lake Tahoe vacation home.

Most recently, he was hired by America Online in March to bolster its development of online programs focusing on the entertainment industry. He previously had served as head of New World Entertainment and ran his own production company, called H. Beale, named after the "mad prophet of the airwaves" character in the movie "Network."

Tartikoff's management of NBC's schedule made him one of show business's brightest lights, and he generally succeeded through innovation, not sleaze. In his first season with the network, he introduced "Hill Street Blues," a low-rated police series that he stuck with while it won critical acclaim and developed a loyal following.

In one of his last years at NBC, the network introduced "Seinfeld."

NBC also had its share of celebrated failures during Tartikoff's watch. They included "Manimal," "Beverly Hills Buntz," "Bay City Blues" and "Berrenger's." He was pilloried by the media for broadcasting a "news" special by Geraldo Rivera about Satanism, and in his typical self-deprecating style, Tartikoff brought the incident up himself for years afterward.

Tartikoff was born on Jan. 13, 1949, in Freeport, N.Y., a Long Island suburb of New York City.

He attended Yale, where he played varsity baseball, was captain of the fencing team and co-editor of the campus humor magazine with Garry Trudeau, the "Doonesbury" cartoonist.

After receiving his bachelor's degree in 1970, Tartikoff took a job with a Connecticut advertising agency, and two years later he became director of advertising and promotion for WTNH-TV, the ABC affiliate in New Haven. In 1973, he landed a similar job at WLS-TV, the ABC-owned station in Chicago.

He spent every vacation in Los Angeles looking for a job in network TV.

He found one when Fred Silverman, then head of ABC's programming division, hired him in 1976 as the network's director of dramatic development. Tartikoff remained with ABC only until September 1977, when he left to become director of comedy programming at NBC.

Tartikoff is survived by his wife, the former Lilly Samuels, a dancer with the New York City Ballet whom he married in 1982. The couple had two children, daughters Calla and Elisabeth. He is also survived by his father, Jordan, of San Francisco and a sister, Lisa Rosenthal of Burlingame.

Suit against motel chain becomes class action

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA, Fla. — A federal judge opened the door for plaintiffs nationwide to join a discrimination lawsuit against Motel 6 by black travelers who say they were denied rooms when there were vacancies or relegated to back sections dubbed ghettos.

Black patrons and motel employees charged in court papers that blacks also were charged higher rates than whites and given rooms that were unclean and had broken furniture.

The chain, with 750 no-frills motels throughout the country, said Wednesday the lawsuit's allegations defied common sense.

In granting the suit class-action status, U.S. District Judge Elizabeth Kovachevich said in an order signed Aug. 15 that 22 affidavits from across the country supported the position of racial discrimination.

More than 550 people have described prejudicial treatment at some 200 motels in 38 states after two West Palm Beach deputies sued the company for refusing to rent them a room in March 1996.

The deputies were on an unrelated assignment in southwest Florida when they sought a room at a Motel 6 in Punta Gorda and were told none was available.

They left but told a white deputy what happened and that deputy then asked for a room and got one, according to the lawsuit.

Leon Keeling, a Motel 6 manager from 1993 to 1995, said in an affidavit that he was encouraged during his training to rent the least desirable rooms to "locals." Keeling, who is black, said he realized "locals" referred to other blacks.

After a customer complained to a regional office about the pool being "full of black people," Keeling said he received a memo from a regional manager asking, "Why did you allow these people to take over our swimming pool?"

Motel 6 spokesman Emmett Gossen called the allegations unsupported and unproven.

"Anyone who knows Motel 6 knows these allegations defy common sense," Gossen said from company headquarters in Dallas. "Everyone is welcome."

Between 6 million and 8 million of the chain's 33 million customers each year are black, he said, and more than half of the company's 16,000 employees are minorities.

The discrimination suit is the latest in a series of such actions against national companies.

Earlier this year, a judge approved a $176 million deal by Texaco to settle discrimination charges by black employees. Publix Supermarkets last year agreed to pay $85 million to settle charges that it kept women employees in low-paying, dead-end jobs. Denny's restaurants agreed to pay $46 million in 1994 to settle charges by black Secret Service agents and California students who said they were denied service.

Geering said other young students who want to start a business should make a plan and do as much research as they can.

"If any students decided to start a business, they should do their research and go for it," he said. "There is no sense in not using a good idea. Eventually somebody else will take it and make millions, but that person didn't do anything about it."

Geering said people asked him if he got into the business to make a name and get attention, but that wasn't why he started it.

"I'm in this for the long-haul. I want to work with this company a long time."

He said the business was getting ready to expand to other parts of Kansas so customers wouldn't have to make a long distance call to get service.

Intercan.net is open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and from noon to 5 p.m. on Saturdays. For information on getting access, students can call 565-0991.

"The Internet is a great way to get information — tons of information," Geering said.

When long distance bills approach $100, Damkroger said, the customer automatically gets a call for notification.

"We just tell them, 'Hey, you're getting close,'" he said. "Most are very, very happy to get that call. They're not shocked at the end of the month when the bill comes."

Adalee Brenner, who handles administrative accounts for Telecommunications, said the new Total Campus Cards have instructions about how to set up accounts for long distance that can be used anywhere. These accounts will begin with a 30-percent discount on regular AT&T direct-dial rates, she said.

On-campus residents, however, are the only ones who get voice mail, which acts like an answering machine, and get call waiting for no extra charge, she said.

On-campus residents are also able to call Telecommunications and request that call waiting be directed to voice mail, she said.

If someone else calls while the customer is on the line, the call can be directed to the customer's voice mail.

This comes in handy for customers who use a modem to connect to the Internet and don't want to be kicked off the line or just for people who hate call waiting.

"Most parents were very tickled that we're able to give that," she said.

One thing on-campus residents cannot do is accept collect calls, she said. It's not worth their time to figure out how to bill the resident, especially because they might have to be tracked down after moving into another room.

Israel lifts 28-day blockade of Bethlehem on West Bank

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BETHLEHEM, West Bank — Pushing aside the red-and-white barriers that had blocked traffic for nearly a month, Israel lifted its much-resented blockade of Bethlehem on Wednesday.

The move followed days of violent Palestinian street protests and international criticism — including from the Vatican, which complained that Christian pilgrims were kept from visiting the birthplace of Jesus.

David Bar-Illan, a spokesman for Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, said the closure imposed after a suicide bombing July 30 in a Jerusalem market was lifted for security reasons. He gave no further details on why security officials reversed their position.

The gesture was expected to help improve the deeply troubled relations between Israel and Yasser Arafat's Palestinian Authority.

But Arafat spokesman Nabil Abourdeineh said it must be followed by many other steps, including the lifting of a general closure that keeps tens of thousands of Palestinian workers out of Israel, and the resumption of tax transfers to the Palestinian Authority.

"Things must be returned to their normal situation in order to return to the negotiating table and the protection of the peace process," he said.

In Washington, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright welcomed the Israeli move.

The market bombing, which killed 16 people, was claimed by the Islamic militant group Hamas. Israel reportedly maintained its blockade of Bethlehem for 28 days because it suspected two masterminds of the bombing were hiding in the city.

Bar-Illan said Israel was "seeing very little by way of cooperation" from the Palestinians on security. A resumption of security cooperation between the two sides was supposed to be a prerequisite for Albright's expected visit in September and a new U.S. peace initiative.

The blockade of Bethlehem was lifted shortly after 4 p.m. Wednesday. Zainab Jafari, 37, was one of the first to enter Bethlehem from the Jerusalem side.

"They didn't speak to me," she said excitedly, pointing to the Israeli troops who let her pass.

Jafari said during the closure she had walked on dirt paths to avoid Israeli road barriers and reach her job as a cook in a Jerusalem restaurant.

Bethlehem has been the scene of daily protests against the travel ban. About 50 Palestinian legislators and clergymen from Jerusalem walked toward the city Wednesday morning from an Israeli army checkpoint, while the mayor of Bethlehem led a group of protesters from the city toward the checkpoint.

The two groups eventually met in the middle of the checkpoint and shook hands briefly, before they were pushed back by a cordon of Israeli troops.

Netanyahu, meanwhile, accused Arafat of fomenting violence in order to deepen the crisis and bring about a greater U.S. involvement.

Christian groups harshly criticized the closure. Some tour buses were given special permission to enter the biblical city during the 28-day closure, but individual visitors were turned away.

In the Gaza Strip on Wednesday, Israeli soldiers and Palestinian police practiced evacuating the dead and wounded in case of a car bomb on a road patrolled by both forces.

The teamwork was unusual amid the deep crisis in Israeli-Palestinian relations and Israeli complaints that the Palestinians are not cooperating in pursuing Islamic militants.

ART

Grupp's cartoonish style most obviously with its purposefully skewed foreshortening of his arm and the not-quite-right quality to both the artist's face and that of the dog. Explaining the drawing, Grupp reveals his well-understood sense of humor and self.

"I draw myself as being almost kind of retarded — a cartoon kind of element works into it," he said. "If I'm working from a model, I'm much more careful."

Grupp will be in town for a gallery talk at 3:30 p.m. Sept. 12 in the Willard Gallery. It should prove interesting to hear what Munce and Grupp are willing to say to each other's faces.

Having studied together in high school and college, Munce said he still maintains an almost brotherly relationship with Grupp.

"There's a lot of influence there," Munce said. "I figure he influenced me more than I influenced him."

Then again, the two might not reveal as much as we would like.

Grupp said, "Jim and I share a lot of common likes. We don't even have to talk. We do a Vulcan mind-meld."

Most illogical.

"Any time you have children at work with you it is difficult, but it certainly makes it easier on me emotionally," Womack said.

Once Womack's tour ends on Sept. 27, she will not be getting lazy, however. Womack said she plans to go back home to Nashville and begin work on a second album, with a lofty goal in mind.

"What do I hope for in the future? Possibly an award, say Female Vocalist of the Year," Womack said.

Womack's second-to-last concert will be at Marshall Army Fields at Fort Riley, where she will open for Clay Walker. The gates open at 6 p.m. and the concert begins at 8 p.m.

Failing grades equal dismissal or warnings for K-Staters

LAURA POPE
staff reporter

"Academic warning" and "dismissal" are words dreaded by many K-State students at the end of every semester. Last spring, more than 2,700 students received word that their academic standing was in jeopardy.

Of the 18,447 students enrolled in the 1997 spring semester, 2,057 were placed on academic warning, and 710 were dismissed, said Gunile Devault, assistant registrar.

According to the 1996-98 undergraduate catalog, any students who receive a grade point average lower than 1.0 in their first semester will be dismissed automatically. For those continuing students who receive a GPA lower than 1.0, registration will be withheld for the next term, subject to review by the academic deans of the colleges students wish to enter.

▶ Academic dismissal
Any students who receive a grade point average lower than 1.0 in their first semester will be dismissed automatically.

"In the past, we have studied the academic careers of students with a GPA of less than 1.0 in the first semester," said William Feyerharm, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. "They are usually gone within three semesters."

K-State students who receive anything lower than a 2.0 semester or cumulative GPA are placed on warning until their GPAs reach 2.0.

Students must be placed on academic warning the semester before dismissal, with the exception of first-semester students with a GPA lower than 1.0.

A student can be dismissed at any time for neglecting academic responsibility as recommended by the academic dean. Students will automatically be dismissed if their cumulative GPA falls below the graduated scale.

Only K-State credit hours are used to determine the semester and cumulative GPAs. Students with a GPA of 1.0 or higher will not be dismissed until they have at least 20 credit hours, again with the exception of first-semester students.

Therefore, any student with more than 12 hours who receives a 2.2 GPA will not be dismissed. This is subject to change according to the minimum GPA requirements that are set by certain colleges or programs at K-State, Feyerharm said.

For example, certain programs within the College of Arts and Sciences require a minimum 2.5 GPA for students to be accepted into the sequence.

To be readmitted to K-State, students must be approved by the Academic Standards Committee of the college the student wants to enter.

Normally, students must wait two semesters before being considered for reinstatement, and they are still on warning when they return.

"If you care enough for kids, you will call them in and find out what is going on," Feyerharm said.

The College of Arts and Sciences suggests to students that they use the services available in Holton Hall, Feyerharm said.

Some of the services available to students include the Academic and Career Information Center, Academic Assistance Center, Educational Supportive Services and Adult Student Services. These services offer a variety of free help, including academic guidance and discipline, tutorial assistance and courses for assistance or credit.

Dismissed students are notified by letter that they have been dismissed and are given a contact person and information on the reinstatement procedures. Any students can be considered for immediate reinstatement if they received a 2.0 GPA, but less than 2.2 on 12 or more credit hours, the semester they were dismissed.

TOTAL RECALL

NEW, MUCH-TOUTED TOTAL CAMPUS CARDS STILL SUBJECT OF CONTROVERSY

WILDCAT CARDS can be relaminated between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. today, Tuesday and Wednesday in the Union Ballroom. Jamie Weiss, Campus Card Center employee, inserts a Wildcat Card into a laminating machine Thursday afternoon as part of the center's recall plan.

Technical difficulties many for cards

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

It serves as identification, a residence hall key, meal card, check card and more. But the Wildcat Card system implemented this week has yet to be convenient.

Now, according to one Wildcat Card official, at least 3,500 of the new cards are being recalled.

The all-in-one campus card system has had its share of technical difficulties, said Jack Thoman, assistant director of business affairs at the K-State Student Union. Thoman said the big problem now is a defect that might cause the picture on the front of some cards to rub off.

"We were told in the beginning that we would damage some of the features of the card if we laminated," Thoman said. "There were library bar codes, telecommunications authorization numbers and vending machine chips on the cards. We were concerned that they wouldn't work with the lamination."

Later, he said, officials changed the card's design to accommodate lamination. Cards printed before Monday, however, were not laminated and are susceptible to damage, especially if they are placed in plastic ID holders.

Thoman said card designers knew the life of the nonlaminated cards would be shortened, but they did not anticipate such large-scale problems.

"They said the life of the card might not be as long. We didn't think they meant overnight," he said.

An ad placed in the Collegian by Wildcat Card officials might be misleading, Thoman said. The ad states that IDs with photos that were taken before Monday will need new laminate. On the contrary, only cards that were printed

Students, bank disagree on cards' terms, convenience

JOHN HENDERSON
senior staff writer

"Wouldn't it be great if your student ID was a magic pass to eliminating some of the hassles of university life?" said the narrator in the Commerce Bank promotional video for its Total Campus Cards.

An all-in-one, all-purpose life simplifier?

Now students can get some of that simplicity with their new Total Campus Cards, said Tom Giller, retail banking manager for Commerce Bank of Manhattan.

He said convenience is an important benefit for K-Staters who use their cards and their accounts with Commerce Bank. It can be used not only as a student ID, but also as a full-featured debit card.

Commerce Bank is part of a $10 million corporation with more than 200 branches in three states, Giller said, with two years of experience administrating similar systems at Wichita State University and Fort Hays State University.

"I think that as good bankers, they see the potential for business," he said. "Long-term relationships with students, faculty and staff, and to increase their market share in those communities, offering a specific product that local businesses can also be a part of."

Jim Kastner, vice president of Commerce Bank Manhattan, said that in the past week, the bank has signed up about 225 new accounts with 900 students signing up for Total Campus Card accounts even before they arrived.

Giller said those 900 decided to have their financial aid automatically deposited into the accounts instead of having to wait in long lines to receive their money.

"There was a mailing done a month or so ago, a brochure and the option for the student if he or she filled it out that they could get their net financial aid deposited into their Wildcat account," Giller said. "That's what 900 kids decided to do. Again, they had to look at the brochure, read the brochure and say yes."

Neither Giller nor Kastner nor Sandy Clark, assistant vice president with the Kansas City, Mo.-based bank and manager of the branch in the K-State Student Union, can say how much the bank expects to earn from this venture, or how many customers will sign up.

"We look at it as more of a long-term venture, not just this year," Giller said. "Each year, more and more students will sign up."

"We hope 20,000 students sign up," Kastner said with a laugh.

K-Staters Jeremy Warren, Neal Spencer and Matt Martin said they have chosen not to open accounts with Commerce Bank.

Spencer, junior in business, said the convenience of the Total Campus Card seems designed for the bank, not for him. He said he was irritated to learn that if he wrote more than five checks on an account, a 15-cent fee would be charged on every check afterward.

"It seems like it's more out to rip the students off than to help them," Spencer said. "To me, it's like, 'Why else do we have this card, but to help students?'"

The card actually has two separate functions, Giller said. One is the Commerce Bank account, which students can use to deposit and withdraw money just like any other checking account.

With that account, he said, a list of 35 Manhattan businesses have agreed to accept the card as no-hassle payment. Also, checks can be written for purchases on the account, and the card can be used at any Commerce ATM, he said.

There is a service charge for using the card at any of the eight Commerce ATMs in Manhattan or any other ATM connected with the Cirrus or BankMate systems. Any Commerce ATM withdrawal is 75 cents, any non-Commerce ATM is $1.25. To make a withdrawal without incurring a service charge, those with accounts may write checks at the check-cashing window in the Union, or have their cards swiped there.

Spencer and Martin said they didn't have bank accounts in Manhattan, but Warren said he would be keeping his account

Senators approve new cabinet

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

Members of Student Senate made routine appointments and considered changes to their bylaws at their first meeting Thursday night, before settling in to a year of legislative work.

Senate members approved Student Body President Tim Riemann's selections for his cabinet positions. Riemann swore in eight cabinet members after the unanimous vote.

The Senate also appointed students who had volunteered to serve as at-large members of university committees. Riemann acknowledged, after questioning, that some students were serving on two committees because of a lack of student interest in the available positions. Riemann said positions were still left to be filled and that he would appoint new members if he heard of other students who were willing to serve.

Senators took final action on one piece of legislation at the meeting. The group approved a bill to expand the membership of the Allocations and Privilege Fee committees by two members each.

Governmental Relations Chair Patrick Carney reported that a franchise of Sbarro's pizza restaurants will set up shop in Union Station. Contracts and franchise agreements have been signed with the company, Carney said, and the food chain should open its doors by mid-October.

Carney also reported that construction drawings for renovations to the Union are 60-percent complete and the full set of plans should be finished by the end of September. The renovation project is scheduled to be complete in 1999.

Privilege Fee and Allocation committees add members

BEN YODER
campus government editor

Student Senate increased the number of people in two committees Thursday to reduce the individual workloads of their members.

Senate Allocations and Privilege Fee committees, which deal with 70 percent of the bills and resolutions that come before Senate, each were increased from eight to 10 members.

The positions will be filled by student senators because Senate wanted to have half of the positions filled by senators, Senate Vice Chair Tracey Mann said. The committees will be made up of five senators, three Senate interns and two at-large members, who are chosen from the student body.

Bill Muir, faculty representative to Senate, also said the added members would help the committees keep a quorum.

Senate Chair Jeff Dougan said it made sense to put more people in the Privilege Fee and Allocations committees.

"Those committees do a substantial amount of work," he said.

Dougan said there was a surplus of people because the Parking Committee was dissolved a year ago.

Gabe Eckert, 1997-98 Allocations chair and last year's Allocations vice chair, said the extra people will allow committee members more time on each campus group's proposals for funding.

"By spreading out the workload, it will give us a little more time to really consider all the bills we go through," he said.

Getting input from more students is another benefit of the increase, Eckert said.

"It will get more students involved in the process. And any time you get more students involved, you're going to have a larger array of opinions and perspectives on all the issues," he said.

Eckert said the increase will also allow more interaction between campus groups and committee members.

"The change will make it so we can spend more time one-on-one with the groups," he said.

Bret Glendening, 1996-97 Allocations Committee chair and current Privilege Fee Committee member, said his committee members were liaisons to an average of 20 different groups last year. He said the increase will help ease the burden on committee members.

Adult newspaper seized from public racks in Phoenix

PHOENIX — Law enforcement officers in black ski masks seized hundreds of copies of an adult newspaper in raids stemming from a new law that restricts the sale of sexually explicit publications from public racks.

The publisher of The Beat said seizing copies of his newspaper from sidewalk vending machines was a violation of his constitutional freedom of expression, a position backed by at least one First Amendment expert.

"I'll just put it on the streets for free. What are they going to do, seize the sidewalks?" publisher Jerry Evenson said.

Bill FitzGerald, a spokesman for the Maricopa County Attorney's Office, disagreed.

"This is not a First Amendment issue," FitzGerald said. "It has to do with the distribution of pornography and its availability to minors."

The raids Wednesday of 15 sites in Phoenix and the surrounding suburbs stem from a law that took effect July 21 making it a felony to sell or display sexually oriented material that is harmful to minors except via access-card or token-activated machines or in businesses that cater to adults.

Comic editor's ashes blending with ink for book reprint

NEW YORK — The late Marvel Comics editor Mark Gruenwald got his wish: His ashes were blended with ink and made into a comic book.

"This is something that he really wanted because he really loved comics. He wanted to be part of his work in a very real sense," Mark Harras, Marvel's editor in chief, said.

The ashes of Marvel's senior executive editor were mixed at a printing plant in Canton, Ohio, for use in "Squadron Supreme," a reprint of a limited edition 1985 comic he wrote, Harras said Thursday.

The book will be out this week in comic- book stores and next month in other bookstores.

Though Gruenwald's death last August in Pawling, N.Y., was unexpected, his desire that his ashes be made part of a comic book was known to many people, including his widow, Catherine.

Gruenwald was 42 when he died of a heart attack.

As a top editor at Marvel, Harras said, Gruenwald supervised some of the company's biggest titles, including "Captain America" and "The Avengers."

Cuban government denies rumors of Castro's ailing health

MIAMI — The Cuban government said Fidel Castro is in excellent health despite a flurry of unsubstantiated reports that the 71-year-old dictator had died or was ailing.

The rumors touched off much discussion Wednesday on Spanish-language radio and television stations as well as at streetside cafeterias in Miami's Little Havana, where bumper stickers declaring "No Castro, no problem" are common.

Ninoska Perez, a spokeswoman for the anti-Castro Cuban American National Foundation, said reports that Castro was ill started coming from the island weeks ago. They arose because Castro wasn't looking well and hadn't been making many public appearances. For example, he did not speak at the closing of a large youth festival earlier this month.

Responding to the reports, the Cuban Interests Section in Washington issued a statement denying that Castro was in poor health.

"These are just rumors. We have no information from Cuba indicating the president is sick. As far as we know, the president is in excellent health," the statement said.

Protester still upset with Upward Bound

JOHN HENDERSON
senior writer

A woman who said her teen-age son and daughter were abused during their stay on the K-State campus with the Upward Bound program continued her protest in the free-speech zone Thursday morning.

Chon Un, carrying and wearing signs with messages such as "Human Body Not Trash," "No Child Abuse," "Minors Are Not Toys" and "Don't Cover-Up, I Want Truth," spent Thursday walking all over campus.

Reginland McGowan, director of Upward Bound, said, to his knowledge, Un has been a near-constant presence on campus since late June when an incident involving her son occurred in one of the residence halls.

"I think she must have had some down time," he said. "We didn't see her much the third weekend in August, so maybe it was then."

Upward Bound, a high school program designed to encourage students to attend college, organized a program on campus this summer in which participants spent five weeks living in West Hall.

Mike Lynch, K-State assistant vice president and administrator of Upward Bound, said that during his stay, James Un, 15, became involved with two or three other Upward Bound boys who punched him many times in the arm.

Lynch said it wasn't a beating but more like a rough-house initiation to their clique. The initiation wasn't started by Upward Bound, he said, and was stopped immediately after officials heard Un had been hit.

Chon Un filed battery charges with the K-State Police and began her protests, McGowan said. McGowan, Lynch and many others on the Upward Bound staff filed reports with the police, and an investigation began, McGowan said.

There is still some doubt about whether James Un consented to the hits or was an unwilling victim, Lynch said.

"It's not in question whether this happened," he said. "The controversy is over the circumstances."

McGowan said he's spent 20 to 30 hours in meetings with Chon Un. Lynch said both he and McGowan asked her and her ex-husband what they wanted in order to stop protesting.

"The ex-husband replied, 'Well, I'll have to think about it,'" Lynch said.

Chon Un didn't ask for anything in particular, he said, other than an apology. Lynch said she was given an apology at that time.

"I regret that this happened, and I told her that," he said.

McGowan said that apparently was not what Un wanted, and she continued to protest.

"If she wants something else, she hasn't been able to articulate it," he said.

While protesting Thursday morning, Un was asked if she wanted a statement from Upward Bound officials.

She said no.

"I'm going to make them help, do something correct," she said. "Because they did wrong, very wrong for all human beings, not only my children."

McGowan said he suspects Un might be after more than just acknowledgement.

"I submitted this in my report," he said, "that Mrs. Un suggested in one of our meetings that we offer her $10,000 for her children's education."

Assistant Riley County Attorney Michael Kearns said he could not comment on the investigation other than to say that it remains in progress.

Chon Un said her daughter, Linda, who was also in the Upward Bound program, was taken to a hospital against her will, for something Upward Bound was responsible for.

Lynch said he isn't sure, but this probably stems from an incident involving Linda Un at an outing sponsored by Upward Bound at the Kansas City, Mo., amusement park Worlds of Fun.

He said an alarming knot was noticed on her ankle. It wasn't clear if, and how, she was injured, but she was led to a first-aid station, he said.

Linda Un refused treatment, McGowan said. He said that incident is under investigation as well.

McGowan said Chon Un was told she was free to protest and to meet with Upward Bound officials, but not to enter the residence halls or interfere with the proceedings.

Un didn't cooperate, McGowan said, and was seen in parking lots blocking traffic and inside the halls by Upward Bound participants during the next month.

On the last Friday of their stay, both Linda and James Un were dismissed from the residence portion of the program. Chon Un never removed her children directly, he said. Linda Un is a senior and James Un is a sophomore at Manhattan High School.

Un said during her protest that she doesn't have enough money to hire a lawyer, but that she is making plans to move her protest to Washington, D.C.

CHON UN protests Thursday morning in the free-speech zone near the K-State Student Union. The protest was brought on by an alleged incident of violence against her son this summer during the Upward Bound program.

Notable musicians to play at Cool Cats Jazz Fest on Monday

BRANDI HERTIG
senior writer

Even the coldest of cold-blooded creatures will be warmed by the sounds of the eighth annual Cool Cats Jazz Festival at the Sunset Zoological Park on Monday.

The festival will feature the jazz stylings of renowned trombonist John Fedchock, who will perform with the Manhattan Jazz Orchestra on the main stage at 4 p.m.

Also on hand at the festival will be nine-time Grammy nominee Frank Mantooth. He is slated to perform at 2 p.m. with Kansas City jazz vocalist Lisa Henry.

Fedchock and Mantooth will also teach clinics at the festival for no extra charge. Fedchock will cover a range of jazz techniques, including section playing, vibrato and articulation between 10 and 11 a.m. Mantooth's clinic will teach participants how to have fun with jazz improvisation from 11 a.m. to noon.

The main stage festivities will kick off at noon with six-piece Latin jazz ensemble Musa Nova, back by popular demand.

"Musa Nova is a very hot Brazilian jazz group from Kansas City," said Bill McFarlin, managing director of the International Association of Jazz Educators.

The festival has been several months in the making, said Robyn Seglem, marketing director for the Sunset Zoo. A few changes have been made to the festival since last year.

Rather than having headline names, the festival will feature more bands, Seglem said.

In addition to the main stage, there will also be a smaller venue called the wildlife stage. Performers will include saxophone-piano duo Tom Fowler and Bill Thompson.

"They're both phenomenal players," McFarlin said.

Music won't be the only entertainment during the festival. Animals that aren't normally on display, such as the Madagascar hissing cockroach, will be featured. There will also be face painting and Wonder Spots, which will give festival-goers the chance to touch things like lions' pelts and tigers' whiskers.

Even though a day of jazzy fun is on tap at the festival, Seglem said people must use common sense when it comes to safety.

Last year it was very hot, and there's not a lot of shade around the stage areas, she said. There are trees people can sit under to cool off if they are feeling overheated. There are also air-conditioned places, such as the gift shop, where people can find refuge from the sun.

Drinks without straws or lids can be brought into the zoo, Seglem said. Bottled water will also be for sale.

A kickoff concert is scheduled for Sunday night at Auntie Mae's Parlor from 9:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. McFarlin and others will perform.

Admission is $3 per adult and $1.50 for children ages 5-12 and free for children 4 and younger. Parking will be available in Manhattan High School's parking lot and in the zoo parking areas.

Miracle card will need a miracle cure to curb frustration

Frustrated?

So are we.

Seems the next week will mean another long line as the student body, faculty and staff flock to the K-State Student Union.

No, it's not ICAT.

Some of our new total access Wildcat Cards — the multifunctional student IDs — are not quite what they seem and are being recalled.

Not only are the cards in need of a new laminate coat, but students are discovering the functions aren't working as planned.

First and foremost, this is a matter of inconvenience. While not every student ID will be affected, many will be — especially those made before Monday. And you thought you beat the rush. Well, stand in line.

Students were told the student IDs would simplify their lives. An ATM card, calling card, student ID — everything but the kitchen sink would be incorporated into one card. But with very little in the way of information being passed along to the students, some students had problems activating the cards' potential bonuses or figuring out where to use the cards.

And when it came down to disseminating information about the problem with the cards, a stranger thing happened.

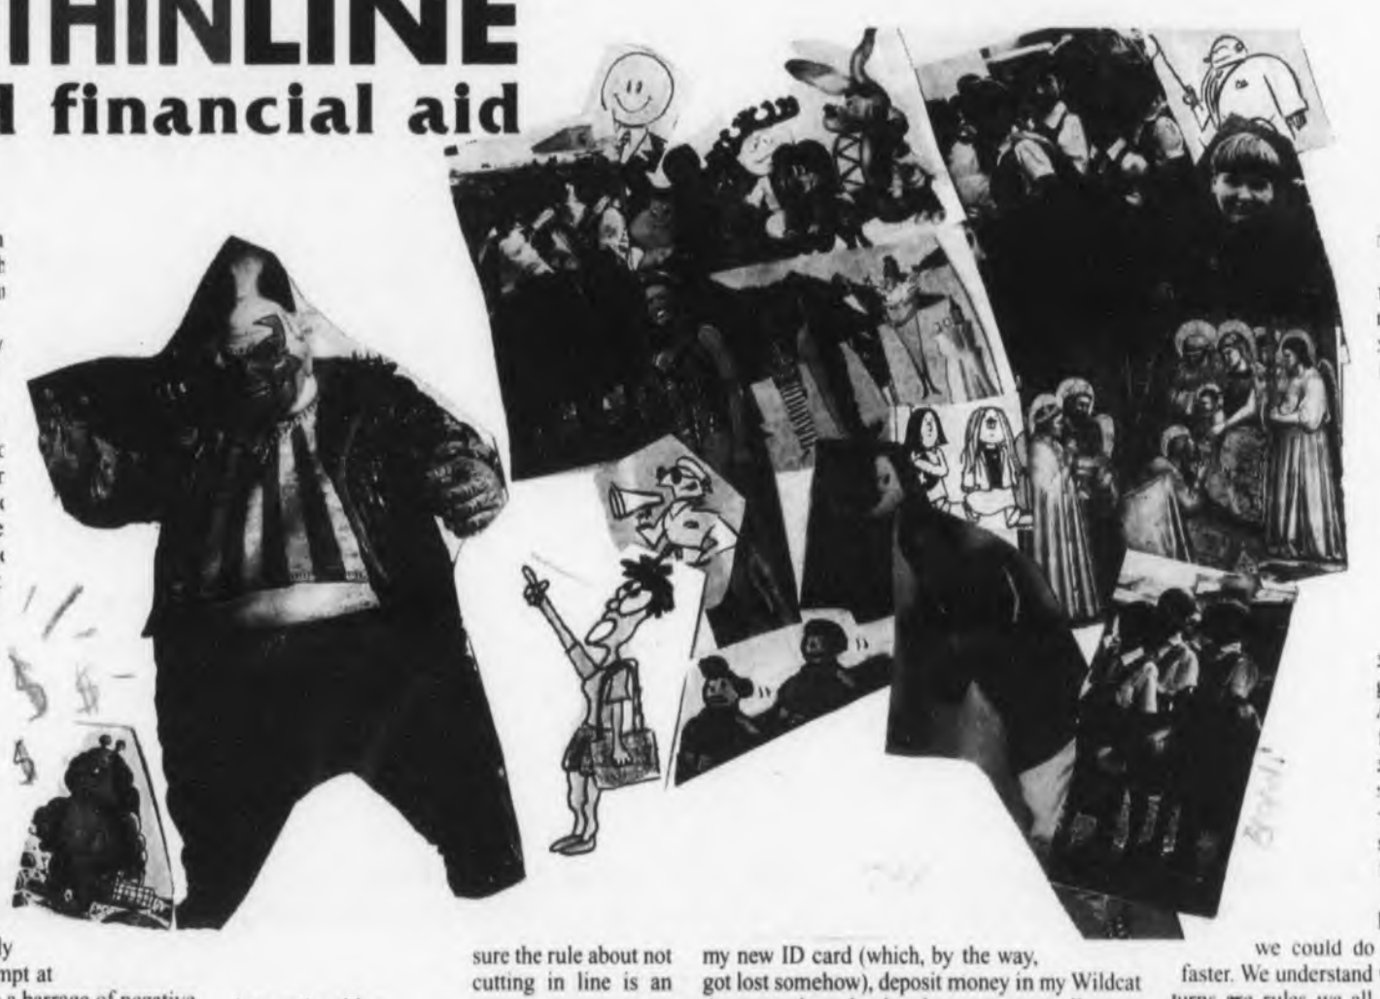
No news tip.

Instead, an advertisement placed in Thursday's Collegian told students of a problem, touting a catchy phrase about frustration and a quick, one-word apology.

Students were kept in suspense. How were students supposed to know whether their cards were faulty? What were students supposed to do to find out? How soon could the cards be replaced? Those questions are answered today, a day after the ad appeared, in a story on the front page.

A poster outside the Campus Card Center also informed students about the problem. But when some students inquired with the office staff, they were faced with quizzical looks.

A little more planning and a little more information would have diminished the lines students are destined to see next week.



Frustrated?

So are we.

THELONGTHINLINE
between chaos and financial aid

VIEWPOINT

MARY RENEE SMITH

MARY RENEE SMITH is a sophomore in speech. You can send e-mail to Mary at mojo@ksu.edu.

Like a bazillion other people, I waited through the long, hot summer for the manna from Heaven commonly referred to as financial aid. The credit card bills had piled up, and the ramen noodles were running out. So on the day circled in red on my calendar as the one chosen by the gods for the handing out of the checks, I went to the K-State Student Union.

I got there while the lovely personnel who work diligently in the Office of Student Financial Assistance were at lunch. Three women sat beneath the sign reading "Lunch from 12:00 until 1:30." I was mumbling something about going home and coming back later when one of the women spoke.

"I wouldn't do that if I were you. The line gets (four letter F-word) long." Her use of profanity struck me, and I decided I would wait out the lunch hour. I was seventh in line.

As it got closer to 1:30 p.m., the line was getting profanely long. Just a few minutes before the moment of truth, two football players approached the line and began talking to a girl a few people in front of me — girl No. 4 to be exact. I know they were football players because they felt it necessary to tell everyone who was within 45 feet that they were football players. Go, Wildcat pride!

It took me and the people around me a few moments to figure it out, but these two self-proclaimed athletes weren making a social visit to th of the line. They were cu line.

I couldn't believe they cut in line, in front of what was now at least a hundred people. Did they have no manners? Nc respect for civilization ar the fight against chac Maybe they didn't unde stand where the lin ended. Maybe they didn't understand that the rest of us had been waiting for at least an hour. I felt it necessary to inform them.

I don't know why, but I expected that when confronted these heathens would see the error of their ways, apologize for their oversight and proceed to the back of the line. Not so. They successfully ignored not only my attempt at verbal persuasion but also a barrage of negative vibes from the entire third floor of the Union, which was now filled to capacity with people waiting in line.

I don't get it. It is a very simple concept. A line is one person standing behind another person who is standing behind another person and so on. The waiting part is a natural consequence of not being in the front of the line. I am fairly sure the rule about not cutting in line is an international law.

All of us have had to spend a considerable amount of time standing in line in the past few weeks. We stood in line in the air-conditioned comfort of the Union Ballroom, the searing heat of a Kansas morning outside Ahearn Field House and the muggy corridors of Willard Hall.

In the past week, I have personally stood in line to pick up my financial aid check, pick up my new ID card (which, by the way, got lost somehow), deposit money in my Wildcat Account, buy books, buy compact discs at Streetside Records, buy a parking pass, buy a Greyhound from Auntie Mae's Parlor, use the restroom at Auntie Mae's, buy groceries and get my teeth cleaned.

I'm OK with lines. They are the civilized way of waiting for your turn. Lines are the modern man's way around chaos. The line was invented about the same time as the wheel.

nderstood standing in line my financial aid check. n lying. I didn't really nderstand why the office couldn't just mail the darn thing to me now. Why couldn't they stay open during lunch. Why didn't they think everyone and anyone who had money coming to them wouldn't want to get it on the first day? Why did I have to stand in one line to stand in another to stand in another line get my check? Why there ways seem to be some fee fine I didn't know about eady deducted from the eck?

all our complaining, st of us stand in line, ting our turn, accepting place in the line and hing there was something we could do to make the line move faster. We understand waiting in line and taking turns are rules we all have to play by to keep order.

If there wasn't a line to get your financial aid check, your purple ICAT shirt or a drink at your favorite bar, there would be ugly mobs, pushing, shoving, name calling and such.

Hey, wait, I saw all those things while standing in line — or was that just a preseason practice?

MOVING ON UP
SHIFT OUT OF RESIDENCE HALLS BRINGS BOTH RELIEF, REGRET

Hundreds of sophomores were hating K-State at this time last year.

It wasn't the classes or the campus. They didn't really miss their parents, and they weren't having trouble making new friends.

They just hated living in the residence halls.

Year after year, freshmen flock into the residence halls and cram themselves into 12-by-16 stone-walled rooms. Some try to make it more comfortable by covering the yellow walls with posters or putting carpet over the green tile. But most of their attempts at personalization are futile, and they continue living in a drab, awkward-colored room.

Surprisingly, most people don't grow into their rooms. Few people learn to love residence halls, and some begin to dislike them more.

A year drags by, and students leave their rooms without a second thought. They feel they've escaped a prison cell and venture out looking for the real-world experience of living in an apartment.

That, ironically, is when students start to like the residence halls.

With hassles ranging from utilities to finding laundromats, a new apartment can be overwhelming. The simplicity of residence halls becomes the most important aspect, as well as the most missed feature.

It is this sort of convenience that helps freshmen adjust to their new environment. It's also what draws a smart few back each year.

George Widenor, residence life coordinator for Moore Hall, has lived in the residence halls for eight years and said he thinks they are great places to be. He said he especially thinks the experience of living in a residence hall is important for freshmen.

"I think every freshman should live in a hall," he said. "After that, the person should think about themselves and what they want to do."

The prison cell image also disturbs Widenor, who said residence halls tend to get a bad rap.

"I think this perception is pretty widely spread — that somehow the residence halls are awful places to be, and that the object is to survive the year and move off campus," he said. "That perception really bothers me because it is untrue."

Widenor said one of the advantages of living in a residence hall is that there is a social network that is easy to plug into.

"Resident assistants and hall governing boards put on events designed to get people to have fun doing things together," he said. "There are so many things to do and so many opportunities to get involved and have fun, you could never do them all."

Though this might be true for some students, the majority won't recognize social benefits of a residence hall until they've moved out. The dances and ice cream socials aren't nearly as important as the neighbor who comes over to borrow a pen and becomes a best friend.

Actions that seem so inappropriate in an apartment setting are what give residence halls their social aspect. By forcing people to share bathrooms and eating areas, they have the potential to help people meet each other and develop friendships.

But this is also one of the biggest turnoffs of residence halls. Privacy is not easy to come by in a world of community showers and two-person rooms. Students who can't find a place to get away from it all can become angry with their roommates, their neighbors and even the residence hall itself.

Widenor said the Department of Housing and Dining Services tries to work with students who have these sorts of concerns.

"We do have some suites and some apartment-style housing options to accommodate that need," he said. "But it is hard for first-year students to get those options."

Widenor said residence halls can be a great place to live for students who want it to be.

"It is the responsibility of the students to take advantage of their opportunities," he said. "If someone wants to do nothing, we will not force them. We will encourage and keep on asking, but they can say no."

And though these students can find their craved solitude in an apartment, they might be missing out on more than just social activities. Students, especially freshmen who forgo living in residence halls, could be missing their chance to connect to the college scene.

More importantly, they could be missing an important transitional phase that will affect them the rest of their college career.

Readers question columnist's motives

Editor,

The officers of K-State's Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Society would like to respond to Kevin Bailey's most recent column.

On a personal level, we were shocked, outraged and horrified at the ignorance and evil that was so evident in his words. His hypocritical judgments and poisonous attitudes are extremely destructive in any sort of sane, loving world.

We are sick and tired of the filth that people such as him spew forth. Fortunately, we have received a great show of support from our families, friends and coworkers, both Christian and otherwise, assuring us that they do not live in his world, nor do they support his interpretation of his Bible.

Looking at this column from a larger perspective, however, we realize that we would be hypocrites if we were to demand his resignation or try to suppress him in some other way.

Anyone familiar with the struggles of gay people through history knows how terrible and violent it has been at times. We know how it feels to be censored, oppressed and hurt. We would not wish that on anyone, even though they wish it on us.

We support Bailey's right to his opinions, even though we find his stance reprehensible and frighteningly unevolved.

Sincerely,

Paul Donovan, BGLS President
Mary Renee Smith,
BGLS vice president
Chris Hurd, BGLS treasurer
Jeremy Mittel, BGLS secretary

Editor,

Kevin Bailey's most recent column on religious judgment walks a very dangerous line between what is acceptable, appropriate and legally printable for the Collegian.

In our opinion, Bailey's equating homosexuality with sin, condemnation, and death directly violates K-State's non-discrimination policy which states, in part, that K-State is committed to a policy of nondiscrimination on the basis of race, sex, national origin, disability, religion, age, sexual orientation or other nonmerit reasons.

Had Bailey substituted African American or Jew for homosexual in his column, the discrimination would have been recognized as so blatant that the Collegian editorial board would have delayed printing the piece pending significant revisions.

Nevertheless, the attack on homosexuals was allowed to be printed in the Collegian, despite President Jon Wefald's assertion that K-State will maintain a zero-tolerance policy on discrimination against any member of the K-State family.

Kevin Bailey is free to live by his own selective literal interpretation of the Bible. But when he imposes his rigid morality on the human rights of the homosexuals at K-State, he is perpetuating the hatred and the gay-bashing that still exists at this university. He is threatening the safety of every gay, lesbian and bisexual student who is here for an education and a future.

Bailey's column is certainly not about inclusion and unconditional acceptance. But K-State's nondiscrimination policy is, and Bailey needs to remember that gays, lesbians and bisexuals at K-State have every right to live openly, honestly, and peaceably at K-State, just like the people who choose to be more religious than others. We hope to see gay-bashing absent from future Collegian columns.

K-State staff, students win national journalism awards

JACOB JANSONIUS
staff reporter

K-State students, along with research and extension staff members, went to Cleveland with high expectations and goals. Many came back with much more.

Eight students and six research and extension staff members were among the award-winners at the Agricultural Communicators in Education, National Extension Technology Conference and Agricultural Communicators of Tomorrow contests in Cleveland.

Debbie Wood, senior in agricultural journalism, took third place in the brochure and pamphlet category and fourth place in the feature articles category.

"I was really excited when I found out that I had placed. I didn't place the year before, so I really didn't expect anything," Wood said.

Even though Wood did not make the trip to Cleveland, she placed in both contests she entered.

"It showed that I actually used something I learned from class," she said. "It also gave me a chance to be really creative."

Under the editorial direction of agricultural journalism graduates Risa Bayliff and Shelly Fogle, The Kansas State Agriculturalist was awarded first place by the Agricultural Communicators of Tomorrow.

Those were not the only placings K-State had. Many other students helped make K-State stand out with their performances. Lance Ziesch, senior in agricultural journalism, received two awards — third in the single-color photo division and fifth in the brochure and pamphlet division — while Tamara Peterson, a recent agricultural journalism graduate, placed fifth in the single-color photo division.

Linda Albers, junior in agricultural journalism, received fourth place in the multi-issue newsletters category. Brad Parker, senior in agricultural journalism, earned second place for his interview for an entry-level position.

Bob Furbee, head of K-State's Department of Communications, was also pleased with the outcome of the contests. "Things went really well," Furbee said.

"The last two or three years The Kansas State Agriculturalist has been No. 1, and that's really an honor," he said.

Staff members George Brandsberg, Amy Hartman and Bob Holcombe, from the publications unit, earned a gold medal for the Kansas Information Express CD-ROM.

More than 15 universities competed at the national competition.

Hearing set for defense motions in bombing trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — For the third time, a federal judge Thursday refused to prohibit prosecutors from seeking the death penalty against Oklahoma City bombing suspect Terry Nichols, saying any decision would be premature.

After a brief hearing, U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch said he had to hear the evidence against Nichols before deciding whether the death penalty applied to the case.

Nichols is scheduled to stand trial Sept. 29 on murder, conspiracy and weapons-related charges.

"There are facts which could support the death penalty under this statute," Matsch said. "I just don't see how it can be done until I have the evidence before me."

Matsch also planned Thursday to hear defense motions to throw out evidence of a robbery allegedly committed to finance the bombing, a burglary in which bomb components were stolen and the testimony of Michael and Lori Fortier.

Prosecutors maintain Nichols was a significant player in the April 19, 1995, bombing that killed 168 people and injured more than 500 others.

But defense attorney Michael Tigar insists Nichols is charged as an accomplice. He maintains the Eighth Amendment prohibits execution of a convicted accomplice unless the individual had a significant role in the crime and showed a reckless indifference to life.

This is the third time Nichols has asked Matsch to prohibit the death penalty in his case. Matsch denied both previous motions.

In the latest request, Tigar noted Nichols was in Herington, Kan., with his family when the bomb destroyed the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building.

Prosecutors have countered that Nichols had a significant role in the bombing, allegedly purchasing bomb components, helping Timothy McVeigh hide a getaway car and aiding in the robbery and burglary.

McVeigh was convicted in June and sentenced to die for the bombing.

Tigar also has argued that evidence related to the robbery of firearms dealer Roger Moore and the burglary of a Martin-Marietta quarry in Kansas is inadmissible because no link has been established between the crimes and the bombing.

He contended the Fortiers' testimony is inadmissible because it was hearsay. The couple testified during McVeigh's trial that he told them of plans to bomb the building months in advance and that Nichols was involved.

Football fever

BRANDON WHITE/Collegian
K-STATE QUARTERBACKS Michael Bishop, right, and Jonathan Beasley sign autographs for fans Thursday evening at KSU Stadium during Fan Appreciation Day. Four thousand people attended the event.

Fans see Willie's new look, wonder about starting quarterback

For the children running around the KSU Stadium parking lot Thursday, all that mattered was catching a glimpse of the newly designed Willie the Wildcat head and snagging autographs from their favorite players.

The older fans in attendance at the fourth annual Fan Appreciation Day just wanted to hear who the Cats' 1997 quarterback will be.

The 4,000 fans finally got to see the dawning of the new Willie the Wildcat head gear. Willie now sports a light gray head with bright white fangs.

"We just brought Willie into the '90s," Cindy Fox, assistant athletic director, said.

As for the quarterback situation, no one on the Wildcat football team is saying a thing. Fans didn't get any answers from Snyder about the starter, so they were left to speculate.

Jeff Pfannenstiel, senior in marketing, said he thinks it will be Jonathan Beasley.

"It's not going to be Cody Lee Smith," Pfannenstiel said. "It's definitely going to be Beasley."

The first 1,000 fans in line were treated to a free hot dog. Fans were also given refrigerator magnets with the season schedule on them.

In the stadium parking lot, the K-State cheerleading squad set up a booth to raffle off the old Willie the Wildcat head. The raffle will continue at home games and the head will be given away at the Colorado game Nov. 15. The new head was paid for by the cheerleading budget.

Fox said the new head cost the squad about $2,500. Cheerleader Amanda Betzen, junior in occupational therapy, said the cheerleaders were asking the Cat Backer club for donations to help pay for the head.

The gates to the stadium opened at 5:30 p.m. and fans draped in purple were treated to almost 45 minutes of the Cats performing offensive and defensive drills. Quarterbacks Michael Bishop, Adam Helm and Beasley took equal snaps. Smith was not on the field.

When the drills concluded, Snyder addressed the fans, introducing the coaching staff and the five team captains, Eric Hickson, Mark Simoneau, Todd Weiner, Travis Ochs and Ryan Young.

"We all understand that we've got the greatest fans that there are in the history of college football as far as I'm concerned," Snyder said.

Hickson, who suffered a broken leg that cost him the entire 1996 season at last year's Fan Appreciation Day, was the first captain to address the audience.

"First of all, I would like to thank everyone for coming out and thank everyone for supporting the team," Hickson said. "I'll see you all in one week in Illinois."

After the captains finished speaking, fans flooded the field to seek autographs.

"In the four years I've been here, every year at Fan Appreciation Day, more and more fans come out," Young said. "The crowds get bigger and bigger."

Journalism school offers sports writing class for 1st time

JOEL WHITE
staff writer

With his artfully blunt and often brazen columns in last semester's Collegian sports section, Todd Stewart put sports writing in the limelight at K-State.

Is that why the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications is offering a sports writing course for the first time?

"This is an experimental course," said Paul Parsons, professor of journalism and course instructor. "The purpose is to help sports writers recognize that sports writing is more than just event coverage."

However, Parsons said the Stewart incident did not affect the decision to offer the course.

"I didn't decide to offer this because of the controversy involving Todd Stewart," he said. "Certainly that incident fell into my hands. It happened, and so it's appropriate for us to talk about column writing."

In addition to column writing, Parsons said the class will hear various speakers from the fields of sports information and sports administration.

Parsons said offering a sports writing course is not a new concept at K-State.

"I have long thought that we should have a sports-oriented class," Parsons said. "It turned out in terms of schedule that we could do it this fall."

Braden Perry, junior in advertising, said he enjoys the open atmosphere of the class.

"It's a time for people who are interested in sports to sit down in a nontraditional setting and talk about sports journalism," he said.

One objective of the course is to discuss trends in sports reporting. Parsons said one big trend in sports writing is criticism of athletes.

"I was born in the 1950s, and I am told that was a golden age of sports journalism," he said. "Sports journalism was basically uncritical of the athletes. Now in a more cynical era, we have just as much trouble in the sports page as we do anywhere else."

Class member Angie Lucas, junior in public relations, said the course helps to change the bad image of sports writing.

Although sports writing has a bad image lately, Parsons said reading sports stories is a good diversion for readers.

"Sports pages are the last vestige of heroes," Parsons said.

"Take Bosnia. I read about Bosnia on the front page, and it's a continuing struggle. Then I turn to the sports page, and I get to read about something that has ended. It had a winner and a loser."

Baseball teams should remain in leagues of their own

VIEWPOINT

DAN MERKER

DAN MERKER is a senior in computer science. You can send e-mail to Dan at dmerker@ksu.edu.

Baseball's owners are at it again. They are threatening to continue to ruin the national pastime, this time by considering a radical realignment of the 30 major-league baseball teams.

With the addition of the Arizona Diamondbacks and the Tampa Bay Devil Rays for the 1998 season, some sort of realignment will be necessary.

The powers that be should change as little as possible. Things are starting to work, and fans are finally starting to return.

The realignment plan that appears to have the most support in the baseball world is radical realignment. This plan would put all teams east of Chicago in the American League and all teams west in the National League.

This suggestion is absurd. This arbitrary realignment would mean baseball would have to adopt a universal rule about the designated hitter. That's fine if the pitcher would bat throughout baseball, but the union wouldn't allow that. It wants the high-paying designated hitter jobs to stay. After all, if there weren't designated hitters to drive up the average salary, major-leaguers might have to stop betting $80,000 cars during batting practice (see Brian McRae).

In addition, all tradition would be sacrificed. Cincinnati and Pittsburgh, both NL teams since the 1800s, would be moved to the American League. Any true baseball fan would be sick to look in the paper and see the Reds or Pirates in the American League, or even worse, see a designated hitter in the lineup at Wrigley Field.

Baseball is built on tradition. Enough has already been sacrificed — divisional play, the wild card, the designated hitter — for money. It would be no tragedy if the Marlins went to the American League, but changing the leagues of traditional teams is too much.

The funny thing is the rationale for this realignment. The owners say they would save hundreds of thousands of dollars in travel costs. I have an idea. Stop paying .240 hitters $3.9 million per year (see Brian McRae). That's how to save money.

I believe if a team doesn't win its division, it shouldn't compete in the World Series. I will give baseball credit, though. The wild card has made for some exciting baseball in the past few years. The owners obviously love the wild card, because it puts extra money in their pockets.

The current divisional format would be a basis for the realignment. The National League is set by adding Arizona to the current Western Division. In the AL, moving Kansas City to the West would open up room for Detroit in the Central so Tampa Bay could play in the East. This way, the designated hitter rule would not have to be changed, and the integrity and history of the game would not be sacrificed.

An unbalanced schedule is big with the players. Apparently $2 million per season to play baseball isn't enough to actually have to fly across the country multiple times.

Each team would play each divisional rival 18 times. It would play the other 10 teams in its own league six times each, and the five teams from one division of the other league (which would rotate every year) six times each, making a perfect schedule of 162 games per team.

Also, more meaningful September games would be played. The amount of home and road games against each team is even balanced. It's perfect.

This move is the least ridiculous, and baseball would not upset any more fans than it already did by canceling the 1994 World Series.

FANTASY FOOTBALL '97: AN OWNER'S INSIGHT

A night in a fantasy league draft room inspires plenty of thoughts

No ESPN coverage, no post-selection interviews, no Mel Kiper Jr. evaluations.

Everybody's noses are buried in their NFL magazines. The beer is flowing and the temperature is rising. This is a night in a fantasy football league draft room.

A draft wouldn't be complete without each selection being put through intense scrutiny, so I threw in my non-expert insight.

Live with it.

9:13 p.m. First controversy. In a majority vote, the franchise owners change one point for every 50 passing yards to one point for every 40 passing yards.

9:15 p.m. Franchise owners draw draft numbers out of a hat.

9:18 p.m. First draft pick, Brett Favre.

(Surprise, surprise.)

"All I've got to say is Viva La Favre," said Steve White, the franchise owner with the top pick.

(All I've got to say is "Viva La No-Brainer.")

Second pick, John Elway.

He can come from behind, but he is aging, has only one big-time receiver — and is a Bronco.

Third pick, Barry Sanders.

There were better running backs to choose from, according to fantasy league magazines. The problem with fantasy league drafts reveals itself — the best player available isn't always the best fantasy pick.

Fourth pick, Emmitt Smith.

He amasses huge numbers in fantasy leagues because he always carries the ball in the red zone.

Fifth pick, Drew Bledsoe.

(This owner is elated that Bill Parcels is no longer the head Patriot.)

Sixth pick, Vinny Testaverde.

All he ever does is throw touchdown passes.

Seventh pick, Terrell Davis.

(I just really resent the fact that the Broncos are first to have two players taken.)

Eighth pick, Curtis Martin.

"He'll have a strong year if Bledsoe doesn't throw too much," Jake Reed, senior in premedicine said.

Ninth pick, Jerry Rice.

The greatest wide-out ever is the first wide-out taken.

Tenth pick, Steve Young.

(He's old, frail, and because of all the concussions he probably doesn't remember his own name. But he's a hell of a quarterback.)

Eleventh pick, Herman Moore.

(If the fantasy team owners actually had to deal with their players' big mouths, Moore would be picked later.)

Twelfth pick, Kordell Stewart.

(If there were extra points for having the fastest quarterback, this franchise owner wouldn't need to pick anyone else.)

Other notable draft picks in later rounds:

Fifteenth pick, Eddie George.

Someone finally took Sun Dee Mills' advice.

Twenty-third pick, Michael Irvin.

(If image were everything, Irvin couldn't make it in Pop Warner football.)

Twenty-fourth pick, Kareem Abdul-Jabar.

(Jimmy Johnson loves him, but his sky-hook needs some work.)

Twenty-ninth pick, Steve McNair.

(If McNair plays like he's back in his college days, this franchise owner will need a calculator to add all the touchdown passing points. Then he can start subtracting all the interception penalties. I hope his calculator can go into the negative numbers.)

Thirty-third pick, Jim Harbaugh.

"I'm disappointed in my Jim Harbaugh pick," Jason Pomeroy, junior in business, said.

(Don't feel bad Jason, at least you didn't pick McNair.)

Forty-first pick, Michael Jackson.

(This wide-out is a thriller.)

Forty-third pick, Brett Perriman.

(Finally, a Chief is drafted, but it's too late to avoid fantasy humiliation.)

Forty-seventh pick, Rashaan Salaam.

The question bounces throughout the draft room, "How much does a fumble cost you?"

Fifty-first pick, Steelers defense.

This fourth-round pick starts a buzz in the draft room. It ignites a string of defensive draft picks.

Fifty-fourth pick, John Kasay.

The first kicker is chosen in the fifth round.

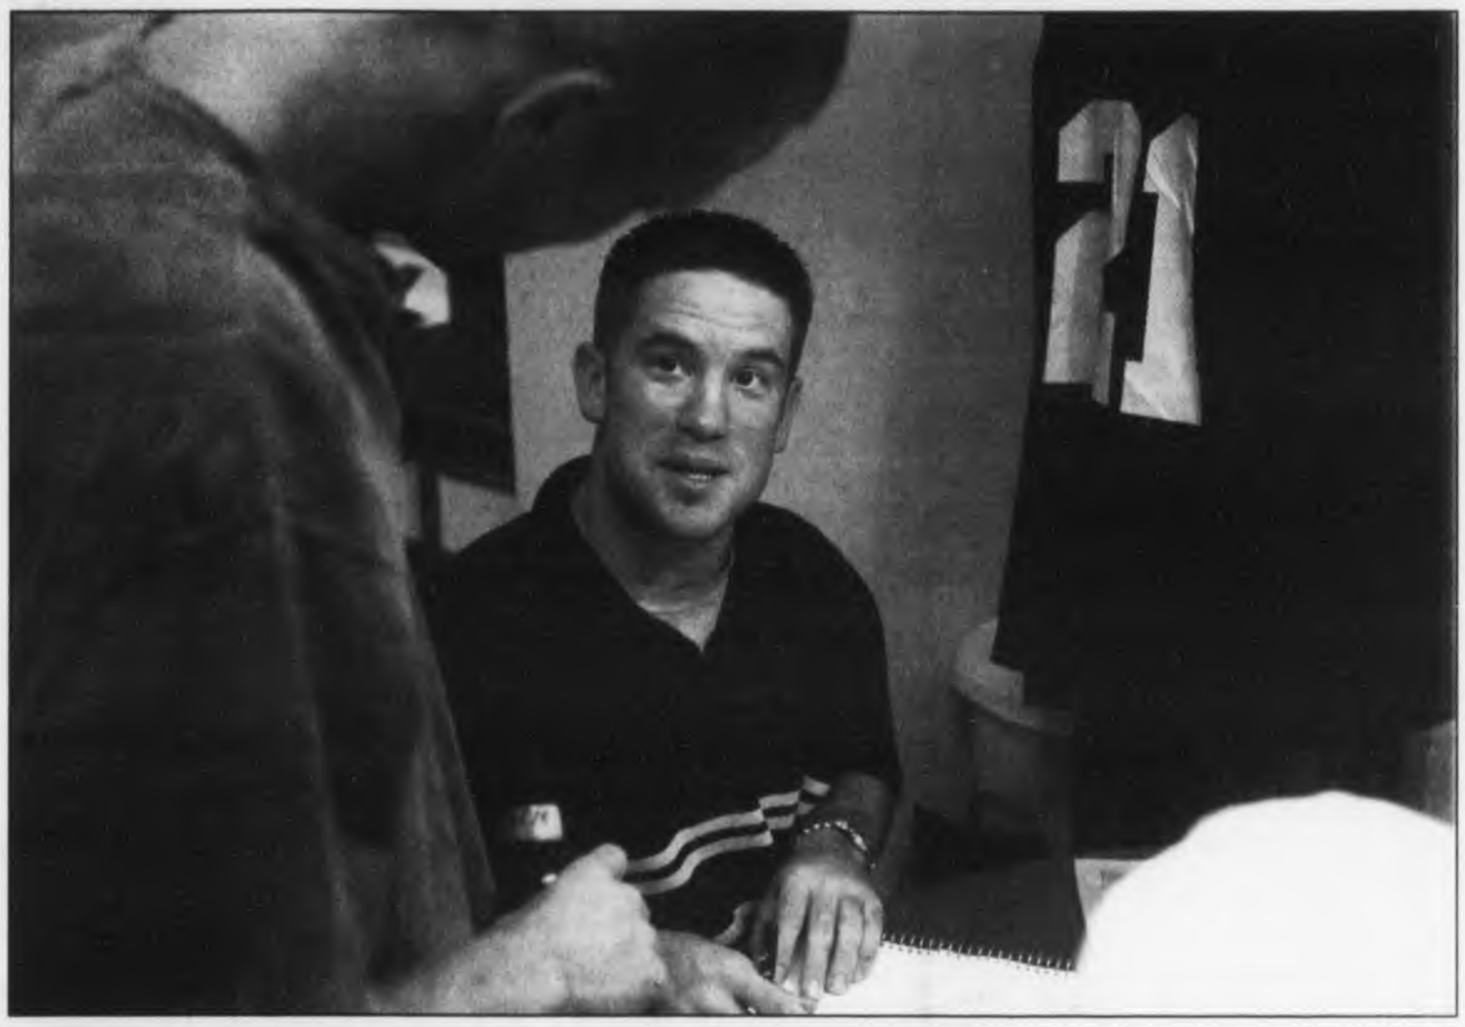
Fifty-fifth pick, Tony Gonzalez.

The first rookie selected in the draft is a Chief? (I feel like I'm in the room with a Carl Peterson wanna-be.)

Eighty-sixth pick, Chiefs defense.

(At least they were drafted.)

One hundred seventh pick, Rickey Dudley.



(Anyone who watched the Raiders play Monday Night Football last year knows that this superhuman athlete has frying pans for hands. How many points do dropped passes count for?)

One hundred thirteenth pick, Ike Hilliard.

Only a rookie, yet the steal of the draft. (Did anyone see him fake the Florida State defensive backs out of their jocks?)

11:25 p.m. Final draft pick, Colts defense. Sitting through 196 draft selections took its toll.

That's what life is like as an NFL franchise owner.

TOP. Jason Pomeroy, junior in business, discusses his next pick in the fantasy football draft with Dennis Ryan, fifth-year senior in landscape design. Fantasy football participants had a draft Wednesday night off campus. LEFT. Fantasy football magazines such as these help participants in fantasy football leagues to prepare for the draft by providing statistics about players.

Professor puts mission statement into action

▸ROGER FINGLAND WON AN award for creativity in teaching

BRANDI HERTIG
staff reporter

CUF PALMBERG/Collegian

ROGER FINGLAND, associate professor in the College of Veterinary Medicine, recently won a grant for teaching.

"We care."

The College of Veterinary Medicine's simple mission statement is something Roger Fingland, director of the Veterinary Hospital, has put into a tangible form in his proposal, titled "Pathways in Veterinary Medicine: A Model for Providing Veterinary Practice Management Education."

Fingland's proposal rose to the top in a field of proposals from the other 26 veterinary schools in the country to be awarded the 1997 Merck AgVet Award for Creativity in Teaching.

With 85 percent of the college's graduates entering private practice, Fingland saw the need to better prepare those students to compete on a management level, as well as a medical one.

"We fall short teaching people how to take all that knowledge, go out into the world of capitalism and survive financially long enough to make a difference in the lives of animals," said Richard DeBowes, head of the Department of Clinical Sciences.

The Pathways curriculum will replace what is being taught in Practice Management this fall.

The materials presented will be relative to management and business, Fingland said.

Pathways has been updated and is more in-depth than material taught in the previous class. Different aspects of management will be taught by people who specialize in one area, instead of the entire course being taught by one professor.

"The idea of the Pathways program is to have people who are experts in the field teach individual areas of management," Fingland said.

Pathways isn't the first idea Fingland has brought to K-State.

Several years ago, he developed a proposal that incorporated the Humane Society in teaching students about spaying and neutering.

Students spay or neuter animals from the Humane Society, and the animals are returned and are available to be adopted as pets.

This helps the Humane Society because animals that are spayed or neutered are more likely to be adopted than those that are not, he said.

He is also among the recipients of the Distinguished Teaching Award, which is given annually by Norden Laboratories.

That is the one award every professor strives to win, DeBowes said.

Fingland's innovation does not go unnoticed by his colleagues.

"He is the sort of person who, when he accepts a job, it will be done," DeBowes said. "It will always be done at a level that exceeds your expectations. When he sits down to do something, it's no surprise that he wins a national award."

Merck was also impressed with Fingland's ingenuity.

Fingland's Pathways proposal is unique because it has applications that can be used throughout North America, not just at one school, said Janice Keene, manager of public information for Merck.

The proposal earned the college $25,000 to put the program to work in the classroom.

But behind all the money and plaques, DeBowes said, Fingland and the rest of the college's faculty were driven by results.

"We want these kids to be successful," he said.

COMMERCE

with Capitol Federal Savings and Loan.

"I can get anything I need with no extra charge," Warren said.

The other feature of the card isn't administrated by Commerce, Giller said. That part mirrors the features of the previous Wildcat Card, paying for campus services such as vending machines, copy machines and food service, he said.

Because of the microchip embedded in the card, up to $50 can be placed on it toward the purchase of those services, he said. Money is deposited on the so-called smart chip with machines on the main floor of the Union, he said.

"You don't get receipts, you don't get a monthly statement, and if you lose your card you have the potential, maybe, of losing whatever's on the smart chip."

The cards can also be used as an ID card, with a magnetic strip with which users can gain access to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and other campus services.

However, Clark said, the service of Commerce and the smart chip are the only two differences between the new cards and the old cards. But K-Staters with accounts can use the bank in the Union to wire money and take out loans.

The new cards are the property of K-State, which paid for the materials including the chips, Kastner said.

Kastner said the bank is committed to working with students, since it's in Commerce's best interest. Since the bank has so many branches, K-State customers are more likely to stay with Commerce when they graduate, he said.

After several successful independent releases, Treponem Pal garnered a deal with Mercury Records. The result...

Big-label, big-time BUST

REVIEW BY PHIL KELLUM

▸VISIT THE MERCURY RECORDS World Wide Website, home of Treponem Pal, at www.mercuryrecords.com/mercury

With several independent label releases under its belt, French industrial band Treponem Pal is ready to take over America with its big-label debut, "Higher," on Mercury Records.

I hope America won't succumb.

Their old stuff was great, when placed among the likes of Ministry, KMFDM and Nine Inch Nails, but now it sounds contrived and rather fake.

Sascha Konietzko, of KMFDM, produced the record, so it has his signature crunchy guitar sound throughout the album.

The compact disc is promising in the first few seconds of the opening track, "Cyberfreak," with its heavy, distorted bass line that reminded me a bit of San Francisco grindcore gods Neurosis. It quickly spirals into a very cheesy industrial-funk guitar riff that loses me completely. The song also doesn't really have much of a climax and goes nowhere fast.

The second track, "Renegade," sounds much like the first song and has a very boring, plodding rhythm track pushing it along.

This is also the first song on the album to feature some rather annoying glam-rock guitar solos a la Poison and Warrant from guitarist Michel Bassin. These solos continue on pretty much every other song on this CD, unfortunately.

The only good thing about the third song, "Unchained," is some occasional crashing guitar chords and some cool dischordant noises and beeps. The guitar solos peek out of the mix again.

I kept looking to see if C.C. DeVille of Poison was credited on the album anywhere for guitar work, but he isn't.

"Panorama" sounds like an industrial band covering UB40 with its terrible fake reggae rhythm. That awful guitar solo rears its ugly head on this song, too. I wish it would just go away before any more damage is done. But it doesn't. Oh well.

"Belief" is the only song on the entire CD that sounds like the Treponem Pal of old. With its heavy guitars and cool, interesting beats, it sounds like old Ministry. The chord progressions are very thrash metalish.

I especially liked the Black Sabbath-esque slow rhythm at the breakdown.

"Psycho Rising" has those same heavy guitars and some gothic-sounding keyboard bits showing up at various times.

Review Music

The last song on the album just about made me sick. It's a cover of the disco hit "Funkytown" by Lipps Inc. The original version was pretty horrid in its own right, but this is abominably horrible. Vocalist Marco Neves' vocals on the rest of the CD sound incredibly distorted and halfway cool. On this song, they sound like they were processed through a broken $50 keyboard.

It's not even funny or remarkable on a novelty level. It's just terrible.

Take me to "Funkytown" and away from Treponem Pal please!

From the get-go, this album is quite misleading.

The cover shows the head of a mean-looking elephant, which to me signified a hard-charging affair to be had.

This was hardly the case.

It looks like the band members are trying to be big among the dance crowd with this one, and they'll definitely get it with the lame, boring cheesy beats found on this CD.

Give me Atari Teenage Riot, Shizuo, old Ministry or Lard any day over this terrible album.

This being Treponem Pal's first album on a big label, it makes me wonder if Mercury compromised the band's style just a bit.

I don't normally make this type of accusation, but I can't help but think it when it comes to this particular album.

Treponem Pal is French for syphilis, so like the translation of the name, stay away from this at all costs.

UPC offers 65-film pass for $25

▸THE UNION PROGRAM COUNCIL is offering a new film pass and a variety of movies you can see with it.

MARY RENEE SMITH
staff writer

The Union Program Council is trying something new this year — 39-cent movies. Students who purchase a UPC film pass for $25 can go see all 65 films shown by UPC, which adds up to be about 39 cents a movie. Regular admission to films shown in Forum Hall is $1.75. Special Sunday shows are $1.

Heide McBride, program adviser for UPC, said in the past the film committee had offered a pass for six movies for $7 and decided to try the pass for the entire academic year.

Other universities have similar programs.

"KU has a film pass but their pass is $35, and they only get 45 movies," McBride said. Student response has been slow.

"We have sold about 90 to 100 passes so far," she said.

The film pass gets students into films sponsored by the Feature Films and Kaleidoscope Films committees.

This semester's feature films include a drive-in movie at east Bramlage parking lot on Sept. 25. UPC will show "Animal House" and "Three Amigos." Students who have the pass can get in free.

Disney's newest feature-length cartoon, "Hercules," will be shown during Family Weekend Oct. 10-12. In conjunction with Hispanic Heritage Month, UPC will offer "Evita" Oct. 24-26.

The K-State tradition of showing "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" on Halloween will continue this year. McBride said the projection problem that plagued last year's showing has been solved.

The film projector had problems last year.

"The Union has a video projector we are going to use instead of the regular film projector," McBride said. Halloween falls on a Friday night this year and UPC will show the "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" on Friday and Saturday.

"We have always had a good turnout for 'Rocky Horror' but this year with the shows being on the weekend, we expect even better since people don't have to get up and go to class the next morning," McBride said.

Kaleidoscope's films are traditionally art films, older films or films people in Manhattan might not have the chance to see.

The older films this year are the Marx brothers political classic satire "Duck Soup" and "Vertigo," the Alfred Hitchcock film starring the late Jimmy Stewart.

The end of September will bring Japanimation to Forum Hall.

"Japanamation is something Kaleidoscope has wanted to do for a while now," McBride said. "Magna Entertainment gives the video to colleges for free as long as we don't charge admission."

Those attending any of the shows will have the chance to win the video in a drawing.

The Issues and Ideas Committee will bring a speaker in conjunction with the film "Rosewood" in late November.

The film tells the true story of a town in Florida that was burned to the ground in 1923 after a racial incident.

The docudrama "Stonewall" is being sponsored by the Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Society to be shown during Coming Out Week in October.

The film passes are available for purchase on the third floor of the Union in the UPC office.

2 children found dead in refrigerator

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — James Krug remembers the 6-year-old boy and his 9-year-old sister riding their bicycles or offering neighbors a chance to hold their puppy.

Shortly after 4 a.m. Thursday police officers found the two children dead in an old refrigerator in the basement of their home, said Wichita Police Lt. Ken Landwehr. Police were not releasing their names.

There were no signs of trauma on the bodies, but police did not know if the deaths were accidental or homicides, Landwehr said. Autopsies were being performed, and investigators were treating the deaths as suspicious.

A family member called police about 3:30 a.m. to report the children missing. They were last seen Wednesday evening, Landwehr said.

Landwehr said he thought it was the mother who called police, but was not sure.

Landwehr said the children lived in the house with their mother, a 10-month-old child, their grandfather, an uncle and another man, described by police as their mother's husband or boyfriend.

The refrigerator, in the basement of the home, was plugged in and appeared to be functioning. It was not being used as the main refrigerator, but Landwehr did not know if there was anything in it.

Police drove away with the white Philco refrigerator strapped in the back of a police truck shortly after 11 a.m. An empty, inflatable swimming pool; a bicycle; balls, and a swing set littered the front yard of the house where the children lived.

Claud Hardrick, 68, who lives next door, said he woke up in the middle of the night to the sound of wailing and crying.

"Somebody over there was squawking and raising the roof," he said. He looked outside, but couldn't see anything.

While he was watering his lawn later in the morning, a police officer told him what had happened. There were police cars and ambulances parked in front of the house.

"I knew it had to be something terrible for all the commotion," he said.

Krug, 66, who lives on the other side of Hardrick, used to worry about the children playing in the quiet street in front of their home. Sometimes he would herd them to the safety of a lawn or sidewalk, he said.

"This," he said, then paused. "You can't see it. It's just a little hard to take."

before that date need to be fixed. The clarification in wording makes the recall numbers less severe than earlier reports, Thoman said.

Students and faculty can check for laminate on their card by holding it near a light and looking for the border of the clear plastic, Thoman said. It is most easily spotted on the edges of the card or surrounding the gold vending machine chip on the left side of the card.

Damaged cards will have to be reprinted, Thoman said, but unlaminated cards with no noticeable damage can be protected in a matter of minutes.

The Campus Card Center will be open throughout the day today, and if demand for new cards persists, the center might extend its operations into next week.

Until the cards can be fixed, Thoman said they should be kept out of plastic ID holders.

"If you keep it out of the plastic ID holders, it will be OK until you can come in. It just depends on how long you've been carrying it," he said.

The recall is the latest in a string of card-related problems. Cardstock for the ID arrived two weeks late, forcing Union officials to print the cards during the first week of school, subsequently delaying their distribution.

Computer and printing equipment was also an obstacle. At most times during the printing process, only two out of four printers were functioning. Each card takes about one minute to print.

"When you multiply it out, you can see why it took so long to get them all printed," Thoman said.

Some of the Wildcat Cards were left unprinted because of computer error or printer problems, which has also caused confusion, he said.

Thoman said a lot of people whose cards weren't ready were saying, "I had mine taken right after this person, and they got theirs."

"Those were just times when the computer burped and it didn't work," he said.

After cards were distributed, problems continued.

The Wildcat Card allows students and faculty to access their Wildcat Accounts and their Commerce Bank Wildcat Checking Accounts at participating locations. However, Thoman said those locations are different for each account, and many cardholders aren't clear about the differences between the accounts.

"The general use of the word 'Wildcat' by Commerce Bank and the Union is really confusing," he said.

Wildcat Accounts can be used at various locations in the Union and throughout the campus. They cannot be used elsewhere. Students deposit money into the account at the card office in the Union.

Commerce Bank Wildcat Checking Accounts are also available to students and faculty. The Wildcat Card serves as a debit card for the account. It can be used at some places on campus and at various Manhattan businesses.

Though the Wildcat Account can be used in the Union Stateroom, Subway and other campus food services, the Wildcat Checking Account card cannot. This discrepancy has frustrated many cardholders, Thoman said.

Food service personnel "have caught holy what's-it down there because people think they can use the checking account card and they have to tell them that they don't accept the Wildcat Checking Account card, they just accept the Wildcat Account. It's confusing," he said.

Thoman said Union personnel discussed the card problems at a meeting Thursday morning. They will attempt to make the card's functions clearer and make the recall as smooth as possible, he said.

"When we get fully under way, it will be a real slick convenience for people to use all of these functions. It will take some time, though," Thoman said.

"A lot of people may like the card but there are those, I'm afraid, who are already frustrated with it," he said.

Quarterback to be named today

SOURCE SAYS BISHOP TO BE QB STARTER

▶ Up to date updates. Official choice coverage this afternoon on the eCollegian.

SUN DEE MILLS
sports editor

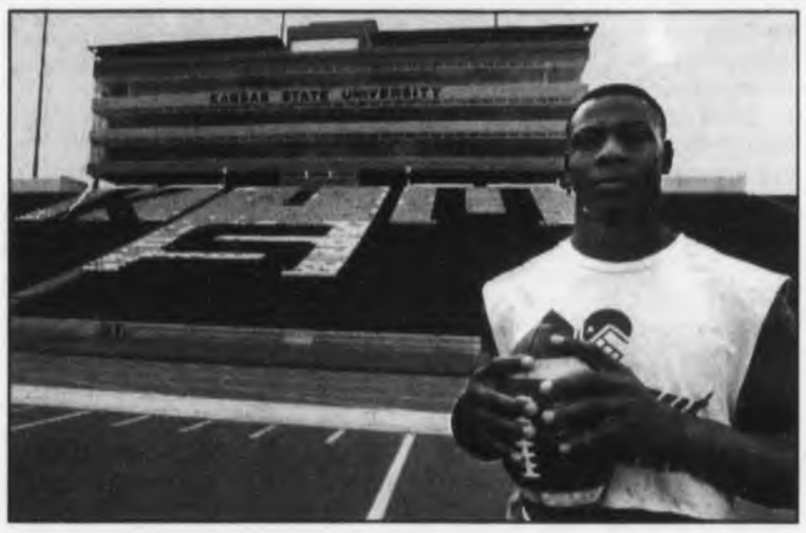
Who's the man?

The question weighing on every Wildcat fan's mind will be answered around lunchtime today.

Coach Bill Snyder said in a teleconference Monday that he would announce the 1997 starting quarterback at the season's first news conference at 12:30 p.m.

A source close to the Cats said junior transfer Michael Bishop would get the starting bid, but attempts to confirm the reports were unsuccessful.

Bishop, a two-time national champion on the community college level, has not lost a game since high school in Willis, Texas. At Blinn Community College, Bishop recorded his best game against Kilgore Community College, putting up 321 yards and completing three touchdown passes.



Bishop's 24-0 record during his tenure at Blinn led him to be ranked in various recruiting magazines as one of the nation's top three community college quarterbacks.

Entering Division I practices at K-State this summer, Bishop competed with sophomores Jonathan Beasley and Adam Helm for the job.

As a true freshman last season, Beasley competed in eight contests, including the 39-3 loss to Nebraska on Oct. 5 at KSU Stadium.

Helm redshirted the 1995 season and saw limited action at the end of the Indiana State game Sept. 7.

Because Helm does not have a redshirt year left, it is expected that Helm will be Bishop's backup and Beasley will redshirt the 1997 season.

ACCORDING TO sources close to the football team, Michael Bishop stands as lead contender for the job of Wildcat quarterback.

BSU to create student mentoring program

NATE JENKINS
staff writer

Your're 18 years old and everything, from the bed you sleep on to the window you peer out of first thing in the morning, is new.

Thousands of new faces, hundreds of different social and academic options, plenty of new and exciting ways to dig yourself holes that can take the next four years to climb out of.

Welcome to college. Welcome to K-State.

Fortunately, there are organizations that understand how easy it is to lose focus during the first year in college, and they want to help. The Black Student Union is one of them.

Primarily a social organization for black students at K-State, the Black Student Union concentrates on making students feel more at home on a campus that is only about 3 percent black.

This year, the education department of BSU is starting a new program specially designed to make freshmen feel more at home academically.

Called the Mentor Program, it pairs upperclassmen with younger black students who want to be involved with the program.

It is still in the planning stages, but Colette McLemore, president of BSU, said its members have already begun to collect information, such as previous grade point averages and majors, from interested freshmen.

McLemore said she is excited about the possibilities of the new program and said it is an excellent opportunity for young students to become more relaxed in their new surroundings.

"For a person to come to college their first year and maybe be the only black person in a class can be tough," she said. "Having a mentor can make experiences like that a little easier."

There is no application and acceptance process in the new program, and everybody is encouraged to get involved, including those who wish to be mentors.

McLemore said BSU hopes the program will strengthen ties between black students on campus and encourage people to get more involved with the organization. McLemore said a relatively small percentage of the black population at K-State worked directly with BSU, and the mentor program could increase the level of participation.

Previously, BSU's primary role was as a social facilitator, organizing events to bring people together in a relaxed, fun atmosphere, McLemore said. There weren't too many opportunities for students to get involved in a more structured setting, and the mentor program offers that.

The first meeting for students interested in the mentor program, or those who just want some tips on how to keep from straying too far from the books, is at the academic workshop Sept. 9 in the Union Little Theatre.

Commission applies for Scenic Drive grant

MATT KREPS
staff writer

The Riley County Commission has applied for a $2 million grant to finance the Scenic Drive road extension that would serve as the new development boundary for Manhattan's expansion.

The proposed road would link U.S. Highway 24 and Kansas Highway 18. The new road would also serve as the main access to the planned Colbert Hills golf course and a new housing division. The county shops would also relocate to the new road.

The construction, which would coincide with construction of the golf course, is projected to be finished by the year 2000.

The total cost for the project is more than $5 million. To fund the project, the county is looking to the approval of the $2 million grant from the Kansas Department of Transportation. If the grant is approved, the city will finance the remaining $3 million with tax money.

The KDOT grant is through a rural development program to extend city boundaries and allow for new growth. A similar grant was used to extend Kansas Highway 177 into Manhattan. The $2 million would be used to surface the road.

"That's federal government tax money that comes to Kansas that the Department of Transportation gets to allocate," Dan Harden, county public works director, said.

The county should have a decision on the grant by the first part of December, Bob Newsome, Riley County commissioner, said. Until it gets a decision, the commission will not take any further action in planning the project.

The project is not without opposition. Under the original plan, an initial

Details emerge in Diana's accident investigation

remembering Princess Diana

PARIS — New details of Princess Diana's fatal ride emerged Monday, and the picture French sources painted was grim: a legally drunken driver, possibly pushing his Mercedes to speeds faster than 100 mph, trying to weave around slower traffic.

It introduced a new element in an investigation that had seemed focused on the role that pursuing photographers might have played in causing the crash, which also killed Diana's millionaire boyfriend Dodi Fayed and the driver.

In one damning, but unconfirmed, report Monday, the newspaper Le Monde said witnesses saw photographers trying to push police and rescuers away as they snapped photos of Diana and Fayed after the crash.

And in today's issues of London newspapers, there were unconfirmed reports that the driver had taunted photographers before departing from a hotel with Diana and Fayed, suggesting they wouldn't be able to keep up with the Mercedes.

Police extended the detention of seven photographers taken into custody after the crash. They were expected to be placed under formal investigation today — a step short of being formally charged. The precise charges they might face were not known.

Early witness reports had said the car was traveling at excessively high speed, and on Monday a police official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the speedometer was found stuck at 196 kilometers per hour — 121 mph — an almost certain indicator of its speed at impact.

In a statement, prosecutors said blood tests on driver Henri Paul showed he had an illegal blood-alcohol level. They did not give the level, but a judicial source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said it was 1.75 grams of alcohol per liter of blood — more than three times France's legal limit.

France's National Association for the Prevention of Alcoholism said that was the equivalent of drinking nine shots of whiskey — a shot in a French bar equaling about 1.2 ounces.

Citizens group to advise on roads

MATT KREPS
staff writer

The Riley County Commission will be appointing a citizen committee to help plan road and bridge management.

County Commissioner Bob Newsome said the group would mirror a highly successful effort in the 1960s that resulted in many of the planning guidelines the county uses today.

"Local people have a lot of good ideas," Newsome said.

The new Roads and Bridges Committee will consist of 20 to 25 citizens from around the county. The members will be elected or appointed by specific groups.

Township associations, various rural districts, the city of Manhattan, the Chamber of Commerce and K-State will send members to the committee. Each county commissioner will also appoint members to the group, Newsome said.

The committee will be responsible for suggestions regarding maintenance and construction of all present and future roads in Riley County. The first report will be due in eight or nine months

Practical joke wastes 4 hours of police's time

PEORIA, Ill. — There was no hostage, no gun and no fun for police.

In what authorities described as a poor practical joke, police surrounded a home for four hours this weekend only to discover there was no problem.

A witness had told police a gunman had forced his way into the home by threatening its resident with a long-barreled gun, police spokesman Jay Sauer said. It was not known who called in the tip.

Police surrounded the house and evacuated other homes on the block. Officers repeatedly spoke through a megaphone to try to resolve the situation but got no response.

When police raided the house early Sunday, it turned out one roommate had faked having a gun by holding an umbrella under his coat. Charged with disorderly conduct were Oversanne Etienne, 23, and Sony Jean, 22.

"It's really bizarre behavior," Sauer said. "They were well aware the police were out here. They also knew we wanted them to come out."

Man saves child, then gets washed away in boating accident

PORT MAHON, Del. — A man boating on Delaware Bay was missing tMonday after diving into the water to save one of three young passengers who had fallen overboard.

Jerald Kendricks, 43, of Wilmington, Del., jumped from the 19-foot boat late Sunday to save the 10-year-old girl, U.S. Coast Guard petty officer David St. Pierre said. He was able to help her back on board.

But the two other children — the girl's 10-year-old twin sister and her 15-year-old brother — then lost sight of Kendricks, a family friend.

Adrift a mile from land and unsure how to operate the boat, one of the children used a cellular phone to dial 911.

St. Pierre said the children could not describe where they were, so the Coast Guard and telephone company tracked down Kendricks' phone number in Wilmington.

His mother gave rescuers an idea of where to look, but another boater had already towed the drifting boat back to shore.

Kendricks was not wearing a life jacket and wore a black shirt, making the rescue attempt more difficult, St. Pierre said.

Iranian man executed for spying the for United States

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran executed a man it accused of spying for the United States, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported Monday.

Seyavash Bayani was put to death last week in Tehran's Evin prison for allegedly passing military secrets to the Central Intelligence Agency, IRNA reported. The report did not say whether he was hanged or killed by a firing squad, the usual methods of execution.

Bayani was arrested in 1995 and confessed to spying, the agency said.

Bayani left Iran in 1984 and received political asylum in the United States, where he lived for 11 years, the agency said. He was then ordered to return to Iran as a CIA spy, IRNA said.

In Washington, the State Department said there was no one available to comment on the case on the Labor Day holiday.

RCPD patrolman hit by car

A Riley County Police Department officer was struck by a car Friday during a traffic stop.

Patrolman Richard Fink was struck on the hand by a vehicle's mirror when he attempted to make a traffic stop. The driver, Jason L. Wilson of Great Bend, Kan. was later apprehended and charged with battery to a law enforcement officer.

Fink's injuries were not serious.

JAMES KOELLIKER is the new department head of biological and agricultural engineering. The department covers a wide range of disciplines from agricultural machinery design to environmental management.

New engineering department head brings experience, understanding to K-State

MATT KREPS
staff writer

The Department of Biological and Agricultural Engineering has a new leader. James Koelliker, a former K-State civil engineering professor, took over duties as department head Aug. 4.

Part of Koelliker's motivation to apply for the position was service to the engineering community.

"I don't think my career would be complete without trying to provide some leadership to the profession," he said.

In his new position, he hopes to bring some wisdom, a lot of experience in the K-State engineering system, and a good understanding of university operations to the department.

Koelliker began his education at K-State in 1963 as a transfer student. He earned his bachelor's degree in agricultural engineering in 1967. He then went to Iowa State University for his master's and doctoral degrees.

In addition to his education and experience in public- and private-sector engineering, Koelliker is also a licensed professional engineer.

"I consider that fairly important for a person that is going to teach and mentor students — that they have the credentials," Koelliker said.

The new department head said he sees a bright future for the department.

"One of the things that is exciting to me right now is that this department's enrollment is on the increase, which indicates to me that students recognize what we're doing is important," he said. "In terms of the growth of the profession, environmental and biological products and systems are more attractive to students as careers and more needed."

Biological and agricultural engineering are relatively new disciplines. It began with a small group of engineers who wanted to take the drudgery out of agriculture production. Improvements came at a quick pace, and the number of people an average farmer feeds went from one to 102 in the span of a century.

"Agriculture, in terms of manipulating the environment, controls and manipulates more of the habitable portions of the earth than any other industry," Koelliker said.

At the moment, Koelliker is getting acquainted with the department and his new duties.

"I'm still looking at who people are, what people do and what they want to do. My primary job as a leader is to give direction."

After that, he said he would try to help the department do what it does best — find answers.

He said the faculty's time is split between teaching, research and extension responsibilities. Teaching and research constitute about 60 percent of the faculty's time, he said. The remaining 40 percent is spent taking the new ideas directly to the people who will use them.

Another important item on Koelliker's agenda is the move toward outcomes-based education. The next time K-State engineering is evaluated for accreditation, more emphasis will be placed on the final product rather than the methods.

"That's going to be a fairly important change in engineering education over the next decade or so that I look forward to being involved with," Koelliker said.

Residence halls still have rooms available

SANDY DAVIS
staff writer

Students who are still looking for a place to call home this semester can look toward the residence halls.

Official move-in day for the nine residence halls was Aug. 23, but some students still haven't finalized their living arrangements for the semester.

Bob Burgess, assistant director for business operations for the Department of Housing and Dining Services, said the department is in the process of finding out if any of the students who have yet to check in still plan to live in the halls.

"Right now all of the halls are extremely full," Burgess said.

But Burgess said he expects plenty of rooms will be available in all the halls for room transfers and new residents.

New residents are being placed in Ford and Marlatt halls until room transfers can be arranged.

Burgess said the exact figures aren't in yet, but at last count there were 100 more students in residence halls than there were last year. About 3,300 students will live in the halls this year.

The cost of living in the residence halls is fairly competitive to off-campus housing because the price includes rent, utilities, local phone service and food service.

Burgess said the convenience of an on-campus location, meals and 24-hour maintenance are added benefits of living in the halls.

The living options have not changed from last year. Different meal plans and types of living arrangements are available.

This year, the new suites in the basement of Boyd Hall are also open. Burgess said initial response has been good.

Van Zile, West, Haymaker, Goodnow and Marlatt halls also offer suites as an alternative to the traditional room arrangements.

Cluster housing is a new style of suite. The clusters have a central living area with two bathrooms and a cluster of bedrooms surrounding the area.

Burgess said the suites are spread around campus so students in any of the complexes have an opportunity to live in one.

"Students tend to live in the same general area from year to year," Burgess said.

Burgess said another change this year is the addition of an academic coordinator, John Danos, to serve as a link between the halls and the academic departments.

The purpose of the new position is to bring in academic programs to help students with things like study skills and test-taking. A study center will also be available.

Danos' office will be in the Derby Food Center.

Burgess said he thinks the halls are a good experience for students, especially those new to K-State.

Though more than 50 percent of hall residents are freshmen, a fair balance of upperclassmen, including the hall staff, are around to help new students adjust to the university experience.

"Residence halls have always given students the opportunity to acclimate themselves to campus," Burgess said.

Lucky hunch leads to alleged robber's arrest

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BROWNSVILLE, Texas — There was no fancy manhunt, just luck and the hunch of a U.S. Customs inspector that nabbed the man suspected of stealing $22 million, the biggest heist in the nation's history.

Philip Johnson, an armored car driver accused of stealing from his employer last March in Jacksonville, Fla., was arrested Saturday in Brownsville, near the U.S.-Mexico border. His arraignment on a federal charge of unlawful flight to avoid prosecution was scheduled for later this week.

The money from the armored car was not recovered, and authorities said they don't know where it might be.

It was Johnson's answers to routine questions at a border crossing that spurred the interest of an unidentified senior Customs inspector.

"He didn't look at her cross-eyed or anything strange in that regard She just wanted to check this guy out further," Customs spokeswoman Judy Turner said Sunday. "He acted pretty ordinarily."

Police had been searching for Johnson, 33, since the March 29 heist of a Loomis, Fargo & Co. armored car. Authorities had tracked him from Jacksonville to Asheville, N.C., where the Loomis van was found.

The FBI then received reports that Johnson had been sighted in Houston and the Brownsville area. Even though authorities were on the right trail, Johnson remained elusive — until Saturday morning.

Johnson was one of 25 passengers subjected to a routine inspection of a commercial bus going from Matamoros, Mexico, to Houston.

When an inspector approached Johnson, he identified himself as Roger Lawter and presented a North Carolina identification card with Lawter's name. He said he had been in the Mexican coastal town of Tampico, a few hundred miles south of Brownsville, and was going to Houston.

Asked if he had anything to declare more than $10,000, he said no, just some clothes.

"He just didn't sound truthful," the inspector said through Turner. Some of his answers about visiting friends in Tampico sounded like something he'd just thought of.

Nearby, a wanted poster with Johnson's picture was on display at the bridge, but inspectors didn't recognize him because he was thinner, had longer hair and had grown a beard.

On a hunch, the inspector ran Lawter's name through a national crime database that came back with some unexpected information: Lawter was one of the aliases being used by Johnson.

The inspector returned to Johnson and asked for more identification. He offered to retrieve his birth certificate from his luggage.

But other inspectors already were fishing through the baggage. In addition to numerous other IDs, they discovered more than $10,000 in U.S. and Mexican currency. He was arrested.

All media should not be blamed for Princess Diana's death

Princess Diana's death this weekend in Paris has set off a barrage of complaints against the media as a whole. Here at the Collegian, we think it is important to point out that all media should not be lumped together and blamed for this tragic car accident.

Details of what actually happened are sketchy. We do not know if the photographers in pursuit of the car were entirely or partly to blame for the accident. Even if it is found that they are to blame, the press as a whole is not responsible.

Princess Diana's newsworthiness should have stemmed from her work with AIDS charities and land-mine victims. To the contrary, her picture was constantly printed in less-than-reputable papers and magazines next to headlines about her love life.

People who buy those type of magazines and papers are buying into the celebrity-chasing mentality that sends publisher's hands reaching for their pocketbooks and photographers scrambling for juicy photos to sell to them.

In reputable newspapers, stories about Princess Diana dealt with her charity work. The stories were printed next to photographs taken by photographers who showed up to shoot pictures of news interest.

The National Enquirer and other tabloid newspapers have refused to buy the pictures of Princess Diana taken after the fatal accident. Those newspapers are moving in the right direction.

Those photos have no news value. Publishing them will not give the public more information about the accident. Everyone knows it was terrible, and that should be enough.

If the photographers hadn't thought (and rightly so) that they could get some big bucks for a picture of Diana and Dodi Fayed, they would not have chased them. If no one bought the papers that might publish those photos, the demand for such photos would not exist.

The blame game is easy to play, but winners are few if any. Diana is dead, and the responsible party is not yet known. One thing is certain — the photographers were trying to get photos that should not have been in demand, but were.

And things need to change.

HAVING TROUBLE MAKING FRIENDS?

It might be easier than previously thought

Do you ever get that not-so-fresh feeling?

No, sicko, I don't mean THAT not-so-fresh feeling. This is a student-run publication. My column is strictly PG-13 so more people can read it and enjoy what they're reading. Sure, sometimes other staff members write offensive stuff, get some facts wrong, initiate military skirmishes in third-world countries. You know — basic errors any publication could make.

VIEWPOINT

JON KURCHE

JON KURCHE is a freshman in physics. You can send e-mail to Jon at jsk6609@ksu.edu

But I can assure you that for today, this area of the paper is a smut-free environment as per docket number 2001-5674-A2 of the Student Senate bylaws, Section 3.

Get your mind out of the gutter.

I figure it has been a long summer. Maybe you are tired of the same old faces. Your current friends are boring. Maybe you don't know anybody yet and are struggling to make it through the day in utter solitude. Either way, you need the rejuvenation of a new personality in your life.

Therefore, as a service to the reader, I would like to present an installation of the highly acclaimed, award-winning JON THE FRESHMAN IMPARTS THE WISDOM OF THE AGES ABOUT STUFF, in which I teach about friends.

One of the best parts of the first week of school was being able to go around campus and talk to people I hardly even knew. It seems I developed a special intimacy with the young men and women from my alma mater. I found that being estranged in a new environment was more than enough to bring us all together, even though we were not necessarily well acquainted in high school.

Interesting. The idea that bonds form when humans are under duress is a sociological concept known as group dynamics. It is apparently a survival mechanism that exists vestigially from our evolution away from the simian.

Apparently, primates tend to be highly communal animals. Those who are forcibly isolated from the group react violently when reintroduced, similar to the plight of undesirables in our society, who, finding themselves isolated, strike back with further anti-social behavior.

But I wouldn't know anything about that. I'm a physics major.

The first and easiest way to make friends would be to seek out those whom you might have seen in high school but never really talked to. All of a sudden you will find yourself having a great deal more in common — like beef products. Beef is good. We have a great College of Agriculture here. That could be the basis of a beautiful relationship.

The problem is that not everyone makes friends as easily as others. Perhaps the person you are trying to be friends with is a vegetarian. What you need is a plan. Luckily, I have one for you. Just follow the steps.

Jon's plan

1) Find somebody you want to be friends with. Don't take somebody else's friend. That's mean.

2) Follow that person. Find out his or her interests.

2a) I said follow. Not stalk.

3) Collect data and make a chart. I don't know why you need to make a chart, but that's what they teach you in high school science. Do it.

4) Dress yourself in formalwear to make a good first impression.

5) Plan a place to strike up a conversation. Skip No. 4 if that place includes water, mud or Jell-O.

6) Intercept the soon-to-be friend and strike up a conversation.

Congratulations! A new friend is yours! Soon the whole campus will love you!

Those of you who are advanced enough should be able to skip right to No. 6 with ease. That's the nice thing about K-State. It's so user-friendly.

That's the main reason I chose this school. Everyone seemed easy to talk to. The atmosphere was laid back. Where else could you see the president of the university standing outside his home watching his dogs run in the yard? You can here. President Jon Wefald needs to walk his dogs, too. I know this. I got chased by one last week. They're bigger than they look.

The point is that I like how communal it feels. Communities are good places to meet friends. They tend to be more understanding than what is normally expected.

In honor of this, if you're having trouble, I offer to be your friend. I'll even invite you to a football game Friday. My alma mater, Shawnee Mission Northwest High School, Shawnee, Kan., is coming to town to play against Manhattan High School. I expect to be there. I expect Northwest to win. It should be fun.

In the meantime, buy ads. At least the advertising department will like you.

ROAD WARS

DEREGULATION OF TRUCKING INDUSTRY COULD HAVE SERIOUS RAMIFICATIONS FOR MOTORISTS

It happened in late summer 1996.

I was in my elderly Nissan Maxima driving westbound on Interstate 84 toward Brewster, N.Y., and had just passed the Connecticut state line. He was in the lane next to me, in a tractor unit hauling a 50-foot trailer full of crushed rock for a construction project.

Five minutes earlier, he had pulled out into the left lane because he was convinced I was going too slow. (I was then driving five miles faster than the legal limit.) He soon realized he needed to get back in the right lane so he could take Interstate 684 south toward New York.

VIEWPOINT

JONATHAN WINKLER

JONATHAN WINKLER is a senior in physics. You can send e-mail to Jonathan at jnw@ksu.edu.

Being parallel to him in that lane, I was in his way. So for about 20 seconds, he swerved wildly left to right in his lane, obviously hoping to scare me off the road onto the shoulder so he could take my space. When that failed to work, he kept moving right until I was forced to pull onto the shoulder, accelerate to 80 mph and pass the car in front. Fortunately, bridges on I-84 are built with full shoulders, so I didn't have guardrails in my way when I flew across one while making this maneuver.

Sound unusual? If the trucking industry has its way in Congress when the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act — President Bush's highway law, passed in 1991 and colloquially called ISTEA or "ice tea" — comes up for renewal this Sept. 30, you might also have an opportunity to play this game of chicken with truckers and for higher stakes.

Without proposing any controls on truckers' mileages or working hours, the industry wants Congress to authorize maximum gross weights of 97,000 pounds per truck — as opposed to the present 60,000 — and permit triple trailers. It makes all the usual arguments — trucks are the lifeblood of the American economy, truck drivers are safe because most accidents involving trucks are caused by car drivers, licensing procedures are tight enough to keep incompetent truckers from slipping through.

It might seem unpatriotic to oppose the increase of American prosperity. But for the safety of road users, further deregulation of the trucking industry must be avoided. Except for a few shipping lines, such as Schneider (owner of those well-behaved, all-orange trucks), nobody regulates the hours truckers can drive or the number of miles they can be asked to cover in a single day. All too frequently this results in negligent or aggressive driving of the sort I encountered.

We've already heard all sorts of horror stories about truckers in a hurry, such as the one drowsing at the wheel who led the Pennsylvania State Police on a high-speed chase for 50 miles, or the one the Connecticut State Police is still looking for who failed to secure tires on his flatbed, one of which flew off and killed a motorist.

Drivers for shipping lines other than Schneider also have bad road manners. Yellow drivers will get on their CBs and arrange with their colleagues to "box in" cars on otherwise empty stretches of New Mexico interstate.

Mayflower will routinely load its trailers to the top without regard for center of gravity so that they sway alarmingly from side to side while navigating the Kentucky hills on I-64. Nearly every trucker goes too slow on slopes and too fast on downslopes in the mountains, which results in passing matches that are both annoying and frightening to other motorists.

The safe-trucker concept also does not stand up to statistical analysis. It is true that most accidents involving trucks and cars are caused by the car driver. But it is also true that trucks are involved in proportionately more accidents than their numbers on the road would suggest.

An increase in maximum gross weights by 50 percent will nearly halve the life of our freeway bridges, from more than 50 years to less than 29. Because the trucking industry does not propose new or increased taxes to pay for replacement bridges and the inconvenience to other motorists involved in constructing them, and Congress has preferred so far not to take highway construction off budget, to raise the maximum weight would be unconscionable.

Such a step would also increase the temptation for truckers to distribute their loads improperly, thus increasing tipover hazard.

Further deregulation of the trucking industry will encourage shipping lines to pressure underqualified truckers to obtain the necessary endorsements to drive two or three trailers and to encourage the ones that already have them to work longer hours to increase productivity. The resulting lack of sleep and amphetamine use will promote aggressive and unsafe driving.

It is time to call an end to this escalating economic pressure and say that there is a limit to the amount of material that can safely be transported on our interstate highways by trucks.

These caravans of the highway tow loads that range from 20 to 30 times the mass of your car or truck. It is time to handicap them in your favor.

Football ticket mix-up apology

Editor,

I'd like to apologize to all of you who endured long lines and blistering heat to pick up your Wildcat football tickets. Your support remains unrivaled in the Big 12.

Enthusiasm for the season triggered an unnecessary rush and caught us off guard. This, combined with difficulties with the new ID cards, caused the line. We should have anticipated better and planned accordingly.

We didn't select the best time for pick up. The sequence was not spelled out, and signs at the site were not adequate.

We'll continue to work to improve and will also continue to rely on the valuable feedback provided to us by the Collegian, members of the Student Ticket Committee and K-State students in general.

Sorry for the inconvenience we caused you.

Column information incorrect

Editor,

One of the most important things I learned as a journalism and mass communications student at K-State was to check the facts.

Unfortunately, columnist Jonathan Winkler did not check his facts for his column "Become anonymous" in the Aug. 26 Collegian. His column was littered with false and misleading information.

Vehicle records have been open to the public for 40 years. The 1957 Legislature determined that the records should be public information. However, the driver's license photos themselves are confidential. Furthermore, state law does not allow the records to be sold for marketing.

The Legislature created the Information Network of Kansas to provide access to public state government information.

The information network has had vehicle records on the Internet — on a restricted basis — for the past five years. To view the records online, you have to sign up with the network. You also must sign a certificate saying you won't use the records for marketing or solicitation, and you are required to pay a fee for each record you look up.

Kansans who do not want their records open to the public on the Internet or sold to someone over the counter should opt out. Under the Federal Privacy Act of 1994, the Division of Motor Vehicles is giving drivers and vehicle owners a chance to close their records for the first time in 40 years.

There is no deadline for opting out. Starting Sept. 13, the records of those who have opted out will be closed to the public.

There are a few people who will still have access to the records even after they're closed. The records may still be used, for example, by employers or insurance agents to check on an applicant's record. Law enforcement may still look up records as well.

The easiest way to close your records to the public is to pick up an opt out form at any driver's license exam station or county treasurer's office. If you fill out the form and send it to us, we will close both your vehicle registration and driving records at the same time. The form is also available at www.ink.org/public/kdor.

Doctor suspended after patient's death

Doctor in trouble.
Patrick Chavis, a 45-year-old doctor has been temporarily barred from practicing because of alleged negligence, years after his affirmative action case opened his doors to medical school.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LYNWOOD, Calif. — Long before California banned racial preferences, there was Patrick Chavis, a black medical student swept up in one of the earliest court cases about affirmative action.

Chavis, who grew up in South Central Los Angeles, not only survived the Bakke case, which went all the way to the Supreme Court in the 1970s, but was hailed as the embodiment of affirmative action as it was meant to be when he opened an office in a poor Los Angeles neighborhood instead of a well-to-do suburb.

Today, however, the 45-year-old obstetrician-gynecologist is temporarily barred from practicing because of alleged negligence in the death of a liposuction patient, and critics are using him as a weapon to attack affirmative action.

"A cautionary tale about the dangers of preferential treatment," Mark Lasswell, contributing editor at Allure magazine, wrote in a Wall Street Journal opinion piece Wednesday.

Civil rights groups that once touted Chavis said his problems should not be used to argue against affirmative action.

"It's never wise to rely solely on anecdotal information to justify public policy," Oren Sellstrom of the San Francisco-based Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights said.

"A single example does not constitute data," he said.

Whatever the larger social implications, Chavis is in deep trouble.

Court files show he has been sued at least 21 times for alleged malpractice. He has settled some of the cases without admitting wrongdoing. He declared bankruptcy in March. Before that, he failed to pay child support. He has been through two bitter divorces with an alimony trial pending.

Worst of all, he could permanently lose his medical license and even face criminal charges in the death of Tammaria Cotton, a 43-year-old court clerk.

In a recent interview, Chavis denied all the allegations against him. He said his accusers at the state Medical Board relied on incomplete records from a hospital he has clashed with numerous times and on selective interviews with his enemies, including his ex-wives.

All of the Medical Board investigators who have questioned him are white, as are the administrators at the hospital where he once worked, he said.

"That's racism, I don't care what you say," Chavis said. "They wouldn't do that to a white guy."

In October, Chavis will face administrative hearings on whether he should lose his license over Cotton's death.

Cotton suffered severe blood loss and died of cardiac arrest in June 1996, hours after Chavis removed fat from her abdomen, buttocks and thighs.

Investigators allege Chavis was incompetent and negligent. Among other things, he allegedly failed to monitor Cotton's blood pressure or hospitalize her when it dropped.

Deputy Attorney General Richard Avila said at a hearing this summer that Chavis "abandoned patients at critical points in their recovery."

Chavis blames the woman's death on her husband, Jimmy, who he says propped her up after surgery against his orders, causing a fatal plunge in blood pressure.

State medical reports confirm Jimmy Cotton moved his wife into a wheelchair after the liposuction.

Chavis acknowledges that he had left his office for his home, where another patient was recovering.

"There's a good possibility that if I had been there standing guard over them, this probably wouldn't have happened," he said. "But I left my competent nurse there."

The state also alleges Chavis was negligent in the care of two other liposuction patients who suffered extreme blood loss and required emergency treatment.

Chavis started offering liposuction to help mothers struggling to get their figures back after giving birth. He charged $1,500 for an abdomen liposuction and sent patients home in a limousine.

The legal problems have brought a dizzying decline for a man who was a hero to many just a few months ago.

Chavis entered medical school at the University of California at Davis at the age of 21. He was one of five blacks admitted under affirmative action.

A white applicant, Allan Bakke, sued after he was rejected.

In 1978, the Supreme Court ruled that race could be considered as one of many factors in admissions. But the high court struck down the medical school's separate admissions tracks for whites and minorities and ordered Bakke admitted.

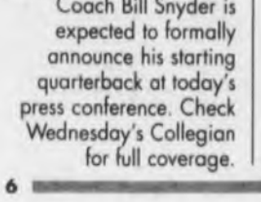
A look back at Wildcat football of yesteryear



It's been 22 years since I stood in my first line at K-State. A sweltering Ahearn Field House. Registration day for the freshmen. Two lines. No cutting. I saw the sign that said "A-L only" 20 minutes later. It took less than 20 seconds to figure out how much time I had wasted already.

But you learn quickly in college how to wait and what's worth waiting for. An opportunity might come out of the blue because your sister knew somebody with clout in the radio-television industry. That coveted Saturday night sports shift at KSDB-FM 91.9 that played to turned-off radios on campus was all mine.

Still, it was one of the sacrifices made in a land of freedom called college. A sacrifice disguised as a guaranteed way to get ahead.

Geez, I could do anything. Like walk into Jim Dickey's office and tell him why I would be an asset to the football team. Everybody did it. The returning starters, the redshirt freshmen. This walk-on from Overland Park, Kan., who gagged over weight-gain drinks at lunch and ran pass patterns in the shadowy snow outside Marlatt Hall, wanted to challenge and be challenged.

VIEWPOINT

DAVE STEWART

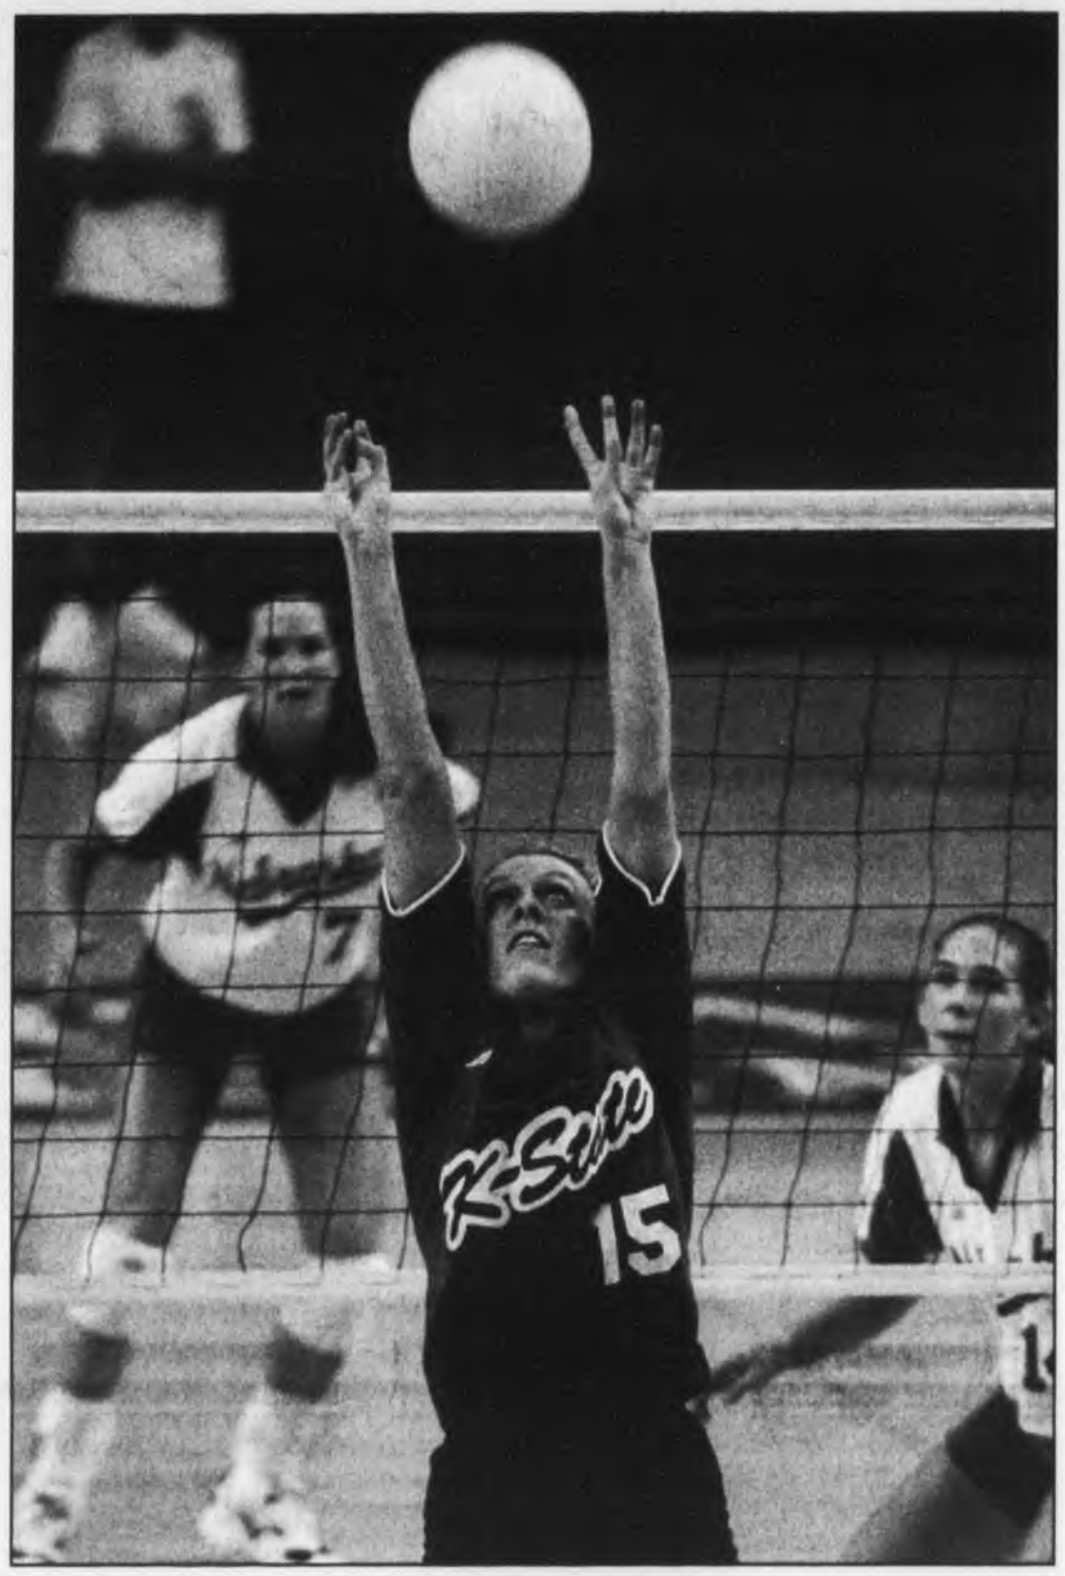
DAVE STEWART is a K-State alumna and a sports anchor at KMBC-9 in Kansas City, Mo.

Twenty-two years later, the smell of game day still brings back memories that were never written down but were burned into my being.

My junior year in warm-ups — a leaping catch that almost knocked Coach Dickey to the ground. His head snapped back around to the left, with eyes locked on a receiver who would become invisible once they flipped the coin.

Nothing compared to the finish that year. We had a big lead on KU, Bud Moore's final game. Rosie Duncan and some of the other starters pulled off their pads in the third quarter, the same way Oklahoma's Thomas Lott and Billy Sims big-timed us three weeks earlier. There were so many fans down on the sideline in the second half, Coach Franchione couldn't find me, and away went my shot to play the final two offensive series.

Back then, we gloated in a season-ending fourth win, third in the conference against our biggest rival. The only thing that hasn't changed since then is Weird Robert. Nine wins and a bowl somewhere seem to be the rule. The stadium needs to be bigger. The highway into town became bigger, come hell or Taco Tico. The wrecking ball killed my favorite late-night, freshman-year food run. Five tacos and a medium drink for $1.35.



The football program's growth in a decade is mind-boggling. Facilities. Products. People. Shorty's still around. The selfless equipment manager who treated walk-ons like All-Americans. And Joan Friederich, the coaches assistant who could keep you from missing Mom with a single smile and half a hug.

Not too many more acknowledge football life before Bill Snyder. That's too bad. Sweat came in the same-size bucket. Guys wanted to win just as badly. Jon Wefald and Snyder just delivered a better plan and pulled it off. Believers all around the country bought into it, one Ahearn Scholarship Fund dollar at a time.

I want pre-Snyder players to get some credit. One of the toughest guys I played with was Danny Ruzich, a freshman my senior year. He had no business playing inside linebacker at that level at his size, but you couldn't match his heart or his effort or keep him off the field. Danny made everybody around him search for that little extra to give. Tragically, he died in a U.S. Air crash a couple of years ago. One of the many annual awards given to K-State players should bear his name. Period. End of discussion. Put it in motion.

Twenty-two years later, I still want to make K-State a better place. My kids, five and seven, have been brain-washed to the ways of loving Wildcats and hating KU. It's all about choices, sacrifice and making a difference. So what are you waiting for?

STORY FROM STAFF REPORTS

The K-State volleyball team spent Labor Day weekend in Hawaii, soaking up the sun, the sights and a couple of victories to start the season.

The Wildcats (2-1) played in the Aston Imua Wahine Volleyball Challenge in Honolulu, quickly defeating Illinois State and San Francisco before falling to No. 11 University of Hawaii in the championship match of the tournament.

"I don't know how good we are," K-State coach Jim McLaughlin said before K-State left for Hawaii. "We haven't been tested yet."

Well, preliminary scores are in, and sophomore Dawn Cady passed her first round of exams.

Following the loss to the Rainbows, Cady was selected, along with senior Devon Ryning and junior Val Wieck, to the all-tournament team. She also finished second in tournament MVP balloting to Hawaii's Therese Crawford.

Also, in 10 games in the tournament, Cady recorded 53 kills, 15 more than she had in 69 games last year.

The Cats opened up the tournament Friday with a 3-1 victory (15-10, 15-10, 15-17, 15-11) over Illinois State, the defending Missouri Valley Conference champion. Cady led K-State with 22 kills, 14 more than her previous career high.

Later that day, K-State easily defeated San Francisco 3-0 (15-8, 15-7, 15-2). Wieck had a match-high 15 kills, while Cady added another 13. Ryning and junior Kim Zschau tied for the team lead with 11 digs each.

K-State also led in all the team categories. The Cats out-hit the Lady Dons .356 to .011 and led 51-21 in kills and 47-33 in digs.

In the championship match against Hawaii on Sunday, it looked as if the Cats could continue shutting down their opponents, jumping to a 3-0 lead in game one against the Rainbows.

However, Hawaii went on a 15-2 run to take the game.

In game two, the Cats were tied at 2-2 early, but the Rainbows came back with a 13-1 run to take a two-game lead.

K-State dropped the third game, 15-8, to lose the match.

The next match for K-State will be at 7 p.m. Wednesday against Texas-Arlington at Ahearn Field House.

RICE TEARS LIGAMENT

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Jerry Rice, the NFL's greatest receiver, probably will miss the rest of the year because of a knee injury in the season opener.

Rice, an offensive cornerstone of the San Francisco 49ers, underwent surgery Monday and could be sidelined for up to six months. Until now, he had never missed a game because of injury in his 12 seasons.

"Not only is Jerry Rice one of the great performers on our football team, but he's one of our leaders," coach Steve Mariucci said. "That we will miss. We're going to have to pick up the pieces with somebody else."

Mariucci said an MRI showed that Rice tore the anterior cruciate and medial collateral ligaments, as well as cartilage in his left knee, when he was tackled during the second quarter of San Francisco's 13-6 loss at Tampa Bay on Sunday.

Team physician Dr. Michael Dillingham was operating on Rice while Mariucci spoke at a news conference. The possibility remains that another operation will be needed to complete the repairs.

"The prognosis is he'll be out four to six months, and it is unlikely he will return for this season," Mariucci said.

DRIVER UNDERGOES TESTS

FLORENCE, S.C. — Dale Earnhardt was released from the hospital Monday and told by doctors not to drive until more tests can determine why he lost control of his car at the Southern 500.

Earnhardt hit the wall in Turn 1 and Turn 2 right after the green flag dropped, then spent two laps trying to find pit road. The driver was rushed from the car and later taken to McLeod Regional Medical Center.

While doctors couldn't find anything wrong, "we don't want him to drive his car or anybody's car until he's completed the workup," neurologist Dr. Joseph Healy said when Earnhardt was discharged.

Healy said the 46-year-old driver could complete the tests as an outpatient.

"I don't know what happened," Earnhardt said. "I feel great now."

It was as frightening as any high-speed collision as Earnhardt, a seven-time Winston Cup champion, was carried like a rag doll to the Darlington Raceway's care center. He spent almost 24 hours undergoing tests at McLeod, all of which came back negative.

"He had CAT scans, an EKG, an MRI, they ran dye through his arteries, everything," Earnhardt spokesman David Allen said. "It's kind of baffling."

Allen said the tests did not show any symptoms of a heart attack or evidence of one starting.

BIG 12 HONORS

DALLAS — Kansas' Patrick Brown, who became the third linebacker in NCAA history to return two interceptions for touchdowns in a single game, was named the Big 12 Conference defensive player of the week on Monday.

Oklahoma State quarterback Tony Lindsay, who came off the bench Saturday to complete 11 of 15 passes for 104 yards and no interceptions, was named offensive player of the week, the conference said.

Brown, a 5-11, 210-pound junior from Westerville, Ohio, picked off two passes and scored on runbacks of 53 and 21 yards as the Jayhawks beat Alabama-Birmingham 24-0 Thursday. He also had a hand in six tackles.

Lindsay, a 6-2, 190-pound redshirt freshman from Denver, also rushed 12 times for 42 yards and a touchdown in a 21-14 victory over Iowa State.

The Big 12 specialty player of the week was Oklahoma State punter Jason Davis.

The 6-0, 220-pound senior from Kerrville, Texas, booted six punts against Iowa State for a total of 311 yards. Davis averaged a league-best 51.8 yards.

Bounty hunters kill couple due to mistaken identity

AT A GLANCE
Bounty hunters wearing black ski masks kicked in a front door of a house and shot a couple to death in a case of mistaken identity.

PHOENIX — Bounty hunters wearing black ski masks and looking for a bail jumper kicked in the front door of a house, held children at gunpoint and shot a young couple to death in a case of mistaken identity, police said.

Three of the bounty hunters were in custody Monday, including one who has been charged with second-degree murder and two hospitalized with gunshot wounds. Police were looking for four others.

Investigators said they don't believe the bail jumper was in the house and might never have lived there.

"It's still a mystery why they went to that house," police Sgt. Mike Torres said.

The shootings have focused renewed attention on Arizona laws that allow bounty hunters to break down doors and use guns to bring bail jumpers back to jail. They don't need a court order or warrant. They don't even need a license to do what they do, police said.

"Whatever force necessary," said Linda Ownbey of Liberty Bail Bonds, the state's largest bail business. "It's spelled out in the contract that people have to sign."

In Sunday's shooting, the bounty hunters were looking for an out-of-state bail jumper who owed a California bond company $25,000. Police said one bounty hunter held a woman and her three children at gunpoint while others kicked down the door to the couple's bedroom.

Killed were Chris Foote, 23, and his 21-year-old girlfriend, Spring Wright. Police said Foote apparently managed to shoot two of the bounty hunters with a handgun before he died.

Luisa Sharrah, who lived in the house, said she woke up to find two men straddling her and tying her hands with white cords.

"I was in bed with my two girls ... then these two guys beat me in the head with a Mag-Lite," she told The Arizona Republic. "I kept screaming at them, 'What the hell do you want?'"

Sharrah said one bounty hunter held her and her children — ages 12, 11, and 6 — at gunpoint.

The gunmen kicked down a door in the home and were met by a volley of bullets from Foote's gun, she said, but the bounty hunters shot back.

David Brackney, 45, and Michael Sanders, 40, were hospitalized in stable condition with gunshot wounds to their arms. Both had worn body armor. Torres said they would likely be arrested and charged upon release from the hospital.

Late Sunday, police arrested Brackney's son, 20-year-old Matthew Brackney, at a residence about a mile from the shooting site. He was booked on two counts of second-degree murder.

Police did not release the name of the bail company involved in the shooting.

A decade ago, there was a public outcry to regulate bounty hunters' actions after a 19-year-old bounty hunter shot a fugitive in the back. The bounty hunter was sentenced to six months in jail.

When going after a bail jumper, bounty hunters are protected against kidnapping charges, but they can be charged with aggravated assault if they use more force than is reasonable.

Still, Phoenix police recently issued a department policy reminding officers that they cannot interfere or intervene on bounty hunters' business.

Mathematics professor dies after extended illness

LAURA POPE

Louis M. Herman, associate professor of mathematics at K-State, died Aug. 19, at Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center, Topeka, because of an extended illness. He was 55.

Herman was born June 25, 1942, in Bayonne, N.J. He was the son of Samuel and Helen Cortek Herman. He received his bachelor's degree in 1963 and master's degree in 1965 from the University of Florida. In 1979, he received his doctoral degree from the University of Massachusetts.

From 1968 to 1970, he was an instructor of math at Plymouth State College in Plymouth, N.J. Herman became a resident of Manhattan in 1970, when he joined the mathematics staff at K-State. He was promoted to associate professor in April 1985. Herman taught a variety of undergraduate and graduate courses during his tenure.

Most recently, he taught one elementary and one advanced math course each semester. He also pursued research interests in the area of algebraic analysis.

Survivors include his mother, Helen Cortek Herman, Miami; and two brothers, Neil Herman, Manhattan and Alan Herman, Miami.

Herman was cremated, and the memorial service was at 10 a.m. Aug. 22 in All Faiths Chapel. Memorials can be given to the Manhattan Public Library and can be left in care of the Edwards-Yorgensen-Meloan Funeral Home, 1616 Poyntz Ave.

Gore takes pro-labor stance at rally, hopes to cement ties with AFL-CIO

HAMPTON, Ill. — Vice President Al Gore sought to cement the Clinton administration's occasionally rocky ties with the labor movement Monday by delivering a rousing union-boosting speech at a Labor Day rally.

"It's time for a new unionism," Gore said. "It's time for a new effort to organize working men and women in this country."

Gore traveled to the banks of the Mississippi River to march in a parade and appear with AFL-CIO President John Sweeney and Labor Secretary Alexis Herman at a rally attended by more than 700 activists.

Ties between President Clinton and organized labor have occasionally been strained, but there was little notice taken of those differences during Monday's parade and rally.

Sweeney said that Gore has been a singular voice on behalf of the right of every worker to form or join a union free from harassment or intimidation.

For his part, Gore issued a ringing endorsement of organized labor.

"It means a new awareness of the fact that wages need to go up when productivity and profits go up," he said.

Organized labor is a key Democratic constituency, and Gore will be working overtime to build ties as he prepares an expected race for the Democratic presidential nomination in 2000.

He picked a Labor Day celebration in Illinois, which has an important early primary, and just across the river from Iowa, where caucuses launch the nomination process.

In making his case Monday, Gore made it clear that he'll side with labor should he seize the party's nomination.

The union leaders also made it clear that both Clinton and Gore went a long way to healing any rift when the administration refused to intervene in the Teamster's strike against United Parcel Service.

"I thank you for keeping the faith in the collective 'bargaining process," Sweeney told Herman.

Herman lauded Sweeney as a leader who re-energized the nation's largest labor organization. But Gore was the focus of most attention because he's generally considered the front-runner for the party's nomination.

Gore said the Clinton administration's backing for the minimum wage increase was a clear signal that workers should side with Democrats.

The minimum wage increased by 40 cents on Monday and is now $5.15 an hour. That's the second phase of an increase earlier approved by Congress.

Republican critics said it would ignite inflation, Gore said. "They said it would lead to the ruination of our economy. They were wrong for 12 years when they were running the place."

Gore said Republican opposition to the minimum wage showed the party's economic policies continue to be off-base.

The region Gore visited is heavily Democratic, and unions are an important force. "He's my guy," said Don Hanline,of Rock Island, Ill. "I'll support him any time."

Park changes practices after alleged racial incident

Park apologizes. City officials apologize after park attendant allegedly discouraged a camper from sites, saying they were popular with blacks.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SMITHVILLE, Mo. — City officials have apologized after a volunteer park attendant allegedly tried to discourage at least one camper from using a campground, saying the spot was popular with blacks.

"We do not condone, support or tolerate discrimination of any sort," said Smithville Mayor Ron Van Winkle. "We have undertaken procedures to see that it doesn't happen again."

On Aug. 7, the attendant allegedly tried at least once to direct visitors at Smith's Fork Park to sites based on race.

City officials learned of the incident after a Nebraska man who camped at the park sent letters to city hall and a Smithville newspaper after returning home.

In his letter, Brian Pillard wrote that when he requested a certain motor-home lot, he was steered away and told it was a popular spot for black campers. Pillard and his family went to the spot anyway.

"I was unprepared for a racist attitude like this," Pillard's letter said. "Our visit to Smithville was tarnished by our encounter with racism."

Van Winkle and campground caretakers Charley and Jan Staatz issued public apologies last week. The Staatzes were out of town when the incident occurred and had recruited other campers to volunteer as attendants from Aug. 7 to Aug. 10, officials said.

City employees who deal with the public will undergo diversity training, officials said.

Hunter's education course focuses on gun safety, wildlife management

AMY BICKEL
staff reporter

Hunting season is starting. For many students, it's time to take a hunter's education course. Anyone born on or after July 1, 1957, is required to take the course to be able to hunt.

The Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks conducts statewide hunter's education courses throughout the year with a majority of the courses in August and September, before to hunting season. Landowners can hunt their own land without taking the course.

Ross Robins, administrator of the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks, said the course is good for just about anybody to take.

"A wide variety of 13,000 Kansans take the courses annually," Robins said.

Most hunter's education courses are finished by November to accommodate pheasant and deer hunters before their seasons begin. Pheasant season opens in mid-November, and deer season opens Dec. 3, said Ed Augustine, district hunter's education coordinator and an executive member of the international board.

He said hunters have been required to take classes since 1973. Anyone older than 16 is required to have a hunting license.

Bow hunter courses are also available statewide but are only required for 12- and 13-year-old hunters.

"There are between 200 and 300 hunter's education classes statewide every year," Augustine said. "With a brand new crop of people coming to K-State and Fort Riley each year, there are a lot of classes available in the area."

He said there is also another class being planned for Manhattan at the end of September.

Spencer Tomb, a biology professor at K-State, has been teaching hunter's education courses for 16 years. He said courses focus on gun safety, wildlife management, Kansas wildlife, first aid and basic gun handling.

"Many of the students who want to take the course are new to the sport," Tomb said. "Some hunt their own land at home and want to hunt around Manhattan or have friends or boyfriends who hunt and want to hunt with them."

He said there is no age limit to take courses. Anyone wanting to take the course must be able to comprehend at the third-grade level.

"On average in Manhattan, I teach more than 300 people a year. Right now

10 bands rock Manhattan Project

KADY GUYTON
arts and entertainment editor

Ten local bands rocked Bombers Upstairs on Thursday and Friday nights when The Manhattan Project got under way. Fans of local bands got a sampling of some of the diverse musical talent in Manhattan and a final glimpse of two bands performing their last shows together.

"I'm really relieved this whole thing came off as well as it did. We made the money we needed and got it recorded," Carrie Miller, coordinator of The Manhattan Project, said.

Thursday night was kicked off by Woodshed. The band had originally backed out of the lineup but then decided to get back together for the show. It played a high-energy show to a quiet crowd.

After Woodshed was Porphyria, the "only heavy metal band — and proud of it — in Manhattan." Porphyria, wearing black face paint, got the crowd to its feet and moving during its 45-minute set.

Overall, Porphyria was happy with the way the project came together.

"I think the whole Manhattan Project is great for the scene. In two nights you get to see the best bands in town," said Brian Reeves, guitar player and sophomore in radio-television. "Plus, all the bands are friends, so it's really great to play together like this."

Jiffy Boy loudly followed Porphyria and maintained its reputation as the fastest band in Manhattan. Flying hands onstage and a mosh pit on the floor made its set an entertaining one to watch.

Sufferbus was the second-to-last band Thursday night. It played with polish, style and no pants. Drummer Ken Pingleton opted to stay comfortable onstage with only his boxers. "What can I say? It's hot up there."

Back Porch Mary was the last band to play. The band also played its second-to-last show before it moves to Austin, Texas.

"I think the whole thing is really successful. A lot of the bands have deals, and we're all friends. I really hope they do this again," said Mike Krug, guitar player for Back Porch Mary.

Back Porch Mary's last show is scheduled for Sept. 11.

Local radio station KMKF-FM 101.5 was on hand to cover both nights, but KSDB-FM 91.9 was a noted absence.

"DB92 should not be ignoring local music," Pingleton said. "Any of us individual bands have a show, and we get a third of these people. I'm glad they're changing their format, but if they don't cover local music, who's going to?"

Podstar was the first band to play Friday night. It encountered the usual first-band sound problems, but that did not stop fans of the youngest band from crowding the stage.

"I was expecting a really small crowd, but we got a really good crowd," said Cameron Akwa, bass player for Podstar and sophomore at Manhattan High School.

Although Podstar has been together for about 2 1/2 years, the ages of the band's members make it hard to get the coverage they would like.

"We played this really insignificant show in Lawrence, and Carrie came all the way there to see us, so we were really excited when she asked us to be part of the compilation," Akwa said.

Ruskabank, the only ska band involved with the Manhattan Project, filled the stage with brass and got the audience moving and dancing for its entire set.

"It was awesome. It was a really good vibe. It's a lot of fun having all the bands playing together, and it happens so rarely," said Dave Spiker, lead singer for Ruskabank and senior in biology.

Chick Scalletti was the third band in the Friday night line-up. It played to mostly dedicated fans with a very different sound from Ruskabank's brassy ska beat.

"The sound has gone really well. I like to think this thing will happen again," said Brian Gilhousen, guitar player for Chick Scalletti and a junior in cultural anthropology and creative writing. "I can't believe this is the first time this has ever happened. Lawrence has these things all the time."

The last show Red Eldon will play as a group was recorded Friday night. One member of the band got married, and rather than replace him, the band decided to break up.

"I definitely want to keep playing music. I've never had as much fun as with these guys," said Heath Dumler, guitar player and freshman in arts and sciences.

Red Eldon had an energetic set, complete with stage-diving and moshing.

"I think it (The Manhattan Project) should be an annual thing. We need all the exposure we can get," Dumler said.

El Fontain wrapped up the whole show, playing to a crowd of fans and other bands. "I think it was a good crowd. Carrie can always put on a good show," Marty Robertson, guitar player for El Fontain, said.

Mexico's state-of-nation speech a test of democracy, Congress

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — President Ernesto Zedillo on Monday used his most important speech of the year to promise cooperation with Mexico's first opposition-led Congress in more than 80 years.

Only a day after Zedillo helped stop a rebellion in his own party that threatened a constitutional crisis, he pledged his "invariable readiness to establish a relationship of respect" with the new Congress, which formally began its three-year term Monday.

With the congressional election of July 6, "the country took a very important step to arrive at democratic normality," Zedillo said.

For decades, the Congress has largely been subservient to the president, who had dominated the party that controlled the legislature.

But Monday, House Speaker Porfirio Munoz Ledo became the first opposition leader ever to deliver the official response to the president's state of the nation speech.

"From today, we hope that forevermore in Mexico no power will be subordinated to another," Munoz Ledo said. He said the new Congress was the result of a long struggle "against absolute power, its arrogance and excesses."

Zedillo appealed to the new Congress to maintain his free-market economic path, which has been fiercely criticized by many new representatives.

The president admitted that some austerity policies had been drastic and unpopular, but said they had laid bases for sustained economic growth.

Abandoning those policies in search of short-term gains, he said, would not only hurt efforts to create jobs and wealth, but would cause a setback.

Before Zedillo took to the podium, opposition deputies vowed to maintain the fragile unity that has put Mexico's ruling party into a legislative minority for the first time since it was founded in 1929. The last opposition-led Congress was in 1913.

"This day will be remembered as the beginning of a new Mexico," said Jorge Emilio Gonzalez of the Green Party. It will end, he said, "a corrupt system which has brought our country poverty and marginalization."

Munoz Ledo, of the leftist Democratic Revolution Party, said the central task of the Congress would be to continue political reforms.

Zedillo did not mention two still-simmering rebellions in Mexico's south during his 90-minute speech. But Munoz Ledo called the "re-establishment of peace and concord among Mexicans" the most urgent task of the new Congress.

It was far from the atmosphere of past state of the nation speeches, when criticism of presidential comments came from scattered hecklers, by bedsheet banners demanding democracy and even by a congressman wearing a rubber pig mask.

This time, protests came ahead of the speech from Zedillo's own Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI. It took a presidential appeal to PRI lawmakers to drop threats of boycotting the session.

For a time, they even talked of forming their own rump congress, a move that could have set off a constitutional crisis.

More clashes are likely in the coming weeks as the strengthened opposition in the lower house of Congress flexes its muscle.

Opposition deputies gathered Saturday and named as speaker Munoz Ledo, a former PRI president who bolted from the ruling party a decade ago. PRI deputies boycotted Saturday's session and declared it illegal.

But during the weekend, Zedillo — who has praised the democratic reforms that led to the opposition gains — called for cooperation, and had aides contact congressional leaders to end the budding PRI revolt.

PRI congressional leader Arturo Nunez on Monday repeated his claims of opposition irregularities. But he said the PRI deputies had decided to accept the new leadership in the national interest.

The tumultuous first days of the Congress might well be a sign of the rocky democratic exercise to come.

The legislature is likely to spend the last three years of Zedillo's term attacking his economic policies, picking apart his budget and ending decades of submissive approval of nearly all presidential initiatives.

The PRI won only 39 percent of the vote in the July congressional elections. But because of rules giving a disproportionate number of seats to the top vote-getter, the party wound up with 48 percent of the seats in the 500-seat Congress: 239.

The two leading opposition parties each won about 26 percent of the total vote. Combining direct and proportional seats, Democratic Revolution wound up with 125 seats and the conservative National Action Party 121. The Green Party won eight seats, and the leftist Labor Party won seven.

Jerry Lewis' MDA telethon raises record $50.5 million

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Singers, dancers, comedians, impersonators and celebrities helped Jerry Lewis bring in a record $50.5 million during the 32nd annual muscular dystrophy telethon that ended Monday.

Last year, the telethon raised $49.1 million, and Lewis urged viewers during this year's 21 1/2-hour telethon to bring in "just $1 more."

"The American people have set a new standard in expressing love and caring," said Lewis, who is the national chairman of the Muscular Dystrophy Association.

This year's telethon featured performers from the musical "Ragtime" and a taped number from "Riverdance." Celebrities including Tony Danza, Charo and Jerry Springer also urged pledges.

The Muscular Dystrophy Association funds research into the genetic, muscle-wasting disease and sends children with the disease to summer camp and other programs.

Lewis addressed telethon protesters who have in recent years voiced concern that the money doesn't go where it is needed.

"We have some naysayers out there," Lewis said. "Whether people don't like a telethon or they don't believe what we do is of any consequence, I think we've got a lot of people out there that just don't get it."

An estimated 75 million viewers watched the telethon, which was broadcast by about 200 TV stations nationwide from CBS Television City. There were also satellite feeds and taped segments from New York, Chicago, Miami, Myrtle Beach, S.C., and Las Vegas.

we are down a little because we don't have the instructors like we have had in the past. We usually try to have four or five classes a year in Manhattan," Tomb said.

Tomb said the course has helped reduce many hunting accidents and hunter-landowner problems.

"About 97 percent of the land in Kansas is private property. Hunters must have permission to hunt on other people's land," he said.

Courses must be a minimum of 10 hours long. At the end of the course, a multiple-choice test is given.

Tomb said teaching the course was one way he could give something back to the sport.

"It's one of the things I can do for something I thoroughly enjoy," he said.

Classes are still available in Salina on Sept. 8, Oct. 13 and 27 and Nov. 3 and 17. The Junction City classes are Sept. 17, 19 and 20. The Manhattan class will be at the end of September.

DEATH

France's law, toughened in 1995, is one of the strictest in Europe.

Le Monde reported Monday that Paul was trying to skirt around a slower-moving vehicle when the car crashed inside a Seine riverside tunnel beneath the approach to a bridge, the Pont de l'Alma.

Paul, 41, a former French air force pilot, was the No. 2 security man at the Ritz Hotel, owned by Dodi Fayed's family, and the car was owned by the hotel.

Bernard Dartevelle, a Fayed family lawyer, said Paul had been off-duty and was called from home to take the place of the regular driver, who had left earlier in another vehicle as a decoy to throw photographers off the trail.

Regardless of whether Paul was drunk, Dartevelle said, it was the photographers chasing the princess who were responsible for the accident.

"That infraction," he said, "was the first link in a chain that ended at the Pont de l'Alma."

Dartevelle has filed a civil complaint seeking damages against those ultimately found responsible for the death.

In London, the Mirror today quoted Gilbert Collard, a French lawyer representing Christian Martinez, one of the seven arrested paparazzi, as saying: "It seems there was a short discussion between the photographers, the driver and the bodyguard before the limousine left the Ritz.

"It was along the lines: 'Don't bother following, you won't catch us anyway.'"

The Times of London cited what it called unconfirmed reports that Paul had taunted the photographers by saying "Catch me if you can," before speeding away from the hotel.

A spokeswoman at the Ritz — where Diana and Fayed dined before the fatal crash — told

The Associated Press that Paul was an experienced driver who received special security training from Mercedes-Benz at a center in Germany. She said he also had experience handling heavy armor-plated vehicles like the car in the crash.

Police so far have not been able to talk to the lone survivor of the crash, bodyguard Trevor Rees-Jones. He suffered a head contusion, a lung injury and facial injuries. His condition was described as grave but not life-threatening, and he remained in intensive care Monday.

A judicial source said Monday evening that the seven photographers now in custody would be detained for another night, and that today, a judge would take charge of the case and place them under formal investigation.

Even if they are cleared of any direct role in the crash, France's so-called Good Samaritan law might apply. It makes it a crime to fail to help someone in danger.

Le Monde reported Monday that, within 30 seconds of the crash, some photographers were taking pictures of the bleeding victims.

Police continued Monday to examine images from 20 rolls of film confiscated from the photographers to learn more about what happened.

Some people seemed already to have decided. Fresh graffiti were sprayed Monday in bright red on a wall of the tunnel: "Paparazzi Cowardly Murderers."

The prosecutors' statement said authorities also have searched photo agencies' offices for photos from the chase and accident.

GRANT

$70,000 in county money would have been allocated. This spurred a petition to force a vote under Riley County statutes. The petition with more than 700 valid signatures was turned in Aug. 28.

However, the county changed its approach and decided to wait for the KDOT decision before allocating county tax dollars.

The petition has no relevance to the new plan, Newsome said. If the KDOT grant is approved, then there will have to be a county vote to approve the tax-funded portion.

"If either of those two things fail to materialize, then the program's not going to happen under this scenario anyway," Harden said.

Harden said the road is important for further growth in Manhattan. The city is geographically limited in its expansion. University land borders it on the north, the south is on the Kansas River flood plain, and the east is bounded by the Blue and Kansas rivers.

"Why we're interested is mainly one thing — and that's rural development," Newsome said. "If you want future development, you're going to have to have the roads so that development can take place."

In the past, Manhattan has grown westward. In 1945, Sunset Avenue served as the western boundary. In 1960, Seth Childs Road extended the city's boundaries again. The Scenic Drive extension is the latest in this trend, Harden said.

Most of the new utilities will be placed along the road. Harden said the new road should meet Manhattan's needs through 2025.

"It just depends on how much Manhattan grows in the next 20 years," he said.

The grant is also supported by the Kansas State University Golf Course Management and Research Foundation. The foundation is a separate entity from the university that is responsible for planning and developing the course's construction.

The foundation sent a strong letter of support for the KDOT grant indicating the economic effect on Manhattan and the state of Kansas, said Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

He also said the extension would eventually have to happen in order for Manhattan to grow. "It's just happening a little sooner than expected," Krause said.

The project is about more than a golf course and a new road, Krause said. The possibility of the PGA Tour playing at Colbert Hills would bring attention to the Midwest. Colbert Hills would also be the first collegiate-managed course to play host to a PGA Tour event.

Tissue-research funds granted to K-State

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

Eight K-State faculty members want to help save lives, and the American Heart Association has given them the means to learn how to make it possible.

The Kansas Affiliate of the AHA has released its annual list of grant and fellowship recipients. K-State researchers will receive $215,642.14 of this year's money to fund their projects.

Mary Ann Mann, medical and community program director for the Kansas Affiliate of AHA, said the process to determine who will receive the grant money is long and highly selective. The association receives an average of 55 applications per year, she said, and then works between two committees to determine which research projects have the most scientific merit.

"The Research Peer Review Committee reviews all of the applications. The committee is made up of scientists from across the affiliate, and they give each application a scientific merit score," Mann said.

That score is then taken to a Research Committee, which allocates funds to various projects. The research projects are generally two-year endeavors, Mann said, with a maximum budget of $26,000 per year.

Chris Ross, associate professor of anatomy and physiology, said his grant may determine if certain chemicals can speed coronary tissue healing.

"If they haul you to the hospital with an acute coronary, there will likely be tissue damage and that tissue has to be healed. The ultimate goal is to be able to use chemicals to manipulate the system to jump-start the healing process," Ross said.

Ross, who has worked on AHA-funded research since 1992, said the fact that the grant money is in-state money makes the effects of research hit home.

"One thing unique about the AHA, Kansas Affiliate is that the money comes from Kansas. You even get to meet some of the people that raise the money. It's very local," he said.

Knowing donors throughout the Kansas Affiliate and listening to their concerns makes investigative work seem more urgent as well, Ross said.

"It's an eye-opener when you go to a meeting and find yourself talking to somebody affected by a condition that someone is working on. It lends a bit of immediacy to things," he said.

Frank Blecha, professor of anatomy and physiology, said his work will focus on reducing tissue injury during surgical procedures.

"We want to take the drug and administer it before a coronary bypass or transplant. Would that be beneficial in reducing production of toxic oxygen metabolites and reduce tissue injury? That's what we want to find out," Blecha said.

He said the AHA's dedication to research is appreciated. Twenty percent of its budget goes straight to research.

"The AHA does a tremendous job of providing research sources. We're certainly thankful for their efforts," he said.

Duy Hua, professor of chemistry, hopes to make compounds useful in the treatment of arteriosclerosis. AHA has funded at least five of Hua's investigations, he said, and their money is what keeps the labs going.

"I'm extremely grateful for their support. It helps the Kansas community a great deal, and this kind of local funding allows us to continue our research. It is very useful," Hua said.

James Funderburgh, associate professor of biology; Emin Ulug, assistant professor of biology; Stephen Chapes, associate professor of biology; Carol Klopfenstein, professor of grain science and industry; and Timothy Musch, professor of kinesiology and anatomy and physiology, will also receive funds from AHA.

Other Kansas institutions receiving AHA money include University of Kansas Medical Center, $461,024.68; University of Kansas, $261,535.80; University of Missouri, KC, $106,167.48; and St. Luke's Hospital, $27,560. A total of $1,071,930.10 in grants were awarded.

EVERY DAY, K-State students use the green space south of Memorial Stadium for walking to class, practicing intramurals and for general recreation. The location is being considered by the KSU Alumni Association board for a new Alumni Center building.

Kinesiology student faces double-lung transplant surgery

AMY BICKEL
staff reporter

One day, 22-year-old Jason Christiensen was a normal college student majoring in kinesiology at K-State. The next day he was diagnosed with a potentially fatal heart disease.

Christiensen has been diagnosed with primary pulmonary hypertension, a rare disorder in which the small and medium pulmonary arteries become smaller.

The arteries remaining make the heart work harder. The lungs, in turn, don't get enough blood supply so the body gets less oxygen as do other organs. So far, no cause for the disease has been found.

Christiensen, an Abilene High School and former Cloud County Community College track and field athlete who has attended K-State the past two years, discovered there was something wrong last April.

"Two weeks before I was diagnosed, I thought I was sick with a cold or something. I missed three days of class because I couldn't get out of bed," Christiensen said.

Christiensen went to the doctor who told him he had asthma or bronchitis and gave him some medicine and an inhaler.

He said he seemed to get better, but the next Monday he wasn't feeling well again. He wouldn't have gone to the doctor, but the nurse called to ask him how he was doing so he decided to go back in.

"This time they told me I had pneumonia," Christiensen said.

Then the doctor called him at home to come in and check his X-rays.

"I was just sitting there and the doctor walked in. I could tell something was up by the look on his face," he said.

"They showed me what was wrong and said I had an enlarged heart. That's all they said. I was told to go to the hospital. I had no idea what was going on, what was wrong with me."

After several tests in Topeka and St. Louis, doctors discovered Christiensen's heart was failing because of PPH. He will need a double lung transplant. If the transplant is a success, the heart will repair itself.

The disease is usually fatal if not treated within two to five years after the diagnosis.

"Everything was so overwhelming at first," Christiensen, who is on oxygen 24 hours a day.

"I joked around a lot about it, but I figured it's something I've got to live with. I try to keep positive."

Symptoms of PPH are breathlessness upon exertion, chest pain, dizziness upon exertion, pale skin and impaired circulation in the fingers and toes.

Christiensen said he had some of these symptoms but didn't think anything about it.

"My last year at K-State I couldn't do a lot of physical things. My friends played basketball and other rec sports, but I couldn't run down the court without getting short of breath," he said.

Proposed Alumni Center inching toward reality

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

If the KSU Alumni Association board approves a proposal at its September meeting, the playing field south of Memorial Stadium could become a construction site in the near future.

For more than a year, the Alumni Association has been searching for a main campus location for a new Alumni Center building. An Alumni Center Committee was formed and has chosen the south site for its planned center and parking facilities.

The site itself is bordered by Anderson Avenue to the south, Denison Avenue to the west, 17th Street to the east and Memorial Stadium to the north.

The Alumni Association board will review a feasibility and needs assessment proposal at its meeting Sept. 26 and 27.

Amy Button Renz, Alumni Association president, said with the recent attention paid to K-State, the Alumni Association felt this was a prime opportunity to address its needs.

Those needs, Renz said, would include meeting rooms, banquet facilities, offices and opportunities for increased programming.

"The alumni are very excited," Renz said. "It would finish off that end of the campus as a gateway."

Like other associations across the country, the Alumni Association looks forward to the opportunity to program events in its own facilities, Renz said.

"A center would provide not only alumni, but friends, faculty and students a facility that can be used as their home," Renz said.

The Alumni Center Committee is chaired by Alumni Association board past chair and Beloit attorney Curt Frasier.

As committee chair, Frasier is perhaps the closest person to the project at this point. The committee has recently sent letters to graduates of the College of Architecture soliciting interest in developing a design proposal for the project. Nearly 70 firms have expressed interest in involvement with the project.

The feasibility study, which focuses on the associated project costs, is being developed by Illinois-based firm Gonser Gerber Tinker Stuhr. Fund raising would begin after the alumni board signs off on the project.

Frasier said there remains a possibility the project could be too expensive to feasibly develop at this time.

"There are a lot of needs, as evident by the number of universities in Kansas that have built an alumni center," Frasier said. "The main factor is fund raising. How long will it take for us to be successful. It's still premature from that end."

It is unclear, however, how the new facility will be used by students.

Renz said the proposed center could include an archive and memorabilia space, a video center and space for campus groups to meet or have functions.

The Alumni Association sponsors student-related items like welcome kits for freshmen, senior send-offs and a calendar.

Frasier said, "If we look for what benefits us only, it's not going to work. To say that each student will benefit directly, that's going to vary from individual to individual.

"This project is going to need to be supported by students and alumni across the board," Frasier said.

Privilege Fee Committee evolves to serve students

NATE JENKINS
staff writer

Student Senate's Privilege Fee Committee in the past three years has seized a level of responsibility rare among student governments in Kansas.

Although the management of student fees has always been the job of student government, now one committee does the job that used to be done by two.

The Allocations Committee, which dictates funding guidelines for student organizations and recommends how much money they receive, used to be joined with the Privilege Fee Committee.

Together they decided on the fate of student dollars that fund services from Lafene Health Center to the various student-interest organizations.

Bill Muir, faculty representative to Senate, said that was too much work for one committee to handle.

"In retrospect, I'm very glad that we split the two apart," he said. "Now the two committees can focus their attention more and do a better job."

The old committee decided to separate its duties to make committee discussions about student fee money more productive and efficient and to streamline the fee recommendation process.

The result has been an increasing desire among Senate members to sit on a Privilege Fee Committee that has, Muir said, allowed the most qualified people in the Senate to rise to the top and take on a lot of responsibility.

Although the basic duties of the Privilege Fee Committee have not changed since it split from the Allocations Committee more than three years ago, there have been some changes. The committee now has two more senators than it used to, and fees are now evaluated in two-year cycles instead of three-year cycles.

Aaron Otto, chairman of the Privilege Fee Committee, said he hopes the biggest changes are yet to come. He said the committee is trying to instill a new process that would require directors of student services to submit three potential budgets instead of the one presently required.

Also, attempting to become more familiar with the services that it recommends funding for, the committee will be divided into groups this year, each of them studying the financial needs of the different student services that receive fee money.

This means more responsibility and accountability not only for the Privilege Fee Committee but for the service directors who ask for a percentage of the student fee dollar.

"The committee has amassed a lot of independence in evaluating fees to the consternation of administrators," Muir said. "K-State student government probably has more duties than any other school in the Big 12, and they do an amazing job."

The ability for the committee to request such a change symbolizes the assertiveness that both Otto and Muir said has come to represent what the Privilege Fee Committee is about.

"The most positive thing that has happened the last three years is that the credibility of the Privilege Fee Committee has risen year after year," Otto said.

Potential jurors in Terry Nichols trial to be questioned further

DENVER — A federal judge has ordered prospective jurors to report Sept. 17 for questioning about their knowledge of Oklahoma City bombing suspect Terry Nichols, Jim Manspeaker, court clerk, said Tuesday.

Manspeaker said about 1,000 potential jurors have been drawn from the same 23-county area around Denver where the jury pool for co-defendant Timothy McVeigh was chosen.

Some of those who received jury summonses do not meet the requirements for the jury because they have moved and for other reasons, Manspeaker said.

"But there aren't that many," he said. Manspeaker said a thorough review must still be done.

Manspeaker said attorneys still have not agreed what questions will be put to the remaining prospective jurors by U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch.

During McVeigh's trial, jurors were asked to fill out an initial questionnaire about their knowledge of the case, and then were given additional questions during a mass meeting at the Jefferson County Fairgrounds. Manspeaker said a similar plan is in place for Nichols' trial.

Nichols, 41, is scheduled to stand trial Sept. 29 on murder, conspiracy and weapons-related counts in the April 1995 bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. The blast killed 168 and injured more than 500.

McVeigh was convicted on identical charges and sentenced to die by injection. His case is on appeal.

During McVeigh's jury selection process, Matsch asked prospective jurors what books they had read recently and what television programs they watched regularly.

One favorite book among jurors was "The Runaway Jury," by John Grisham, a novel about improper jury selection procedures.

Prospective jurors also were asked about their knowledge of militia groups, and if they believe the U.S. government acted properly during the raid on the Branch Davidian compound in Waco, Texas. Prosecutors said the Oklahoma City bombing was carried out to avenge the siege.

Police identify man and woman found dead in Parsons shooting

PARSONS, Kan. — A 78-year-old man was charged Tuesday with the shotgun killings of his son and a woman at their home.

Sherman Demps Sr. was charged in Labette County District Court with first-degree murder in the deaths Sunday of Sherman Demps Jr., 44, and Sandra K. Bailey, 50.

Police said the couple was living together at the home, but their relationship was uncertain.

The motive for the shooting was under investigation.

Police arrested the elder Demps on Sunday after the bodies were found about 5 p.m.

Autopsies determined the victims died of multiple gunshot wounds from a small caliber weapon, police said.

A 22-caliber handgun was found at the scene.

2 teen-agers die after driver surrenders wheel to fix her hair

FELLSMERE, Fla. — Two teen-agers were killed in a car wreck Tuesday after the 16-year-old driver asked a passenger to take the wheel while she fixed her hair, authorities said.

The driver, Shannan Thompson, was seriously injured along with a passenger, Nicole Thomas, 18.

Thompson was driving on Interstate 95 at about 2 a.m. when she asked Robert Cuskaden, 18, to steer, the Florida Highway Patrol said. The car veered several times into the grassy median and flipped, throwing three of the four teen-agers out.

Cuskaden and Julie A. Baghdadi, 18, were killed. Baghdadi was run over by a tractor-trailer and another vehicle.

The Florida teen-agers were returning from a weekend in Orlando.

No immediate charges were filed. Florida's curfew law prohibits people younger than 18 from driving overnight.

WILDCAT I.D. CARD USERS

DISAPPEARING?

YOUR NEW CARD MAY NEED LAMINATED

If you had your photo taken after August 25 your card is O.K.

The card can be visually checked to see if the front is laminated. Everything on the card's front side should be laminated except for the gold smart chip.
By holding the card in a certain position, you can observe a small border, about 2 mm wide, around the gold smart chip. A narrow border should also appear around the perimeter of the card. If there is no border, return your card to be laminated in the Main Ballroom, 2nd floor of the K-State Student Union.

The Campus Card Center will assist anyone with questions about their I.D. card. If the photo on the Wildcat Card is disappearing, the I.D. card will be replaced at no charge.

The K-State Student Union apologizes for this inconvenience but hopes that the value of the card will provide you with long term satisfaction.

College of Agriculture sponsors annual watermelon feed, club activities fair

Get involved.

That was the message sent to College of Agriculture students at the annual Watermelon Feed and Club Activities Fair on Tuesday evening.

"This is an excellent chance for us to welcome back old students and introduce new students to the numerous organizations our college has to offer," Jason Grady, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, said.

"There are 25 clubs represented here tonight, and they range from Horticulture Therapy to the KSU Horseman's Association."

The fair, which is co-sponsored by professional agricultural fraternity Alpha Zeta and the College of Agriculture Council, was designed to expose students to a variety of avenues within the agricultural curriculum.

Clayton Huseman, master of ceremonies and junior in animal sciences and industry, challenged students to get involved in an activity and make the most of their college experience.

"The people that students are going to meet in their years of college will not only be their friends, but also the people they will work with in the business world after K-State," Huseman said.

The activities fair also allowed clubs to benefit from student interest.

Jack Kliewer, treasurer of the Feed Science Club, said his club needs more underclassmen to join.

"Our club is the newest to be added in the College of Agriculture. We like this evening because we can promote our club and draw new members in.

"There are a lot of people who don't know about our club yet. We have a little bit of everything and offer a lot of hands-on experience for our members," Kliewer said.

In some cases, it takes time to see results develop from joining campus organizations.

"Being a junior, I can look back and see how important it was for me to get to know people in the different agricultural organizations. This is a great opportunity for new K-Staters to find a home within the College of Agriculture," Dixie Theurer, junior in agricultural economics, said. "I'm just loving the College of Agriculture."

BSU prepares for weekend Welcome Back Celebration

KERRY BOYDSTON

Members of Black Student Union prepared for their Welcome Back Celebration at Tuesday evening's general meeting.

The event will be from 3 to 8 p.m. Saturday at the Quinlan Natural Area. It is designed to get black students more acquainted with each other as well as different campus organizations.

"Last year, the Welcome Back Celebration gave black students an opportunity to meet faculty, administration and fellow members of BSU," Stacy Yeager, BSU member, said.

Colette McLemore, BSU president, said there is also a need for student help at the event.

"We need people to sign up for cooking, cleaning, setup and working the BSU booth," she said.

"We would like everyone to be able to enjoy this celebration and need as much help as possible."

McLemore said BSU members also can volunteer with the new mentoring program, which is designed to help underclassmen.

"This offers free help. There are upperclassmen who keep their notes and books and can help you study," McLemore said. "This helps a lot of African-American students, so don't be scared to sign up. We want to help you get through K-State."

In addition to discussing the Welcome Back Celebration and mentoring program, BSU members learned about scholarship opportunities.

Yeager said the application deadline for one scholarship, the Joey Lee Garman Undergraduate Minority Student Scholarship, is getting close. The application is due Sept. 16.

"This is a great scholarship worth $500 and is an honor to get," she said.

THE MANHATTAN CITY COMMISSION decided to go ahead with the proposed City Hall renovation at Tuesday night's meeting. Check today's eCollegian for the story.

Cartoonist whose gay character angered editors leaves syndicate

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Cartoonist Lynn Johnston, whose comic strip "For Better or For Worse" has come under fire for featuring a gay character, has left Universal Press Syndicate in a contract dispute.

Johnston and Kansas City-based Universal Press couldn't agree on contract length, money and licensing, among other issues, company spokesman Lee Salem said.

"She dropped us," Salem said. "We wanted to come to an agreement and she chose not to."

Johnston angered some editors and conservative readers in 1993 when a four-week sequence revealed the homosexuality of one of her characters, Lawrence, best friend of the fictional Patterson family's college-student son, Michael.

In July, Universal Press notified editors of an upcoming sequence in which Lawrence's partner, Ben, considers moving to Paris.

By mid-August, at least three newspapers announced they were dropping "For Better or For Worse" and 30 others used reruns in place of that sequence.

Universal Press denied that Tuesday's announcement was affected by newspapers' response to the sequence.

"Certainly this wasn't a creative problem, given the freedom we gave her in the Lawrence series," he said. "We just could not come to terms on a contract that would please her."

The strip appears in about 1,800 newspapers and has been with Universal Press for 19 years. New York-based United Feature Syndicate will begin distributing the strip later this month, Salem said.

Johnston, who lives in North Bay, Ontario, declined Tuesday to comment. She did release a statement saying her leaving Universal Press was like a kid leaving home.

"I have grown and matured with them over the past 20 years, and they supported me with each editorial decision I made," she said.

Universal said it would continue to publish books based on the strip. The company carries 18 titles featuring the Johnston strip, with more than 2 million books in print.

Such an arrangement is not unusual in the syndication industry, Salem said. For instance, Universal Press syndicates "Garfield" while Ballantine Books publishes bound collections of the strip, he said.

Student opinions needed in development of new alumni center

The manner in which buildings are planned, developed and built on the K-State campus has become a joke.

And if the so-called process is played well, the Alumni Association's plans to develop a three-story Alumni Center on the field south of Memorial Stadium might have progressed too far to be reconsidered.

Just why the users of the site have not been contacted or invited to a table of discussion remains a mystery. In a few years, the rugby, lacrosse and leisurely recreational players could be swept aside for the cranes and noise that come with construction.

What has become perfectly clear is the way this campus functions — projects are dreamed up, organized and rolling before they are ever announced to students, let alone student government.

Student Body President Tim Riemann, who is an active member of the Student Alumni Board, has said he doesn't think this should be a Student Senate issue.

Is it any surprise that a student so closely aligned with the Alumni Association would come out in favor of the project without wanting to make it a big issue? Riemann needs to rethink his allegiances while it's still early in his term.

It's also anyone's guess why Senate hasn't been on top of this issue anyway.

There are numerous issues that beg consideration.

What's the justification for using a high-concentration student area for a non-student, non-university agency?

How will this center affect the traffic of Anderson and Denison avenues? Will the Alumni Center use university parking lots for all or some of its parking needs?

Wouldn't a center near the KSU Stadium prove to be more convenient for alumni?

It's still early enough in the process for those questions to be answered. The Alumni Association board meeting on Sept. 26 and 27 will decide if the project will even proceed.

SURPRISE
MAYBE CHELSEA CLINTON WILL ENROLL AT K-STATE

VIEWPOINT
RUSSELL FORTMEYER
RUSSELL FORTMEYER is a senior in architectural engineering. You can send e-mail to Russell at rmf@ksu.edu.

Secretary: Excuse me, President Wefald? Bill Clinton on line two.

Wefald: Yes, Bill? Do you need me to suggest foreign policy strategies again?

Bill: No, Jon, it's a little more important. You see, Chelsea lied to me about wanting to go to Stanford University. She never even applied. She's going to K-State under the name Chi-Chi Jones-Clinton.

Wefald: What are you talking about?

Bill: Seriously. I want you to watch over her until after Streisand's wedding. Can you do that?

Wefald: Anything for a Democrat!

Dear friends, this is the conversation that theoretically could have taken place had first daughter Chelsea Clinton decided to pledge purple and join us in the Little Apple. By no means am I suggesting the conversation actually occurred, but by no means am I suggesting it didn't.

The chosen teen might actually be walking among us. I, for one, welcome Chelsea. And may I be the first one to go on record as saying "I didn't vote for your father or that local boy, but if I hadn't been so pissed at the system when I voted, I'm sure I would have voted for Bill."

If you haven't realized Chelsea is at K-State, perhaps you lack the sensitive antennae to see the subtle changes occurring in the city and on the campus.

For example, on Monday I saw Al Gore shopping for biology textbooks. Apparently, Bill thought helping Chelsea get settled would give him something to do:

Al: Uh, Chelsea, I tried to use your new ID card to pay for these books, but the bookstore employee said they don't accept Asian money. Do you know what he meant?

Chelsea: Can't you do anything right? I hate these new computerized ID cards with all those microchips.

Al: Hey, little lady, I don't want to hear another mean-spirited word about the fantabulous information superhighway. Ah! This is living.

From what I understand, Chelsea has chosen to live in a residence hall room by herself — at least, if you don't count the two middle-aged Secret Service guys who share the top bunk. She considered rushing, but was embarrassed out of the process after her father kept asking if he could rush, too.

Anyway, the residence hall living arrangement has reportedly caused some problems.

For instance, some women objected to being strip-searched upon entering the bathroom when Chelsea was showering. A young man wishing to take Chelsea out for coffee was forced to leave the university after undergoing an intensive one-week background check, revealing he interned during the summer with Sen. Sam "Eyebrows" Brownback.

Two Union Stateroom employees complained when one of the Secret Service agents insisted on tasting for poison in the food Chelsea wanted to eat. You'll be happy to know he's doing much better now that he's had a kidney removed and a stomach transplanted.

There are some definite advantages to having Chelsea on campus.

For one, Clinton will finally deliver a Landon Lecture, ending the "Who-the-hell-is-that?" slump we've been on for a year. However, Clinton has been a real burden on the College of Agriculture after repeatedly requesting tour after tour of the ice cream processing facility and the bakery science doughnut kitchen.

Hillary Clinton made a big splash on campus last week by offering to take over the operations of Lafene Health Center in an attempt to bring health care into the 21st century. She'll be called to Student Senate to testify at next week's meeting.

Perhaps the greatest advantage is having a roving press corps following dear Chelsea from class to class. I never knew Wolf Blitzer was that short.

At Tuesday's daily press conference, things got a little out of hand:

Wolf: So, Chelsea, is it true you stole sorority Keepa Kappa Beta's composite? And if so, how will that make your father feel?

Chelsea: My father wanted that picture to keep by his desk. I have no idea why.

Barbara Walters: Chelsea, you've had quite a yeeh. May-widge to Michael Jackson, a new baby, thwee Oscahs — what moe is left foe you to accomplish?

Chelsea: Barbara, would you like to go to Grammar I with me on Fwiday?

Mike Wallace: Why did you end up choosing K-State, and did it have anything to do with the tobacco companies' unwillingness to admit to wrongdoing?

Chelsea: First of all, I've always agreed with Sen. Helms that tobacco is a wonder drug that will eventually prove to cure society's ills.

To address your second question, I chose K-State because Stanford simply did not compare. Why would I choose to attend a school where education, research, innovation and intellectual tolerance were the mainstays of daily life?

In other words, I pick my schools based on their football programs.

FREEDOM OF CHOICE
A DIRECT RESULT OF GOD'S LOVE

VIEWPOINT
KEVIN BAILEY
KEVIN BAILEY is a senior in elementary education. You can send your e-mail comments to Kevin at kevinsb@ksu.edu.

Some would ask of God, "If you are there, and you love us so much, why is there so much wrong with this world?"

I have asked those same questions. I have searched — endlessly, it seems — trying to find the truth, and I can only come to one conclusion.

The fault lies not with God, but with humans. It's not God who chooses to pull the trigger on the gun that kills the little girl in a drive-by shooting.

It is human.

It is not God who selfishly hoards resources, refusing to help those starving in other countries.

It is human.

It is not God who perpetuates the evil lies that allow atrocities such as the Holocaust.

It is human.

The demise of the human race is a direct result of our actions. We, as humans, are responsible for the evil in the world. It is our actions, our thoughts and our deeds that have put us where we are — in a quagmire of hate, prejudice, starvation and death.

However, realizing this, the question still remains: If God is there, why did he give us the right to do whatever we want? Why did he give us free will?

In all his intimate wisdom, he must have known we would reject him. He must have known we would become enamored with all the good gifts he gave us. He must have known we would turn our backs.

So, why?

I believe that the reason he allowed us the ability to choose is quite simple.

He wanted love.

He had devotion. The angels gave him that. He had companionship. The Son and the Holy Spirit gave him that.

But, he wanted more.

He wanted love. Therefore, he was willing to take a risk. He was willing to risk rejection for the fulfillment of creating a being that would willingly choose to love him.

So, he reached down and formed a human from the dust of the earth. He reached inside himself and gave this human a soul — the ability to think, reason and know right from wrong.

He then breathed the breath of life into him, giving him a longing for fulfillment not satiated by any of God's gifts. This longing was only to be satisfied by communion with the Father.

Finally, he reached out and gave his created child the one gift that mattered most — a will. This terrible and lovely gift was to cause the Father the most joy — as well as the most pain.

Though it did give humans the ability to love, it also gave them the ability to not love. In giving his child a will, God created not only a child who could love him, but also a child who could choose not to love him.

Knowing the beginning from the end, he knew that many of his children would choose wrongly. They would become infatuated with themselves and all things physical surrounding them.

They would walk away.

Because he had given them a will, he had no choice but to let them. Though it breaks his eternal heart, he must let them.

He sends his spirit calling. In the greatest love story ever, God woos his creation.

He calls us to him through the prophets, the priests, his apostles and his men and women of this age.

He speaks to us through his witnesses. But, too often we ignore him — and them.

So often we walk away.

But, in seeing the beginning from the end, He also saw the others — and what a joy they were. Those were the ones who chose to love him. And, in this he found what he was longing for.

He found love.

These were the ones who loved him, not because he forced, coerced or programmed them that way, but because they responded to his call.

In the choice lies the beauty. In the choice lies the pain. In the choice lies the love. In the choice lies everything.

If God had not given us the freedom to choose, we would have been no better than slaves — mere dogs to obey the whims of a demanding master.

Our creator knew that. He chose to love us.

He wants us to choose to love him.

To do anything else would not be love.

Retiree thanks Union employees for party

Editor,

I retired from the K-State Student Union on July 31.

I was treated to a very special retirement reception given by the Union on Aug. 1. The Union staff exceeded all expectations in making my reception a very special day, one I could never forget. The planning and implementation was excellent as were the decor, refreshments and program.

I was very honored by those that made comments. Bernard Pitts, Union director, served as master of ceremonies and comments were made by Vice President Robert Krause; Bill Smith, director of Campus Activities Center at Wichita State University; and Sylvia Scott, director of student activities at the University of Arkansas. Bill and Sylvia were precious associates of mine at the Union.

My special thanks and appreciation go to the Union for giving me this retirement reception. Also my thanks and appreciation go to the many friends that attended the reception or sent cards. You made my day very special, one that I'll always remember and cherish.

Student upset; fee lines not the problem

Editor,

As a student receiving Federal Financial Aid, I would like to respond to Mary Renee Smith's most recent column, "The Long Thin Line Between Chaos and Financial Aid" (Aug. 29).

On a personal level, I was shocked, outraged and horrified at the ignorance that was so evident in her words. Her uninformed judgments are extremely detrimental to the positive strides being made in the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

I am sick and tired of the misinformation that people such as Smith perpetuates. To start with, the line in which she was standing was to pick up Credit Balance Refund checks generated by financial aid. However, those refunds are printed and distributed by the Cashier's Office, not the financial aid office.

Next, I strongly disbelieve that any K-State employee would use profanity to a student, as Smith suggests. However, Smith would like us to believe that the financial aid office personnel would use that terminology. Chances are, it was another frustrated student waiting in line.

Thirdly, standing in line after line in the un-air-conditioned Ahearn Field House is permanently etched in my memory. Therefore, the lines in the air-conditioned K-State Student Union were at least better than Ahearn.

Furthermore, the line for her check could have been avoided entirely. The Cashier's Office would eventually have mailed the refund to her local address. I understand that, financially, a lot of students are strapped at the beginning of school, but we, as returning students, should be well aware of those financial burdens.

It strikes me that she can be so enlightened on other important issues but not on this one. Portions of this letter were modeled and copied from a letter to the editor co-signed by Smith on the same date and page as her column was printed.

This was done to emphasize that her misinformation and assumptions which were published for the entire student body to read, maligned and misrepresented the efforts that the financial aid office has made to improve student relations.

Paparazzi formally named suspects in investigation of Diana's accident

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — A French judge declared seven paparazzi to be manslaughter suspects Tuesday in the death of Princess Diana, including one aggressive photographer said to have felt the dying princess's pulse while snapping shots of the car wreck.

A lawyer for one photographer dismissed the investigation as "theater justice," a sop to public outrage about the fact Diana, her millionaire boyfriend and their driver were killed while being chased by paparazzi.

But an attorney for boyfriend Dodi Fayed's father, Mohamed Al Fayed, said there was "causality" between the photographers' pursuit and the fatal crash, and the elder Fayed was joining the case as a civil party to prove it.

Fresh disclosures, however, pointed anew at a combination of deadly factors in Sunday's accident, including the apparently drunken condition of the driver, a Fayed employee.

A police analysis found that chauffeur Henri Paul's blood alcohol level may have been almost four times the legal limit at the time of the crash — higher than originally believed.

The photographers who went before the judge Tuesday, one by one, all had been in custody since being arrested at the crash scene Sunday morning.

Judge Herve Stephan placed them under formal investigation for "involuntary homicide" — the French equivalent of manslaughter. It does not mean they will necessarily be formally charged with any crimes.

They also will be investigated for failing to aid people in danger, a crime under the French "Good Samaritan" law requiring onlookers to assist victims of road accidents.

All were freed, two on bond. Both involuntary homicide and Good Samaritan violations can be punished by up to five years in prison and fines of almost $100,000.

In central London on Tuesday, a grieving human tide engulfed St. James's Palace, where Diana's body lay in a chapel closed to the public, as the British monarchy and government prepared for Saturday's grand funeral.

The White House announced that first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton will attend on behalf of the United States.

Thousands of Britons waited hours to sign books of condolence at St. James's — ordinary people with special places in their hearts for the young princess.

"Actually, I think the royal family should be done away with," said Irene Treble, 85. "But Diana was amazing as she had a real common touch that appealed to so many people."

The circumstances of her death — a high-speed chase by celebrity-hunting photographers on motorcycles, an alcohol-loaded driver who may have been pushing the armored Mercedes-Benz sedan to more than 100 mph as it roared through a Paris tunnel — have outraged people worldwide.

An American businessman who said he happened on the scene just after the crash called the photographers "disgusting."

"I mean (they were) all over the car," said Jack Firestone, of Hewlett Harbor, N.Y., "climbing all over the car as if they were mosquitoes ... clicking away like mad. ... It was obvious these paparazzi knew they had struck gold."

Some witnesses said photographers even pushed aside rescuers and police-officers, saying they were ruining their pictures.

Police accused Romuald Rat, of the Gamma photo agency, of obstructing the work of the first officers on the scene. Rat's lawyer, Philippe Benamou, said in defense that his client merely took Diana's pulse when he was taking pictures of the wreckage.

"He wanted to see if she was dead or alive," the lawyer said.

The other paparazzi under investigation are Nikola Arsov, of the Sipa agency; Jacques Langevin of Sygma; Laslo Veres, a free-lancer; Stephane Darmon, a motorcyclist for Gamma; Serge Arnal of the Stills agency; and Christian Martinez of Angeli; and Romuald Rat of Gamma.

Rat and Martinez were the only ones who had to post bond — the equivalent of $16,000 — and were forbidden from working as journalists pending resolution of the case.

"There is no crime here, the file is empty," he said. "I will demand that the case be dismissed immediately."

The driver, Paul, No. 2 security chief at the Fayed-owned Ritz Hotel, where Diana and Fayed dined before their fatal ride, was already reported by authorities to have been legally drunk at the time of the crash.

A second police toxicology analysis came up with a level of 1.87 grams of alcohol per liter of blood — even higher than the initial 1.75 figure given Monday, judicial officials said on customary anonymity. That gave the driver a blood-alcohol level nearly four times the 0.5 grams per liter legal limit in France.

A 1.75 level is the equivalent of drinking about 11 ounces of whiskey in rapid succession, or having blood-alcohol of about 0.17 percent.

Most U.S. states consider a driver to be legally drunk when a blood alcohol content of 0.1 percent is reached, although some have recently lowered that to 0.08 percent.

Police sources say the wrecked car's speedometer was found stuck at 196 kilometers per hour — 121 mph — a strong indication of its speed at impact.

Despite these damning reports, George Kiejman, a lawyer representing the elder Fayed, made it clear his aim is to establish the fault of the photographers in the case.

"There is a causality between the pursuit (by paparazzi) and the accident," he said.

Prosecutors had formally asked the judge to jail two of the photographers — Rat and Martinez — indicating they felt evidence against them was most serious. But the judge did not follow their recommendation.

One man who could provide insight into what happened Sunday morning remained in intensive care Tuesday.

Bodyguard Trevor Rees-Jones, the lone survivor in the wreck, suffered serious head and chest injuries. He is not expected to be able to speak with police for "a number of weeks," a hospital spokeswoman said.

Rees-Jones is a Fayed employee. Diana was entitled to but routinely declined official British security.

Ray attorneys explore new avenues for retrial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Attorneys for James Earl Ray say their client should have gotten a trial in 1969 when a judge died days after receiving Ray's request to withdraw his guilty plea.

Two weeks days after confessing to the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Ray sought to withdraw his plea, sending a letter to Shelby County Criminal Court Judge W. Preston Battle. Battle died of a heart attack five days later.

Ray's attorneys were expected to file a petition today in Davidson County Chancery Court in Nashville. The petition, which seeks Ray's immediate release on bond, cites a state law that allows a new trial when a judge dies while considering a motion.

"He has an automatic right to a trial," attorney Andrew Hall said Monday from his office in Wartburg, Tenn.

Ray has been seeking a trial in a separate court action in Memphis. In that court, the 69-year-old Ray has argued the hunting rifle found at the murder scene with his fingerprints on it was put there to frame him.

The Tennessee Court of Criminal Appeals ruled Friday that Ray may continue trying to show he didn't fire the bullet that killed King. However, the court admonished Criminal Court Judge Joe Brown and fellow Judge John Colton Jr. for exceeding their authority to investigate Ray's claims.

Ray, who is serving a 99-year sentence and is seriously ill from liver disease, has tried for more than 28 years to take back his guilty plea to killing King in Memphis in 1968. The plea has been upheld eight times by state and federal courts.

The petition to be filed by Hall and fellow attorney Mark Lane, who have not represented Ray in the motions over rifle-testing, centers on Ray's letter to Battle on March 26, 1969, two weeks after he pled guilty. In the letter, Ray wrote: "I would respectfully request this court to treat this letter as a legal notice of an intent to ask for a reversal of the 99-year sentence."

After Battle died, his successor, Arthur C. Faquin, denied Ray's motion. The Tennessee Supreme Court also rejected the request, saying Ray "knowingly and intelligently" pleaded guilty and had voluntarily waived his right to appeal.

Hall said the 1970 Supreme Court ruling didn't consider a state law that says a defendant gets a new trial if the judge dies while considering a motion.

"I think they're barking up the wrong tree," lead Ray prosecutor John Campbell said Monday.

"By pleading guilty, you waive (a right to) a trial," Campbell told The Commercial Appeal of Memphis.

▶ James Earl Ray, who was convicted of killing Martin Luther King Jr. in 1969, may get a new trial.

Full blast

FUNK AND RAP BANDS ROCK SANDSTONE

STORY BY PHIL KELLUM

Revolution and rebellion were in the air Monday night at Sandstone Amphitheater in Bonner Springs, Kan., when Rage Against the Machine and Atari Teenage Riot tore the place apart.

Hip-hop masters Wu-Tang Clan were originally scheduled to occupy the middle slot of the bill but canceled for unknown reasons, prompting many fans to seek refunds.

Rob Holland of Overland Park, Kan., said, "I really wanted to see them because the only rap I've seen is Coolio."

When I got to my seat, the lovely sounds of Fear were blasted over the sound system. It set the scene nicely for an evening of controlled chaos.

The reserved seating near the front filled slowly and wasn't completely full before Atari Teenage Riot hit the stage around 7:30 p.m. The volume was ear-splittingly loud, and I loved every minute of it.

Most of the crowd didn't seem to like ATR, unfortunately. There were more than a few middle fingers raised aloft in the band's direction.

It played more of its extreme songs, like "Not Your Business," "Sick To Death" and my personal favorite, "Start The Riot."

Its high-speed, intense mix of speed metal and hardcore punk with brutal techno and jungle beats was absolutely glorious. Alec Empire, Carl Crack and Hanin Elias were all over the stage, jumping off the speakers. Elias bounced around much of the time like a 5-year-old kid hyped up on sugar and caffeine.

I was angry that ATR didn't get more stage time because of Wu-Tang Clan's absence.

After about 45 minutes, and at least one fight in the crowd, Rage Against the Machine hit the stage. If Sandstone had a roof, they would have blown it off the place.

The band's amplifiers were decorated with an upside-down flag and an image of Cuban revolutionary Che Guevara. Its monstrous backdrop featured images stating things like "Who dies first?" "Who is beyond the law?" and "Who is bought and sold?"

Frontman Zack De La Rocha hobbled on stage with his left foot in a cast and said, "Good evening. We are Rage Against the Machine from Los Angeles." Then the band exploded into "People Of The Sun."

They band played a good mix of older and newer songs, ranging from "Know Your Enemy" from their debut album to "Vietnow" from last year's "Evil Empire" album.

Guitarist Tom Morello showed that his incredible and bizarre guitar sounds were not just studio trickery, pulling them off amazingly live.

The band played two unusual covers, one being a brutal rendition of Bruce Springsteen's "The Ghost of Tom Joad" and a startling version of "Welcome To The Jungle" by Guns N' Roses.

Music Review

I could tell De La Rocha was hampered by his injured ankle and foot because he is known for jumping around like a madman on stage. He couldn't do much because of the injury, but he was still pouncing around like a caged tiger.

Very few bands can play at an outdoor venue like Sandstone as though it was a small club, but Rage did.

Many times they all huddled together in the middle of the stage, as if there was no room to move, and fed off each other's energy.

The highlight of Rage's set was "Bombtrack." It was much like a bomb exploding in its intensity.

After a little over an hour, Rage left the stage and returned for a short encore, which was just as incredible as the rest of its set.

It kicked off the encore with "Bulls On Parade."

"Killing In The Name Of" capped the evening brilliantly with the crowd screaming along to its unprintable chorus.

This was one of the best shows I've seen all year. If Wu-Tang Clan had shown up, it would have probably been the best. If you missed it, start kicking yourself now.

Brush of greatness

Artist abstract's expressionism style reflects his view of the world

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
staff writer

Wolf Kahn could be described as the quiet child of a mother's noisy brood.

He emerged from the mania of the 1950s New York art world relatively intact, which was no easy accomplishment. Kahn's work from 1970 to 1995 is the subject of the exhibition "Wolf Kahn: Dialogue Between Abstract and Traditional Art" at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art until Oct. 19.

To understand how Kahn achieved his current direction in landscape painting, one must understand the highs and lows of the late 20th-century art world.

Fifties New York was a time and place of change and profundity, swirling with the abstract expressionist/action artists and their critics, who heralded a new age of American art as the supreme international style.

Art Review

Mythic figures like Jackson Pollock, Mark Rothko and Willem de Kooning set the standard for younger artists; the second generation of the New York School painters faced the quandary of following the surface styles of the greats or departing into new territory.

In hindsight, it's apparent the more successful artists chose the latter. An entire bumper crop of late abstract-expressionist painters has managed to squeeze the life out of the style and also inspired a realist reaction.

Kahn is neither totally abstract or traditionally realist, so the exhibition sets us up for a dialogue between the two.

To know Kahn is to know Hans Hofmann, the dynamic, color-obsessed teacher under whom Kahn studied. Kahn's early work shows the influence of Hofmann's interests in the forces of colors, spontaneity, textural hints at process and an insistence that artists paint from life.

A work like "White Light on the Water," an oil on canvas (1964) included in the show, gives an understanding of where Kahn is coming from, but it easily pales in comparison to later works that serve to highlight his debt to Hofmann.

As for Kahn's early paintings, which aren't included in this show, you can take them or leave them. It wasn't until the mid- to late 1960s that Kahn found a clear direction as a strictly landscape painter, an immense tradition with its own formal baggage. It is this quiet, subtle direction that is the subject of the Beach show, organized by the Boca Raton Museum of Art.

How did an abstract expressionist eventually find landscape — a genre that has only very recently again become a popular pursuit?

George Bolge, director of the Boca Raton Museum, says Kahn is a metaphorical colorist in the most elementary sense — the embodiment of Edward Hopper after dragging him through abstract expressionism and color field painting.

"When Wolf Kahn looked to landscape, he chose it as a structure to which he could do his innovative approach with color," Bolge said. "On one simple level, I think Wolf is trying to relate the spirituality of the landscape."

Kahn's color associations, while appearing as the primary interest in the paintings, reinforces an ethereal plane that serves to strengthen the work.

In the large oil painting "Yellow and Gray" (1995), a cohesion is achieved through the balance of the two colors. The gray trees and yellow sky blur abstractly, yet concurrently intensify the landscape — one is forced to see nature as the artist sees.

Nearly every painting in the show requires a close examination to understand how Kahn's various brushstrokes and subtle color nuances unify the works.

"Overall Trees" (1992) absolutely pulses with a nearly fluorescent orange blanket behind bright green trees. The success of Kahn's work depends greatly on how little the artist chooses to incorporate. In "Trees," the unmuddledness of the canvas belies the intensity of the brushstroke and underlying color combinations.

In "A Florida Waterway (Near Naples)," pastel on paper (1995), the abundance of an extraneous subject reduces the work to that of a tourist postcard.

The duality of too much and too little fol-

Family finishes year long trip across 50 states, capital cities

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — The yearlong odyssey across the nation of one Midwestern family in a funky van fascinated thousands of Internet browsers who became a cyberspace cheering section.

Now, after 365 days on the road to all 50 states, logging 54,944 miles, burning 5,000 gallons of gasoline and spending $109,000, the Graham family is back home in Wichita.

Their trip, detailed on the Internet, resulted in invitations for free lodging in scores of homes, from a guest house on the beach in Gig Harbor, Wash., to the Long Island mansion of a New York City couple.

For years, Marlene and Craig Graham had worked during the day and evening, put their kids to bed, then worked some more.

They decided something had to change.

So last year, they quit their jobs, sold their ranch-style house and their weekly community newspaper, bought a van, packed a tent and left Wichita to visit all the state capitals in the union. They set out on July 4, 1996.

Now they are back in the city, welcomed home on July 4 with a fireworks display at Lawrence-Dumont Stadium.

They have settled into a newly rented apartment. Craig, 42, is resuming work as a real estate agent. Marlene, 39, a former TV reporter, is writing a book about the journey.

Daughter Courtney, 12, has started the seventh grade after staying out of school for a year, and Collier, 4, is catching up on cartoons he missed while on the road.

It's their fans out there in cyberspace who feel let down.

Before beginning their journey, the Grahams set up a home page on the Internet to keep in touch with family and friends.

Thousands of Net surfers wound up following their journey in cyberspace.

The Internet turned strangers into the Grahams' informal travel agents and transformed homes across America into friendly places to stay, do laundry and socialize.

"We never really knew any of these people, what they were like, until we showed up at their door," Marlene said.

In all, they stayed with 70 families they met on the Internet, as well as with relatives and friends. Before they left, a campground chain gave them a VIP card good for a free stay at any of their facilities. Later, some hotels offered free rooms.

"It's like Wichita was our hometown when we left on this trip," Marlene said. "Now our hometown is America.

"Our lives have been an open book, but it's been nothing but a positive thing for us."

Their white customized van — painted with an American flag, a map of the nation and the Grahams' Internet address — was outfitted with closets for storage and chairs that tilted back for sleeping. Many of their meals were cheap fast-food sandwiches or picnic lunches. They often showered in campgrounds and freshened up in restaurant restrooms.

Courtney missed the sixth grade but her parents "van-schooled" her with video and audio tapes and textbooks. Television was avoided to encourage the children to focus on the passing scenery.

"I wound up doing two or three hours of writing every day for the Web site," Marlene said.

Marlene's notes are like letters to friends. One tells how they were grand marshals at a Walt Disney World parade. They met the governors of 20 states.

There are vignettes of people the Grahams met along the way, such as the couple working their way across America as substitute campground managers.

When the family was going to Maine, one man supplied the address of thriller author Stephen King near Bangor. Other people checked the Web site for vacation tips. Many families wrote to say they were inspired to take similar trips.

They still receive daily e-mail, sometimes from loyal followers hungry for more daily updates. Members of one family wrote to say they had read the updates each evening while the Grahams were on the road.

Two families who met the Grahams on the road plan to visit them in Wichita. And one man, a stranger, wrote to say he was moving to Wichita.

The Grahams had become used to such casual familiarity during their journey.

Estela Hammond of the Chicago suburb of Naperville read about the Grahams in a magazine in June, looked up their Web site and invited them to stay with her family. Two days later, the Grahams were at the Hammonds' house eating grilled pork ribs and corn on the cob. They stayed for two nights and three days.

Hammond said she wasn't nervous about inviting strangers to stay with her. Her own mother was from Panama and she said she felt a special bond with Marlene, whose mother was from Colombia.

"I just thought they had standards like us," she said.

When the Grahams described problems with a video camera, strangers flooded Radio Shack with e-mail urging the company to fix it, Marlene says. Company employees arranged to meet the family on the road and repair the camera.

The trip wasn't completely idyllic.

"There were definitely times when we wanted to toss the kids out the window and they wanted to toss us out the window," Craig said.

By the time the Grahams got back home, it was hard to return to a daily routine.

"I think we'd gotten used to going out and doing something new every day," Craig said.

Whether they ever buy another house, Marlene and Craig know they don't want to return to life as they knew it before their adventure.

"That's one thing we learned from this trip," Marlene said. "Don't ever get yourself so deeply entrenched that you can't enjoy life."

"I want to read what happens to us, too," Marlene said.

Tobacco companies boost prices by approximately 7 cents a pack

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Large tobacco companies raised wholesale cigarette prices about 7 cents a pack Tuesday in what analysts saw as a down payment on the smoking lawsuit settlements that would cost the industry billions of dollars.

The increase was the second this year, following a rise of about 5 cents a pack in March. The latest increase amounts to a rise of about 7.5 percent in the wholesale price of cigarettes which should translate into a 4-percent increase at retail.

Analysts said the latest increase should cover the first-year costs of legal settlements reached with the states of Mississippi and Florida over the states' claims to recover Medicaid payments made to treat sick smokers.

They said the industry's quick move to match the biggest cigarette maker Philip Morris USA in raising prices might be intended to encourage Congress to approve a broader national legal settlement reached in June.

The White House is reviewing the proposed $368.5 billion settlement plan reached with a majority of state attorneys general and various anti-smoking activists.

Higher tobacco prices could reduce demand for cigarettes by youngsters, backers of the agreement say. But critics have called the settlement too generous to the tobacco industry and say it is unfair to have current smokers shouldering the costs.

The 7.5-percent wholesale price increase would be the biggest in percentage terms since a 12-percent rise in late 1988, according to industry analyst Gary Black of Sanford C. Bernstein & Co.

Black said it would generate about $1.6 billion in extra revenue in the first year, which he said would more than offset the first-year payments required under the settlements the industry has struck under an $11.3 billion deal with Florida and a $3.6 billion agreement with Mississippi.

Black said if the national settlement was approved, tobacco prices would have to be raised 40 cents per pack to meet the first-year costs and an additional 35 cents a pack in the next five years.

Philip Morris, which makes the top-selling Marlboro brand, told wholesalers on Friday that it was boosting prices by $3.50 for every 1,000 cigarettes effective on orders the day after Labor Day. There are 20 cigarettes to a pack.

Rivals R.J. Reynolds Tobacco, maker of Winston and Camels, and Brown & Williamson Tobacco, which sells Kool, Carlton and Lucky Strikes, followed suit.

Philip Morris spokesman Brendan McCormick declined to say what caused the increase. Reynolds spokeswoman Maura Ellis cited "our increased costs of doing business" but declined to elaborate.

Tom Fitzgerald, a spokesman for Brown & Williamson, said the recent Florida and Mississippi settlements as well as other factors played a role in the price hike.

David Adelman, a tobacco analyst for Morgan Stanley Dean Witter, said raising prices in increments could make it easier for smokers to get used to higher prices without driving them to quit because of a massive one-time boost. He said gradual increases also could discourage wholesalers from hoarding cigarettes in anticipation of a big price jump.

▶ Price increase. The federal government increased the price of cigarettes by 7 cents a pack. This follows a 4-cent per pack increase last March.

SURGERY

In high school and at Cloud County, Christiensen was active in track. He won state in the triple jump his senior year in high school. Because of his breathing and fatigue while participating in sports and other activities, some people didn't believe he was an athlete.

"I'd tell friends I was in track, and they'd say 'Yeah, right.' I'd have to try and convince them otherwise," he said.

Kathy Williams, a friend of the family, is the chairwoman of the Organ Transplant Fund for Jason Christiensen. Friends and family are trying to raise around $234,000 for the transplant, medicine and other related bills. So far, they've raised about $14,000.

The Organ Transplant Fund, a nonprofit organization based in Memphis, Tenn., is helping with the fund raising.

Williams said they were looking at August 1998 as the date for the transplant.

"We have several fund-raisers planned. A couple of Jason's friends are in charge of canisters in the Manhattan area," she said.

Some of the fund-raisers planned are activities at K-State football and basketball games, selling K-State watches and an auction in Abilene, Kan., with items like a Royals baseball bat and glove signed by players, NASCAR items and a K-State football.

"Anyone is welcome to volunteer," Williams said. "Any club who wants to do something on behalf of Jason can contact me."

Williams also said people should sign the back of their driver's licenses.

"Jason once said, 'You can't take your organs to heaven,'" she said.

But as fund raising continues, Christiensen's heart is getting worse. His mom, Margie, said the doctors haven't ruled out a heart transplant.

She said he's now on a medicine, Flowlan, which costs $15,000 a month. Kansas Medicaid is paying for that.

"The medicine is making him feel better. It's just another hope he will get better. It will take time, and he's still holding his own. I guess we'll just have to wait and see." Margie said.

Donations can be sent to the Organ Transplant Fund for Jason Christiensen, P.O. Box 312, Abilene, KS 67410. Williams can be reached in the evenings at (785) 479-1678 or contact co-chairperson Julie Freeman at (785) 598-2343.

Christiensen will go back for a checkup Sept. 11 at University of Kansas Medical Center to see how his heart and lungs are doing.

"Everyone's been really supportive, especially my parents," Christiensen said. "So many calls. It's unbelievable how good people have been."

Christiensen would like to finish his education at K-State. He only has one year left to finish his degree in kinesiology.

Christiensen said it was different living a normal life and then being told he had a rare disease that is more common in females.

"It's a 1-percent chance. The chances of winning the lottery are better than this. It just goes to show anything can happen to anybody."

ALUMNI

Riemann, student body president and past Student Alumni Board president, and Ashley Youle, current Student Alumni Board president, both maintain seats on the Alumni board.

Both Riemann and Youle support the project and see the development of the green space as having a positive impact on the campus.

"I think it's an excellent space," Youle said. "It will increase the publicity of the Alumni Association. They need to separate themselves from the Foundation."

Perhaps the greatest initial effect of the proposed project on students would be the loss of the playing field, used by the lacrosse and rugby teams for practices.

"I don't think this is the only place students can get involved in these activities," Youle said.

Campus wide student representation in the project has so far been handled by Riemann, who is still a member of the Student Alumni Board.

Riemann said he sees the project as K-State playing catch-up with every other Big 12 university, because K-State is the only one with no alumni center.

"I'm a little bit sad that it will take some of the green space, but I'm encouraged they will try to blend the building into the aesthetic of the old stadium," Riemann said. "I guess with progress, you always have to give up something."

Not all students know as much about the project or how it will affect them and their extracurricular activities.

Scott Cohorst, senior in anthropology and president of the Men's Rugby Club, said he had heard of the project through a lacrosse team member.

"I don't know enough about the situation right now," Cohorst said. "I'd like to know what they are planning."

Cohorst said he would like to see the university create some new practice fields because the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex won't let the teams practice there, the city parks are too small and a backup field near KSU Stadium is usually littered with bottles and cans.

"I'd love to see them build new fields," Cohorst said. "The Alumni Association should donate some money to build new fields. I don't think it would be too hard. Then again, I'm playing rugby. I'm not playing politics."

He said he would like to see a way students and facility users could be brought into development discussions in a more formal way.

"Even if they set up something like that, people like us would be left out," Cohorst said. "I do think we should be notified."

Cohorst said he plans to get in contact with the Alumni Association to learn more of the project.

Although the KSU Soccer Club uses Memorial Stadium proper for practices, the proposed project came as a surprise to adviser Charles Hedgcoth, professor of biochemistry.

"That is not the way the campus functions," Hedgcoth said. "They won't be concerned with actual users until they get their plans in order."

Although Hedgcoth said he understands the importance of the Alumni Association to the university, he sees the loss of the space as unfortunate.

"It's strange that we would move student activities off campus," he said. "The Alumni Association isn't really a functioning student organization."

Students need not worry that the project will interrupt the playing field inside Memorial Stadium.

Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and university architect, said the University was approached by the Alumni Association with the project proposal for the site.

Carter said the university had no plans for the site other than coordinating some issues tied in with the expansion of Anderson Avenue and the addition of a storm sewer line in the area.

The site itself was the subject of some controversy during the 1994-95 school year when the administration announced plans to build a parking garage inside the stadium proper. After students, faculty and alumni objected, the project was withdrawn.

Architecturally, Carter said the Alumni Association has considered a three-story building that would be structurally tied in with the stadium as a way of finishing off the horseshoe design intent of the original structure.

"It may make sense to do that or a stand-alone structure," Carter said. "We'll let the architecture team do that."

As far as the field inside Memorial Stadium, Carter said "any good architect worth his snuff could come up with a project that leaves that field intact."

If students are concerned about the project, both Renz and Riemann said they welcomed phone calls.

"I recommend calling Amy Renz and tell her what you think," Riemann said. "Everyone at the Alumni Association thinks this is a bang-up deal for K-State."

Although Riemann said he would like feedback, he said he wouldn't encourage students to make this a Student Senate issue.

Senate is not actively pursuing involvement in the development.

"I haven't heard a peep of discontent," Riemann said.

lows throughout Kahn's barn series of paintings, of which the show's inclusion of "The Yellow Square" (1980) gives a good example. Or perhaps this is the definite border between an inner battle about complexity.

Either way, the floating, purplish-gray barn in "Square" illustrates an understanding and appreciation of Rothko's metaphysical use of color.

The exhibition stresses Kahn's lifelong pursuit of the arts, having been born in Stuttgart, Germany, in 1927 into a family with an arts tradition. His father, Emil, was conductor and composer for the Stuttgart Symphony.

Kahn was sent to England to live during World War II, after which he joined his father in the United States. After serving in the Navy, he began his formal art training, first with Stuart Davis and finally with Hofmann.

Kahn now resides in New York City and New England, the latter being the inspiration for many of the works in the show. His work allows one the opportunity to see the New England colors through his vision.

INTRODUCING THE MAN

Bishop beats competition

JESS C. LOUK

K-State football fans can stop guessing. Bill Snyder named communitycollege transfer Michael Bishop the starting quarterback for the 1997 season Tuesday afternoon.

Bishop beat out sophomores Adam Helm and Jonathan Beasley for the job. Snyder said sheer athletic ability and Bishop's on-the-field presence led him to choose Bishop as the starter. Helm will be the team's No. 2 quarterback.

"I have to prepare like I'm going to play," Helm said. "I'm one snap away."

As a relative newcomer to the team, Bishop has been trying to learn as much of the offense as he can before the start of the season.

"In the period of time that he (Bishop) has been here, he has really made significant progress, which tells me that he is learning very quickly," Snyder said.

Bishop never lost a game as a quarterback at Blinn Community College in Texas. In that time, Bishop's team went 24-0, winning the community college national championship twice. The last time one of Bishop's teams lost more than one game in a single season, he was a junior in high school.

"He's a pretty poised young guy," Snyder said.

With Bishop starting and Helm not having a redshirt year, Beasley might redshirt the 1997 season. Snyder said that decision will be made later in the year.

"I would never play Jonathan in the same capacity that he played last year," Snyder said. "Jonathan would do anything in the world to help this football team."

The quarterbacks were told in a quarterback meeting Monday before practice.

"I think we all felt we had a good enough fall (to start)," Beasley said. "It just came down to Coach's decision."

In fact, Bishop might have Helm and Beasley to thank for helping him win his starting role. In fall and spring practices, Helm and Beasley helped Bishop gain a better understanding of the Cats' offensive scheme.

"We helped him out during the summer," Helm said. "He's a great competitor."

As the starter, Bishop brings big-time speed to the position. Bishop runs the 40-yard dash in 4.5 seconds. Snyder said his abilities are different than anyone who has played at K-State since Snyder has arrived.

Even with all the athletic ability Bishop possesses, Snyder said his decision was not easy. In the spring practices, Helm and Beasley both made big impressions on the coaching staff.

"Jonathan proved to me that he was a legitimate Division I quarterback," Snyder said.

Bishop will get his chance to make the biggest impression when he lines up under center Saturday against Northern Illinois.

"Everybody knows who's gonna be the man on Saturday," Bishop said.

Bishop ready for Division I ball

SAM FELSENFELD
staff writer

After one month of practice, two-a-days and three thoroughbreds running neck-and-neck toward the finish line, the race for the starting quarterback at K-State has come to a close.

Finally.

Coach Bill Snyder stood at the wire, trying to determine who crossed first in the photo finish.

And according to Snyder, whose call makes the outcome official, the winner is ...

Michael Bishop.

Snyder said Monday that he would announce the starter at Tuesday's news conference, and he didn't waste any time naming Bishop.

"Bishop will start for us on Saturday," were the first words out of Snyder's mouth as he opened up the first weekly news conference of the 1997 season.

Bishop, who guided Blinn (Texas) Community College in Texas to a 24-0 record and two community college national championships, will get his first crack at extending his perfect record in college Saturday when the Cats travel to Northern Illinois.

To earn the job, Bishop had to beat out true sophomore Jonathan Beasley and redshirt sophomore Adam Helm.

Beasley and Helm came out of spring practice tied for first at the top of the depth chart. At that point, Bishop had never even set foot on the K-State practice field.

But Beasley and Helm, showing the ultimate signs of teamwork, helped Bishop learn Snyder's complex system fast enough to beat them out of the top spot.

"Michael Bishop wouldn't have made the strides he made if it weren't for the assistance he received from Jonathan Beasley and Adam Helm in this period of learning," Snyder said.

> "I can't wait, I've been waiting for Sept. 6 to roll around for a long time. In practice, we can only go to certain limits. I'm looking forward to getting hit."
> • Michael Bishop
> K-State quarterback

Snyder made the decision Saturday but waited until before practice Monday to inform the players.

"I never doubted this," Bishop said, "but I always hoped it would end up like this."

After practice Tuesday, his first one as the leader of the Wildcats, Bishop celebrated in grand style.

But with a keg party or a night of barhopping. Instead, he treated himself like royalty — with a full meal at Burger King.

And then he spread the news.

"I called my mother up and told her," he said. "She was very proud."

When Bishop moved to Manhattan at the beginning of the summer, he didn't know anything about Snyder's system.

He was a year behind Beasley and two years behind Helm. However, he impressed Snyder enough in less than a month of practice to earn the nod.

"We picked him because of his sheer athletic ability as much as anything else," Snyder said. "Not that the others aren't fine athletes, but they're not where Michael is."

Now that the much-hyped quarterback controversy is over, Bishop can worry about his next competition — K-State's opening game against Northern Illinois.

Bishop said he never had to deal with the pressure he's faced so far as a Cat while playing at Blinn.

But he also said he's ready to handle living in the spotlight.

"Attention is good, but it's not going to make me a better player," he said. "I'm ready for the challenge. I feel I learned enough in summer and two-a-days to go up there and bring us a win."

He's also not worried about any butterflies when he puts on a Division I uniform for the first time.

"I don't get nervous," he said. "I'll be OK."

Now, with the quarterback controversy behind him, he's counting down the days until he can try to live up to all the expectations.

"I can't wait. I've been waiting for Sept. 6 to roll around for a long time," he said. "In practice, we can only go to certain limits. I'm looking forward to getting hit."

Gridiron season sends this columnists' grades, social life plummeting

VIEWPOINT

SUN DEE MILLS

SUN DEE MILLS is a senior in electronic journalism. You can send your e-mail comments to Sun Dee at sundee@ksu.edu.

Football has begun, and there go my grades.

You see, every Saturday morning last fall, I would stumble out of bed at 11 a.m. to catch the early college game. I usually didn't move from the couch all day unless hunger forced me to check out the fridge during commercials.

This, of course, depended on where the Wildcats played and whether I was at the stadium to cheer them on.

But Sundays were my days to cherish.

Sundays were for watching Bonehead and the Chiefs break my heart (again) and watching John Elway and those blasted Broncos move into the upper echelon, only to be smacked down by Jacksonville in the playoffs. I watched the Jaguars and Carolina come of age and saw 10 coaching changes occur, a near-record for the NFL.

However, if you'd told me five years ago I'd be spouting off about my weekend of football consumption, I'd have laughed in your face and told you to stop smoking the good stuff.

Back then, I was a football widow.

I had a group of friends who watched "Monday Night Football" every week and then left for a fun-filled evening of billiards and beer immediately after the game. They weren't about to make a point to call me after the game ended and say, "Hey, you football-hater, the game's over. Let's go play pool."

Coupons trigger inquiry of votes bought with beer

CHARLESTON, Mo. — As many as 200 voters last fall were rewarded with yellow coupons good for a $1 purchase at the Gas-A-Mat — enough for a cold, 16-ounce Old Style beer at the convenience store.

And enough to trigger a federal grand jury investigation into allegations of Democratic vote-buying.

"Thank you for your support!!!" read the mass-printed coupons that Republicans say were handed out to departing voters in mostly black, mostly poor areas to re-elect the Missouri Legislature's senior member who took office on the 1960 Democratic ticket led by John F. Kennedy.

AT A GLANCE
Missouri Legislature Democrat Harry Warren accused of buying votes during re-election.

"In no way did we cheat," said Harry "Joker" Warren, owner of the Gas-A-Mat and a Democratic loyalist for more than half a century. "The Republicans just got mad because they got beat."

Several figures in what has been dubbed southeastern Missouri's Beer for Votes case have testified before the grand jury. No one has been charged.

"If people are to go out and pay people a dollar or two to steal their votes, I think that's the most degrading behavior," said David Barklage, director of the Missouri House Republican Campaign Committee.

The GOP's evidence: videotapes shot at Barklage's behest through a van's darkened windows outside Charleston's heavily black polling places. They show a Democratic effort to haul voters to the polls. A half-dozen voters at a time are seen climbing out of cars and vans to vote.

Barklage acknowledges the videotapes did not capture any actual vote-buying. And he concedes that the 200 or so votes involved would not have changed the outcome of the election, which Rep. Gene Copeland won by an 1,166-vote margin, or 55.3 percent.

But he said Tuesday: "Votes were bought. The focus ought to be that someone attempted to buy the election."

The conservative southeastern Missouri region has long been dominated by Democrats. But in recent years they have faced spirited challenges from the GOP.

Lester Gillespie, a Democratic activist in Mississippi County's black community, acknowledges paying the owner of the Gas-A-Mat $200 to accept 200 coupons good for $1 worth of merchandise apiece.

He also acknowledges distributing the coupons to black voters whose names were checked off a list outside the polls to verify they cast ballots.

But Gillespie, who testified before the grand jury, insists the coupons were merely "a token of my appreciation" for participating in the political process — not a reward for voting a certain way.

ELIZABETH DODD, associate professor of English, was awarded a mini-fellowship from the Kansas Arts Commission. Dodd is working on her second book of poetry.

'Reading American' wins mini-fellowship

LESLEY BAKER
staff reporter

In a manila envelope atop a battle-scarred desk lay five of the 15 poems that have made Elizabeth Dodd $500 happier.

Dodd, an associate professor of English, was awarded a $500 mini-fellowship from the Kansas Arts Commission this summer.

In July, Dodd submitted 15 poems from her embryo book, "Reading American" to an intense contest in Topeka. Her hopes were that she'd be able to afford the costs of publication with the help of any money the Kansas Arts Commission dropped her way. She found out about her mini-fellowship completely by accident.

"Somebody who works there called to interview me about the grant. She had learned, and I hadn't learned about it yet," Dodd said.

This is Dodd's second poetry collection that she's groomed for publication. Her first book, "Like Memory, Caverns," was published in 1992.

"I started writing poetry in eighth grade," Dodd said. "I kind of scribbled diddies and things, but that's the first time I started writing poetry. I'm very interested in our relationship to place, the natural world."

As for her new collection, "Reading American," Dodd describes it as an exploration of the land. The poems trace her own experiences as a traveler through the northwest mountains of Idaho to the coast of Maine and the Ohio woodlands to the Kansas prairies.

Dodd's poetry has appeared in more than 25 magazines, including Manhattan City Arts and Tar River Poetry. She's published one book and has articles and essays in more than six other publications.

"I think poetry is language in an act of attention and this poem is intensely present. It has vividness in every word and an incredible generosity," Dodd said as she gently closed the poem.

Dodd returned to teach this fall after a year on sabbatical.

"I'd been teaching without a break for 13 years," Dodd said.

During that time, she visited the mountains of Colorado and Montana, delivered critical papers to various universities and finally found time to write more of the poems found in "Reading American."

Dodd has very specific plans concerning her mini-fellowship and her quest for a publisher. Those plans include the cover art of her book.

"The Beach Museum had early watercolors by Georgia O'Keeffe," Dodd said. "A show of about a dozen. There are a couple from that showing that I'd like for the cover of my book."

"I'm interested in her artistic vision. I think it coincides with my poetic vision. I'm going to use some of the money to buy copyrights."

"Reading American" has yet to be accepted by a publisher but, as Dodd said, "I'm hopeful."

Girls coach arrested for rape after police track fingerprints

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — A former track coach at an all-girls high school will be charged with raping a woman and may be linked to a dozen other sexual assaults in the east San Francisco Bay area, authorities said.

Tony Lawayne Ransom, 37, was arrested Monday at his home in San Leandro on suspicion of attacking a woman who was practicing piano in a soundproofed music room at Chabot College in Hayward Aug. 20, police said.

The Oakland Tribune Tuesday quoted sources as saying fingerprints led police to Ransom, who has been convicted in the past on burglary and other charges.

It is the first arrest in connection with a series of 13 rapes committed since mid-July from Hayward to Berkeley, but police did not say if Ransom had been linked to any of the other attacks.

"It's premature to speculate as to whether this solves all the attacks, but in this case, this arrest is a major breakthrough in the investigation," Police Chief Joe Samuels said Monday.

The women — attacked on college campuses, at parks and along main thoroughfares — gave similar descriptions of their attacker.

Ransom was a part-time track coach for several years at Holy Names High School, an all-girls school in Oakland, but was not hired this year, police said.

He was to be arraigned Wednesday on rape and robbery charges, Alameda County District Attorney Tom Orloff said. Ransom has five convictions on charges of burglary, possession of a gun and stolen property.

Burning man festival ends in Nevada desert

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GERLACH, Nev. — The Burning Man has turned to ashes and the thousands who built an irreverent and makeshift city around the 40-foot effigy are gone, too — until next year.

The five-day party where clothing was optional and drugs acceptable culminated on the Nevada desert 125 miles north of Reno late Sunday with the annual torching of a wooden man.

Participants rolled through a mud pit, musicians jammed under tents and artists made offbeat sculptures.

"Think of Burning Man as Disneyland turned inside out," the event's Web site proclaimed. "At Burning Man, you are the fantasy."

Authorities, who clamped down on the event after problems at last year's gathering, praised the behavior of participants. Washoe County Sheriff's Lt. Larry McGee estimated up to 16,000 people attended.

"We didn't have all that many problems considering it was the sixth largest town in Nevada over the weekend," said Marty Scheuerman, fire commander for the event.

Only one arrest was made during the festival held on a private ranch near here. Deputies said a rowdy man with guns was arrested after threatening other participants Saturday night.

Another man was hospitalized with burns when he tried to jump through a bonfire and came up short. Others suffered heat stroke.

"People complain about being so hot because they're wearing clothes, and I'm not wearing any and I'm cool," participant Susie Hallahan said.

McGee said they didn't enforce nudity laws and would have made arrests for open drug use. "But we didn't find anyone dumb enough to stand out in front of us with drugs," he said.

This is the 12th year of the festival that began when artist Larry Harvey built and burned a replica of a man meant to represent his ex-girlfriend's new lover. About 20 people watched on a beach near San Francisco.

It became an annual event, an offbeat alternative to traditional Labor Day celebrations, growing in size each year.

It shifted in 1990 to Nevada's Black Rock Desert with a few hundred attendees. Last year's gathering drew about 10,000 to Pershing County, not far from the latest event.

Excavators remove 300 corpses from Bosnian mass grave

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HRGAR, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Recovery workers descended into a cave Tuesday to carry out corpses — some with socks and shoes dangling off decaying limbs — from one of the largest mass graves yet discovered in Bosnia or neighboring Croatia.

Up to 300 bodies, mostly Muslim war victims, were believed buried in a labyrinthine cave near the northwestern Bosnian village of Hrgar. Bosnian officials began exhuming bodies Monday, and by Tuesday had removed 10 corpses. Some remains still had identification cards.

Ervin Lipovic, a 30-year-old alpine climber working for the excavating team, said trash was mixed in with the bodies, and the stench below ground was horrible. Several barrels of acid also were buried in the cave.

Tens of thousands of people still are listed as missing from the 3 1/2-year Bosnian war. Many are believed to have been slaughtered and dumped into pits.

The U.N. war crimes tribunal has been using evidence gathered from exhumations to build cases against suspects accused of committing atrocities during the Bosnian war and the six-month war in Croatia.

The cave near Hrgar is a moss-filled, 120-foot shaft that splits into several tunnels. Excavators enter the shaft in a large metal basket that slides down a wire connected to an above-ground generator.

Tents and wooden tables have been set up around the shaft, in a patch of forest cleared of trees, for examining the bodies.

"We won't have a real idea of what we are dealing with until all the material is removed," said Joseph Cruz, a human rights field worker who is among U.N. officials monitoring the excavation. "There is no real idea of how far the hole goes down there."

The exhumation will take at least a month, said Adem Jakupovic, a local judge in the Muslim-Croat federation. An American forensic team was expected to help with the exhumation beginning Wednesday, he said.

Local officials first learned of the possibility of mass graves in the area two months ago during a meeting of Bosnian Serb and Muslim officials trying to trace the missing.

Asked for information on missing people believed to have been held in two Serb camps in western Bosnia in 1992, the Serbs said most were dead. They hinted there might be a mass grave with 65 bodies in the area.

It took two months of searching for the Bosnian government team to find the cave, six miles from the nearest road.

Esad Bajramovic, local leader of the state commission for missing persons, said up to 300 bodies were believed to be buried in the cave.

First lady plans to attend Princess Diana's funeral

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EDGARTOWN, Mass. — First lady Hillary Rodham Clinton will attend the funeral of Princess Diana to convey Americans' sorrow for "the terrible loss the entire British public is feeling," a spokesman said Tuesday.

"She will certainly take the condolences of her husband, the president, and we fully expect the American people will believe that she will be passing along the American public's condolences for them," deputy White House press secretary Joe Lockhart told reporters on Martha's Vineyard, where the first family is spending a three-week summer vacation.

Meanwhile in Washington, mourners continued to come to the British Embassy to remember the British princess who was embraced by Americans.

"It feels like I've lost a friend," said Rachel Roa of Washington D.C.

Diana had been a regular visitor to the capital, often dancing at balls and sometimes lobbying and raising money for favorite causes.

"She was larger than life," said Carolyn Zolbe, another Washingtonian. "You can see here that Diana crossed all the lines. She was loved by everybody."

"Queen of Hearts" playing cards decorated scores of handwritten letters and cards on a brick wall outside the embassy gates where rows of flowers stretched toward the grass, now trampled by thousands of people.

Hillary Clinton will arrive in London on Saturday morning and return to the United States immediately after the funeral. Retired Adm. William Crowe, the U.S. ambassador, also will attend.

Clinton's invitation came after extensive cross-Atlantic conversations.

The invitation read: "It is the wish of the Spencer family and the Royal family that Mrs. Hillary Clinton should receive a special invitation because of her close personal association with Diana Princess of Wales."

The first lady and Princess Diana met on several occasions, most recently in June when Diana was in Washington in connection with her campaign to ban land mines.

Two weeks ago, the Clinton administration joined the Oslo conference aiming for a global ban on most land mines.

The decision marked a reversal for the administration, which had earlier favored slower, more laborious 61-nation treaty talks.

"Princess Diana was one of many voices the administration heard on this subject," Lockhart said.

He also said Princess Diana and Clinton shared "a confluence of interests" on a number of issues, among them the lot of the poor, breast cancer, child care and AIDS.

Baptist leader asks for forgiveness at convention

▶INVESTIGATION OF MISAPPROPRIATED FUNDS dropped at national Baptist convention

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — With an investigation against him ended, the president of the nation's largest black church opened the denomination's annual meeting today with a plea for forgiveness.

Hundreds of delegates to the meeting of the National Baptist Convention U.S.A. Inc. gave the Rev. Henry Lyons a standing ovation as he asked for the members' pardon. It came one day after the church board of directors voted to drop the investigation into allegations that Lyons used church funds to buy luxury items for a female aide.

"I've come again to ask you to forgive me for my errors, to forgive me for my mistakes ... to look upon me as your brother," Lyons said Tuesday. "I need to know I am forgiven."

Lyons, a pastor from St. Petersburg, Fla., spoke briefly in opening the annual meeting of the 8.5 million-member church. He is scheduled to give an address Thursday. It was unclear whether the membership would vote on Lyons' status during the meeting.

Late Monday, the 200-member board of directors and 1,000 church leaders approved a motion to drop the matter, said the Rev. E.V. Hill, head of the 18-member Ethics Commission that investigated claims against Lyons.

There were no dissenting votes, Hill said.

Amid cheers and scattered boos, the board said it had found no misappropriation of church funds or any other reason for Lyons to step down.

"We had what we believe was a moving of God," Hill said. "He asked for forgiveness. That's why we're called Christians. We're great forgivers."

Still, the commission recommended that the church hire a full-time executive officer and not allow new bank accounts without approval from its Executive Board.

And Lyons' opponents still hope to oust him during the meeting.

The Rev. John Barfield of Phillippian Baptist Church in Philadelphia, a spokesman for the 350-church Coalition for a Better Convention, promised a "heated floor fight" not only to remove Lyons, but to appoint a Reform Commission for the denomination.

"I'm just about numb. Anger happened a long time ago," Barfield said. "I just can't believe our convention is faced with this kind of cloud hanging over it."

The mechanism for overriding the directors is unclear.

Stressing a theme of forgiveness in song and sermon at the opening of the board's closed-door meeting, one pastor evoked media harassment of Princess Diana in calling for support of Lyons.

"Don't let us destroy him. Don't let us kill him," the pastor said in a prayer that could be heard but not seen by reporters. "Don't let white America tell us how to do your will."

The board met to consider allegations that Lyons used church money to buy expensive jewelry, a Mercedes-Benz and a $700,000 home with a female church employee. The board had already given Lyons a vote of confidence in July.

Lyons, 55, was elected three years ago on a reform slate that promised to open financial records to church members and move it in the politically active direction envisioned by the Rev. Martin Luther King nearly four decades ago.

He started off strong by establishing a close relationship with President Clinton, reducing church debt and helping form an economic development corporation for black churches.

But in July, his wife of 25 years, Deborah, was charged with setting small fires inside the home in Tierra Verde, Fla., that Lyons had bought with Bernice Edwards, a convicted embezzler he hired as the church's corporate relations director. Sheriff's deputies said Deborah Lyons told them she believed her husband was having an affair; Deborah Lyons later denied saying that.

Lyons was then accused of misusing church money to buy real estate, cars and jewelry for Edwards. He has denied having an affair with her or spending church money on personal items, saying Edwards earned the money in commissions by negotiating deals between the church and corporations. He has said his "big mistake" was in holding church money and Edwards' money in the same bank account.

On Sunday night, a contrite Lyons bowed his head and thanked supporters at a packed prayer meeting where speakers praised him for admitting mistakes in his handling of church funds. He denied criminal wrongdoing.

Still, some observers said the church needs to exert greater oversight over spending, including limiting the powers of the presidency.

"I have a strong feeling accountability will be much more in evidence," said Clarence Newsome, dean of Howard University Divinity School. "The leadership of the convention understands it's under the spotlight."

GRIDIRON

So I learned to watch it. Soon, the watching became an obsession. I was fascinated with the mechanics of the game, who was putting up the stats and why the coaches chose to do the things they did.

I wouldn't claim to know everything, but a little research and the right questions can help you keep up in a pigskin conversation, even when your special someone is glued to the television in a football fog with the remote control gripped tightly in hand.

Check out these books to brush up on your football savvy. Becoming a fan doesn't always bring about a career change, but stranger things have happened.

The guide

"The Pro Football Fan's Companion," by Ralph Hickok, Simon & Schuster Macmillan, 1995 — The book begins with a brief history of the game and includes an in-depth glossary of terms like stack defense (Hank Stram's fave in the late '60s), hook and ladder passing and coffin corner kicking. Also, it lists a football's "best and worst moments" section. Some excerpts:

Dumbest thing — The Vikings' Jim Marshall ran a picked-up fumble into the wrong end zone to give the 49ers a safety (Oct. 25, 1964).

Highest score — Redskins over the Giants, 72-41 (Nov. 27, 1966). The Redskins kicked a field goal in the last seconds of the game to break the previous record of 70 points.

AT&T alert — The "Heidi" game, Raiders vs. Jets (Nov. 17, 1968). The Jets were ahead 32-29 when NBC left the game to air the 7 p.m. movie. As the Jets scored two touchdowns in the last 50 seconds, the network's switchboard went down because of the influx of angry fans' calls.

Dick and Jane learn football

"Football Made Simple," by Dave Ominsky and P.J. Harari, First Base Sports, 1994 — This is a more general and illustrated view of rules and regulations, but it lists college rule differences, as well as an explanation of statistical information. It has a shorter glossary, but the back cover boasts the book is a handy size to take to games — I wouldn't do that, but you could if you wanted.

For women, but...

"Men Will Be Boys," by Sally Jenkins, Doubleday, 1996 — Jenkins' book was read by Cowboys coach Barry Switzer, Miami's Jimmy Johnson and NBC's Dick Ebersol, as well as ESPN's Robin Roberts and tennis commentator Mary Carillo. All gave it high praise.

Jenkins worked for Sports Illustrated, ESPN and the Pulitzer Prize-nominated team at The Washington Post. She says 40 million women are football fans, and she takes a humorous look at "Stupid Female Questions That Make Perfect Sense," a "woman's" glossary of terms and a female telecast of a game in the year 2006.

Some of my favorites, sad but amusing:

The Ladies' Draft, p. 34. "Take a group of women ... and tell them to choose sides. This is what we do.

"1) For our first pick, we take our Best Friend.

"2) With our second pick, we choose the Most Popular Girl.

"3) Third, we pick the woman we want for our New Best Friend.

"4) For our fourth pick, we choose the Worst Player because we feel sorry for her.

"5) And with our fifth pick, we do the one thing a guy would never do. We give it away. We turn to our Best Friend and say, 'Who do you want to pick?'"

Football 101, p. 54. "Q: Is there such a thing as the wholeback, and if not, why not?

A: No, because men don't fully commit.

"Q: Will a woman ever play in the NFL?

A: Yes. After the big comet collides with Earth, the world, as we know it, will come to an end, and we will begin all over again as primordial slime, only this time we will evolve into a new genderless species with flippers and gills. When that happens, the Modern Woman can say with some assurance, then a babe will play in the NFL."

VOTES

Barklage said he spoke to several of the voters — conversations not picked up by his camera — and he said that one black woman acknowledged receiving a bottle of whiskey for voting, and that other blacks confirmed they received coupons after casting ballots.

But when The Associated Press went back and made a door-to-door check this week on some of the people shown on the tape, they refused to talk.

"I ain't got nothing to say," one man said before slamming his door.

It's a federal offense punishable by up to two years in prison to "knowingly and willingly pay, offer to pay or accept payment for registering or for voting."

Assistant U.S. Attorney Larry Ferrell, a former Republican county prosecutor who is overseeing the grand jury, said he, too, grew up hearing accounts of old-time vote buying.

Department suspends consolidation of student loans

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A huge backlog in applications has caused the Education Department to quit accepting applications to refinance student loans.

After House Republicans publicized the move, the department confirmed Tuesday that it had taken the action last week.

"The department's action leaves tens of thousands of students and recent college graduates, many of whom are just beginning their careers, unable to consolidate their student loans," said Rep. William Goodling, R-Pa., chairman of the House Education and Workforce Committee.

Refinancing enables borrowers to roll all their previous loans into one, simplifying personal finances and giving more flexibility in repaying the loans. Mortgage lenders commonly demand such refinancing.

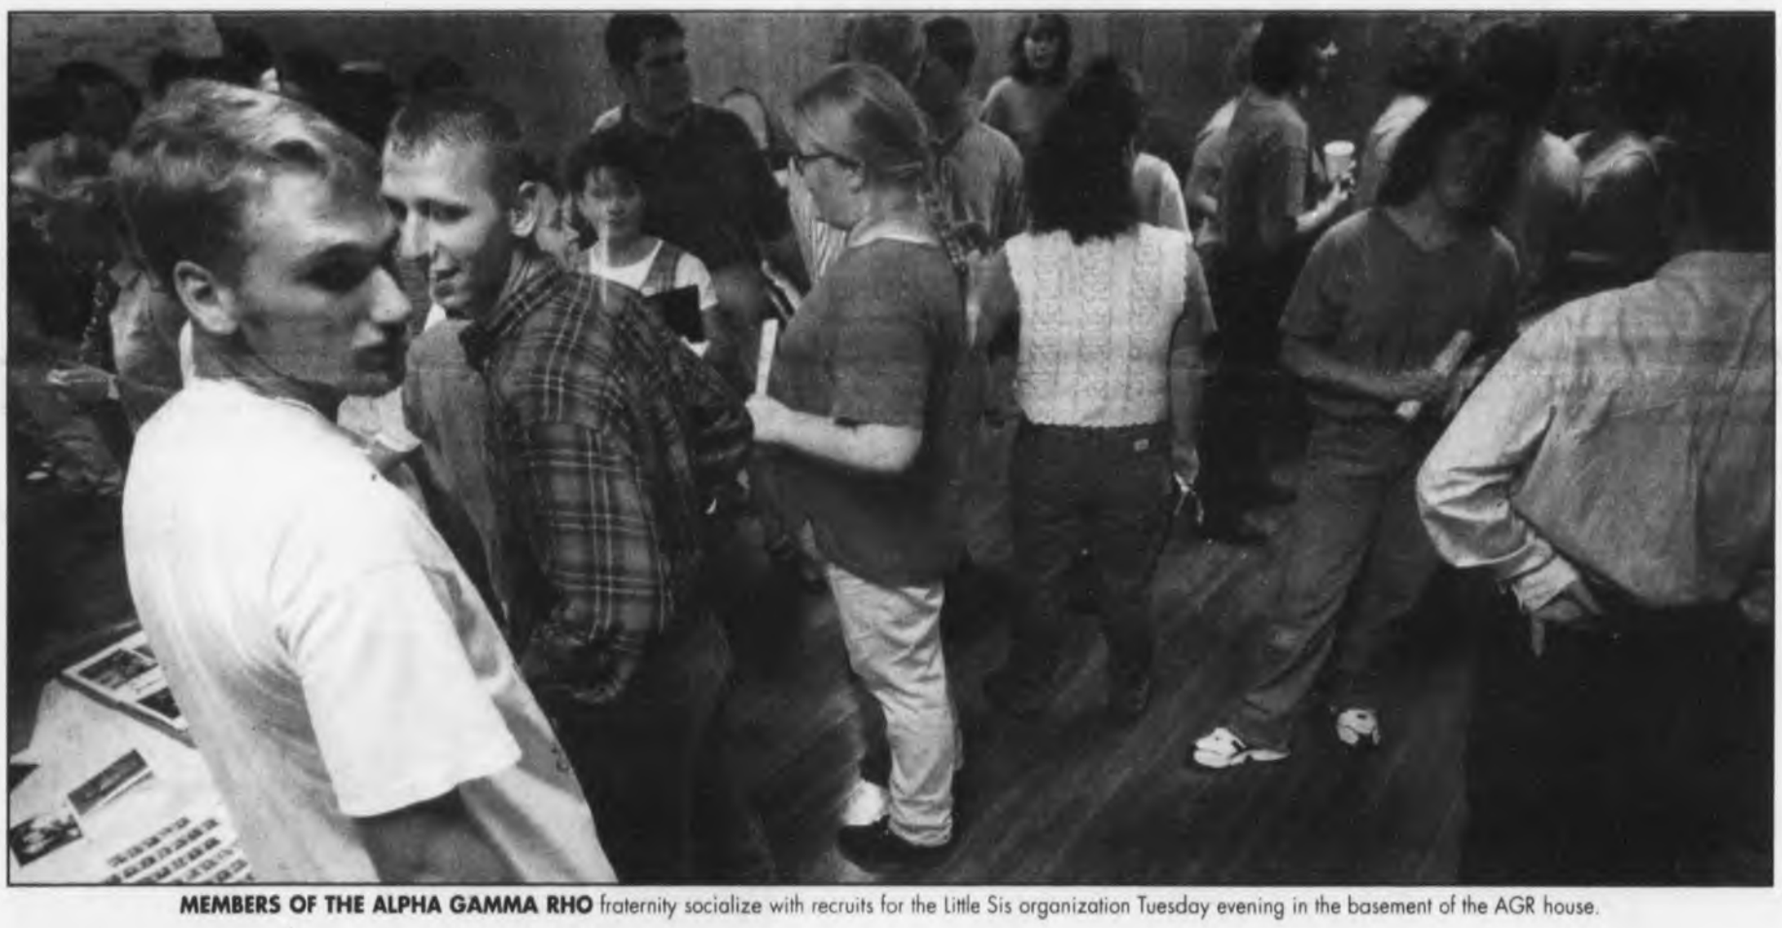
The problem is in the direct lending program, under which the department hands out the money. Under the older guaranteed program, still in existence, the government subsidizes private loans.

The Clinton administration supports putting more money in the direct program on grounds the government can run student aid more efficiently, while congressional Republicans support the guaranteed program.

The department acknowledged in July that its new contractor, Electronic Data Systems, was so overwhelmed that applications for consolidation were being delayed for months. On Tuesday, in an internal memorandum made public, the department said it had suspended applications for the time being.

"We will not accept new applications until we are able to process them in a reasonable amount of time," said Elizabeth M. Hicks, deputy assistant secretary for student financial assistance programs.

Goodling said the backlog amounted to 134,000 applications.



Hicks said in the memorandum that former students with guaranteed loans could still refinance them, then seek to refinance them later under the more favorable terms of the direct program when the backlog clears. Direct loans, however, cannot be consolidated into guaranteed loans.

While greeks compose 20 percent of the campus population, they occupy 65 percent of the leadership responsibilities.

GREEK SYSTEM ENCOURAGES

INVOLVEMENT

The numbers speak for themselves.

Fraternity and sorority members at K-State compose about 20 percent of the undergraduate student population.

They hold 65 percent of all leadership positions on campus.

Student Body President Tim Riemann, a member of Alpha Gamma Rho, knows those statistics are something to be proud of.

"The reason why the percentage is so high at K-State is because K-State is blessed with a great greek system and a great greek adviser," Riemann said.

"At a lot of campuses, greek living doesn't symbolize the professionalism that it does at K-State. Being a greek at Kansas State University isn't as much about partying and other social activities as it is about professionalism, leadership and community service," he said.

Interfraternity Council President Greg Davis, senior in information systems and marketing and a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon, said leadership is an expectation of greek members.

"It's not to just be able to say that you are greek, or that you're living in a greek house. It's getting involved and giving back. You're not just going through life. You're actually out there doing something, whether you're giving back to the community or to Kansas State University," Davis said.

Greek affairs adviser Barb Robel said giving back to the community through service work is comparable to giving back to the university in various leadership positions.

"Every chapter has part of its fundamental principles based in philanthropic endeavors and community service. This is really an extension of that. It's part of the reason for being greek," she said.

The high percentage of greek campus leaders is partly due to K-State's higher greek population, Robel said. Many universities' greek systems make up only eight to 10 percent of the student population, compared with K-State's 20 percent.

Other factors contribute to the higher numbers, as well.

Panhellenic Council President Jennifer Gorman, senior in biology and a member of Alpha Chi Omega, said watching older sorority members helped convince her to make a difference on campus.

"Just being a part of the house and seeing older people assume those leadership positions helps you know more about what the offices entail. You become interested in what they're doing and in their activities. It makes you more aware of what you can get involved in when you see other people doing it," Gorman said.

Observing other members' roles on campus is just one of the many activities that foster involvement. Communication between and within the individual chapters is also a key factor, Robel said.

"The opportunities are more evident and they have more knowledge of opportunities simply because all kinds of announcements can be made to them to say, 'This is coming up. If you're interested, this is what you do.' Someone living in an apartment off campus might not know about those opportunities," she said.

Communication between houses helps greeks get involved, but doesn't give them a big advantage over other students who aren't fraternity or sorority members, Robel said.

"I don't know that it gives greeks an unfair advantage. It simply gives greeks an opportunity to know about leadership positions and involvement opportunities. The same things happen in the residence halls, too," she said.

Information about campus opportunities may reach all students regardless of where they live, but Davis said a big advantage of greek membership is that chapters encourage involvement.

"I don't know of one fraternity or sorority that doesn't try to get their members involved on campus. A thing that the greeks have done more of is not just getting involved but actually stepping up and taking those campus leadership roles.

"We're not blaming any other students on campus for not taking the leadership roles, we're just encouraging our students to get involved," he said.

Whatever factors contribute to the high number of greek leaders at K-State, Riemann said, they are producing results that should continue.

"When you join a greek chapter, you're beginning the greatest learning experience of your life. It's about growth and learning from one another," Riemann said.

"When you're part of a brotherhood or sisterhood, it's also a commitment to individual growth. If that's helping K-State develop leaders, then so be it. Let's keep doing it."

K-State Union employees to keep jobs

▶ FOOD SERVICE EMPLOYEES will remain employed through Union remodeling, other changes.

JOHN HENDERSON
senior staff writer

Just because K-State Student Union food services will be entirely remodeling the Union Stateroom and bringing in new franchise concepts to serve pizza and hamburgers doesn't mean current employees will be looking for work.

Paul Stolle, director of food services, said the maintenance of efficient quality service includes keeping experienced employees on staff. They might not be doing the same jobs, but he said that's always been the case.

"In this day and age, you have to cross-train people," he said. "They'll still have jobs here."

▶ The editorial.
Today's editorial praises the employees in the K-State Student Union food services.
See Page 4.

Union food services is administrated by Chartwell's, a management firm that acts on behalf of the Union to help oversee daily operation, Stolle said. All 25 employees working for food services are Chartwell's employees.

Chartwell's has two different kinds of arrangements with outside companies for food service concepts in the Stateroom. Amigo's serves Mexican food, and Manchu Wok, the newest addition, serves Chinese.

"Amigo's is its own separate entity," Stolle said. "The daily operation, sanitation, procedures, I oversee it. Their products, the way they present, that's their own concept."

The Union receives part of Amigo's sales as a commission and what Stolle calls a cam charge — which pays for utilities, cleaning services and cashiering.

"We, as a Union, just can't have them just come walking in. We have to get something in return," he said.

Manchu Wok has a different setup, he said. Chartwell's pays its company a commission to have it sell food in the Stateroom, and staffs its counter with Chartwell's employees. Amigo's is staffed by its own employees.

"We are the franchisee for Manchu Wok," he said.

Sherwood starts semester as new department head

LESLIE NACHTRAB
staff reporter

The Department of Chemistry started off its semester with a new department head.

Peter Sherwood took over the responsibility in mid-June after a joint announcement was made June 15 by Peter Nicholls, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, and James Coffman, university provost.

Sherwood

"We are delighted to have attracted a scientist of Professor Sherwood's caliber to head the chemistry department, a department which already has achieved high national ranking," Nicholls said.

With the announcement, Sherwood also received the honor of University Distinguished Professor. Joining a group of 15 other faculty members, Sherwood was recognized for making outstanding contributions to teaching, research and service to his profession and community, Coffman said.

"I'm very grateful for the opportunities and recognition I've had at K-State," Sherwood said.

Sherwood's plans as head of the department include strengthening the staff.

"Right now we're working on increasing our faculty to fulfill our teaching mission in the most efficient manner. We have a wonderful faculty, especially a wonderful younger faculty," Sherwood said.

Sherwood graduated from St. Andrews University in Scotland and received his master's and doctoral degrees at Cambridge University in London. Before coming to K-State in 1985, Sherwood had been on the faculty at both Cambridge University and the University of Newcastle upon Tyne.

Sherwood came to K-State because he said he felt he should conduct his research in the United States.

"The United States is the best country in the world to pursue science in, and I felt I could make the best contribution in the U.S.," he said.

Sherwood's specialty is surface chemistry, specifically with understanding corrosion and how to prevent it.

Colorado newspaper prints Ramsey ransom note in full; foreign group may be linked

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — The ransom note for JonBenet Ramsey, published in full Wednesday for the first time, shows the writer purporting to represent "a small foreign faction" and threatening to kill the girl for "any deviation from our instructions."

The text of the 2 1/2-page note was published in The Rocky Mountain News, which said it obtained it from an advance copy of the next issue of Vanity Fair magazine.

▶ Note escapes. Published ransom note claims to represent foreign faction; Patricia Ramsey still being investigated.

The Denver Post, which published excerpts, said it had learned Vanity Fair and The New Yorker were planning articles on the murder case and might have obtained copies of the note's text.

Six-year-old JonBenet's body was discovered in the basement of her home the day after Christmas, eight hours after her mother, Patricia, said she found the note. The little beauty pageant champion, whose father, John, is a millionaire businessman, had been beaten and strangled. Police have made no arrests, and no suspects have been identified.

Based on handwriting analysis, investigators have ruled out Ramsey as a writer of the note, but they have not ruled out Patricia Ramsey.

Published reports have described various aspects of the note, including that it was purportedly from a foreign group and that it asked for $118,000.

The only known copies were in the hands of the Boulder district attorney's office, the police department and the Ramseys' lawyers. They all denied providing the note to Vanity Fair.

"Listen carefully! We are a group of individuals that represent a small foreign faction," the note begins. "We respect your business but not the country that it serves. At this time we have your daughter in our possession. She is safe and unharmed, and if you want her to see 1997, you must follow our instructions to the letter."

The News said that, according to the magazine report, the ransom note instructed John Ramsey, to take an "adequate size attache to the bank" to pick up $118,000. It said he would be called at home between 8 and 10 a.m. and told how to deliver the money. The call never came.

"Any deviation of my instructions will result in the immediate execution of your daughter," the note read. "You will also be denied her remains for proper burial.

"Speaking to anyone about your situation such as police or FBI will result in your daughter being beheaded. If we catch you talking to a stray dog, she dies. If you alert bank authorities, she dies. If the money is in any way marked or tampered with, she dies. You will be scanned for electronic devices and if any are found, she dies."

"You are not the only fat cat around so don't think that killing will be difficult. Don't underestimate us, John. Use that good, southern common sense of yours. It's up to you now, John," the note also read.

The ransom note ended with, "Victory! S.B.T.C." There has been speculation the initials, previously disclosed, could be a reference to the Subic Bay training center in the Philippines, where Ramsey served in the Navy.

In New York, Vanity Fair spokeswoman Beth Kseniak said the magazine has not released the Ramsey article to anyone and doesn't intend to any time soon, certainly not in the next week.

She said editors there are mystified as to how the Denver papers got what they got and speculated that the papers obtained only the note, not the whole magazine article.

The New Yorker said its article is still several weeks away from publication.

Photographer describes scene at Diana's accident

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — Emergency lights swirled in the Pont d'Alma tunnel as police and ambulance crews swarmed around Princess Diana's limousine. Dodi Fayed's body lay on the pavement; the princess was still trapped in the car. Police pushed back photographers, cameras flashing everywhere.

A news photographer arrested at the scene painted a chaotic picture Wednesday of the minutes after the accident that killed Diana, her companion and their chauffeur. At the time, he said, rescuers didn't yet know who was in the car.

Jacques Langevin said he was not among the photographers who chased Diana's car on motorcycles that fateful night. He said he had taken photos of the princess at the Ritz Hotel hours earlier, then arrived at the tunnel only by chance shortly after the accident.

Police seized him nonetheless, and he is now among the photographers under investigation on manslaughter charges.

An experienced news photographer who has covered fighting in Beirut and tanks in Beijing's Tiananmen Square, Langevin was upset Wednesday by allegations he bore any responsibility for Diana's death.

Langevin, who worked for The Associated Press from 1978 to 1984, spoke a day after his release from police custody. He was freed Tuesday on his own recognizance after being placed under formal investigation — a step short of being charged.

Langevin said he was visiting friends when his employer, the Sygma photo agency, called and asked him to try to get pictures of Diana and Fayed, who

Retail company to refund customers, Stovall says

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Dozens of Kansans could receive thousands of dollars in refunds because of an agreement Sears, Roebuck and Co. has signed with state attorneys general.

Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall announced the agreement Wednesday. The attorneys general accused the retail company of pressuring bankrupt consumers to repay debts, even though the debts had been discharged by bankruptcy courts.

Between January 1992 and April 1997, Sears convinced thousands of consumers to sign "reaffirmation agreements" by threatening to repossess items they bought on credit, the attorneys general said. Sears also was accused of not filing the documents with bankruptcy courts, circumventing the courts' review.

Stovall said her office so far has identified 344 reaffirmation agreements involving Kansans, but she expects more to be identified. She said Kansans could receive $500,000 in benefits, either as refunds or forgiven debts.

She also said her office will receive about $82,000 to cover the expenses of its investigation.

Nationally, Sears has agreed to forgive up to $125 million in debts, make another $125,000 in refunds and pay states $35 million. About 146,000 consumers will be affected by the agreement.

Stovall said consumers who believe they are eligible for refunds or having debts forgiven should call a telephone hot line at (800) 529-4500.

Food services shows insight, commitment by keeping employees

While the Union Stateroom is becoming more corporate in its appearance, food services has done the right thing by keeping its employees despite the addition of new franchises.

It's fairly common practice for businesses in a transitional phase to lay off employees and train new ones.

Food services has shown its commitment to its employees and its clients by electing to keep experienced employees on staff for cross-training.

For the Stateroom, keeping the present employees has several benefits. They are relying on workers who have already proven their worth and skill. These people know what they are doing, which is nice when lines are long and patience wears thin.

For the students and faculty who use the Stateroom, the benefits are also numerous. Aside from the familiar faces and smiles of food services employees, customers will have a sense of security about the new additions to the Stateroom. Regular clients will continue to be recognized and greeted by name — a human touch that is sadly missing from the majority of the food service industry.

But the real winners are the employees of food services. All of the hard work they have done is being rewarded. All of the kindness and thoughtfulness they have administered is being recognized.

Chartwell's, the management firm that helps oversee the daily operation of Union food services, deserves a lot of the credit for its progressive management style. Paul Stole, director of food services, was also important in the maintenance of experienced employees.

It's a situation in which all sides win. Union food services was lucky to realize what it had before it was gone.

WHY CAN'T WE ALL JUST SHARE?

Solving parking problems could be as easy as learning from our children

MEMORANDUM
To: Ace Abbott, director of Parking Services
From: A concerned citizen

I have a proposal, Mr. Abbott, which I believe might assist us all in these trying, space-scarce times. Make people share.

Sir, I have two children and am constantly trying to convince them that sharing is a much better way to play; that things are more fun with more than one person; that two kids can play with one Beetleborg.

A few days ago, while circling the parking lots with the other parking sharks, looking for a place to stow my 1986 Chevy Caprice Classic Divorcemobile, I realized that we have forgotten some of the simple truths that we learned as children. I realized how to eliminate a great number of the cars needing space on our campus. Ask people to share rides and give them an incentive to do so — free parking.

Now I understand, Mr. Abbott, that no one has seen free parking on this campus, outside of a Monopoly game, in recent memory, but let me explain how this could work.

First, it would be necessary to designate a number of parking spaces — the more centrally located the better — as car pool only spaces.

Second, a group of three or more students would be required to register their cars with one permit. The permit would be free, as an incentive to get students to buddy up. However, those students would not be permitted to purchase another single-parking permit, preventing people from registering twice to help a friend park for free.

Third, and this is important, do not disburse more permits than you have spaces. This makes the option even juicier for the students who choose it, giving them what amounts to a reserved parking space every day.

This system would work very well for the majority of students who live off campus, as most of their living situations involve sharing housing. Fraternities, sororities and apartment complexes would lend themselves very nicely to the car pool plan.

I expect people might have several concerns about this plan, one being that they don't have class at the same time as others.

Most students generally have classes between about 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m., so I'm sure that there is some way these things can be worked out. After all, there are quite a few students on this campus. If we could get 300 of them to use 100 parking spaces, well, we're just that much more efficient, aren't we?

(By the way, Mr. Abbott, do you realize that of the 18,447 students registered at K-State last spring, 15,497 lived off campus and had to fight for 1,125 student parking spaces? I'm sure, actually, that you knew that.)

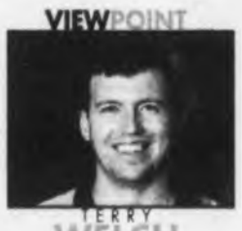
May I also suggest, sir, that this would also benefit the region by reducing the amount of automobile emissions in our atmosphere?

I'm not what you would call an environmentalist, but my grandfather was a conservationist and often pointed out to me that birds leave their nests in order to relieve their bodily urges. Those were not his exact words, but you get the point.

I looked for some hard data on what kind of a benefit the loss of 200 cars would provide our local environment and couldn't find any, but I can tell you that even the loss of one car can help.

Take, for example, the Divorcemobile. This car not only belches fumes and thumps louder than a Rage Against the Machine concert, it's also a source of visual pollution. (Its weather-beaten hue can only be described as appaloosa.) I'm sure many a student transfer can be directly attributed to a Divorcemobile sighting.

If that's not enough to convince you, Mr. Abbott, consider the following: According to Science News magazine, toxicologists are now discovering that pollution is causing a new threat to life on the planet, known as endocrine blockers.



Invading your endocrine glands — pituitary, thyroid and others — they have the ability to click genes on and off inappropriately. For example, some male animals exposed to these toxicants have matured into creatures that look and act like females (this could explain Dennis Rodman).

So, in closing, Mr. Abbott, we could help K-State by designing a car pool system. If you won't do it for me, if you won't do it for the students, for the love of Pete, do it for your endocrines!

Love,

Terry

Salvation SIN God Repentance

THE ONLY WAY TO SALVATION IS THROUGH REPENTANCE

Imagine some people have committed a sin. Say they said a bad word or even acted immorally. How would they feel when they realized they have wronged someone or even taken other people's rights away from them?

The word sin according to Webster's Dictionary is defined as "1a : an offense against religious or moral law; b: an action that is or is felt to be highly reprehensible. e.g. it's a sin to waste food. c: an often serious shortcoming: fault. 2a: transgression of the law of God. b: a vitiated state of human nature in which the self is estranged from God."

If any of you believe in this notion called sin, then you truly believe in the existence of God. If you feel guilt by doing something wrong, even if it is a minute action, then you have realized you have committed a sin and transgressed the boundaries set by your God.

So what does this imprudent deviation from a code of behavior lead a person to? Because there is no way out of this torment, guilt guides these people to suicide or to making impulsive decisions without any comprehension.

This is not the way. Truly, to some this might be the only solution. But if you are seriously considering any of the above options, I sincerely advise you to talk to your doctor or even a friend. It is a sin to take your life. Your life is valuable.

If there is indeed a God, then where does his role fit to abolish this sin? First, you should acknowledge him. Acknowledge his oneness with no partners. Acknowledge his supremeness and his greatness. Realize he is merciful and compassionate. Appreciate that he is the creator of all things that exist. Give him his right.

Second, God has supplied humanity with minds. These minds were given in order to distinguish between right and wrong using intellect.

God has also given the innate sense called instinct, which also may be called a state of purity. This instinct is a small voice inside each one of us that tells us, "This isn't right." Humanity is created by God and destined for heaven unless it chose to disobey him and refuse his mercy.

God can very easily and gracefully forgive the sin of all of humanity, no matter if the sin were to fill the lofty regions of the sky. This matter would be considered trivial for him because he has already done much more than that such as creating everything that we can ever see, hear or imagine.

He lives to bestow his mercy and forgiveness on his creation and rewards the most trivial acts with the most immense rewards.

When someone does a bad action for the first time, one has to fight mightily in order to overcome the instinct that tells him that this action is wrong.

Similarly, all people are born with the instinct that God is one. When people fight their instincts, they end up worshipping fire, stones, statues, multiple gods and other things. It is forced upon them in spite of their instinct as they grow up.

Third, understand that through his greatness, God can forgive. This is provided you are sincere. No matter how many times you realize that you have erred, your God is merciful enough to pardon your sins.

Your God has no grudge against anyone. He is not cruel. He is just and wise. He lets people decide their fate those who realize him and those who don't.

This is the concept of sin, my fellow students, and it is what my religion of Islam represents. It is what 1.3 billion people of this world believe wholeheartedly. Islam means submission to this God.

In Islam, if people seek repentance, then they should ask for it. The salvation in the hereafter is dependent on repentance to God. According to the Koran, God has said, "and turn you all together in repentance to Allah O' Believers that you may be successful" An-Noor (24):31.

Also in the Koran, God says, "Surely Allah loves those who turn unto him in repentance and loves those who purify themselves" Baqarah 222. This shows how pleasing our repenting is to God. People should try to imagine the joy if they were able to suddenly retrieve everything they ever possessed after losing all hope of recovering what they had lost.

Then one should think that God's delight is even greater than this when his slave repents to him. So much so, that if people stopped repenting to God, he would replace humanity with another creation that would turn to him for forgiveness. Repentance is such a great act of worship that doing it can totally erase sins altogether — if done the proper way.

Column arguments trucking viewed as misleading

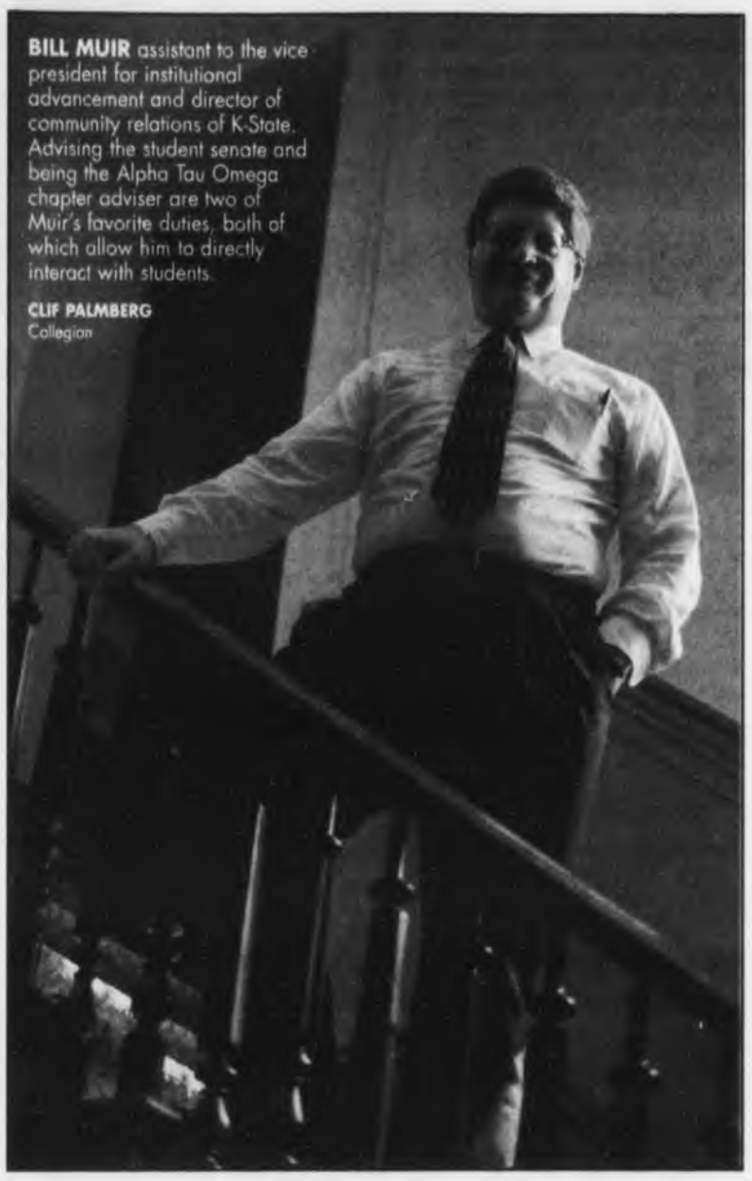
Editor,

In regard to Jonathan Winkler's column on Sept. 2 concerning "Road Wars," there are many "facts" that can be disputed. My brother and I are current and former drivers, and we find this column to be grossly negligent, misleading and lacking professionalism.

In the personal case identified by Winkler, he should accept part, if not all, of the blame for the near-accident in New York. By openly admitting to breaking the law by speeding and failing to allow another vehicle to safely pass, he is to blame as well. Regardless of the other driver's actions, defensive driving is required at all times. The roadways of America belong to no individual.

Concerning the deregulation of the trucking industry, several statements are false. The gross vehicle weight currently stands between 80,000 and 86,000 pounds, depending on the state requirements, not the 60,000 pounds that was stated in the column. Also, double and triple trailer combinations are already allowed in most Western states and have been for years.

The shipping lines also regulate themselves using engine governors and satellite tracking devices (Qualcom) to monitor truck activities. The Schneider line trucks that Winkler is so fond of are governed at 65 mph. Similarly, J.B. Hunt trucks are governed at 58 mph and England is governed at 65 mph.



Truck drivers are, for the most part, the safest individuals on the nation's highways. Granted, there are isolated cases of recklessness, but by factoring in the number of miles traveled per year by trucks, these are rare occurrences.

Serving university keeps K-State graduate busy

MATT KREPS
staff writer

Bill Muir describes himself as a jack of all trades and master of none.

Muir is the assistant to the vice president for institutional advancement and director of community relations at K-State. This means he covers much ground in his work.

The vice president's office is responsible for a wide variety of issues that help put K-State in the news. Muir describes his work as a kind of symbiosis with Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

Basically, anything that Krause is involved in, Muir works on too. In addition, he is also responsible for university relations with city and county governments and is involved in other organizations.

"The university was always something I considered home," he said.

Muir graduated from K-State in 1970 with a degree in business administration. He worked on an unsuccessful Republican governor's campaign and ended up as a doorkeeper for the House of Representatives. This was the beginning of 16 years in Topeka serving Kansas government.

Muir was paid $6.50 per day and had to live with his father in Topeka, but he was meeting people.

"That was my 'in touch with reality and humility' time," Muir said.

One of the most important people he met was Rep. John Carlin, who later ran for governor and won. Muir was appointed assistant to the governor and then appointed controller of the governor of Kansas and statewide emergency coordinator.

Muir was also appointed secretary of the cabinet for Carlin's administration.

Even though his work was in Topeka, he still came back to Manhattan on the weekends.

"That's probably because at the time, Topeka was a pretty boring place to be around," Muir said.

After eight years and four days, Carlin's time in office ended and Muir left Topeka to return to Manhattan. He said Topeka was good training, but not his true calling.

"The university is more the place of education and doing something for 18- to 22-year-olds, and that's what I like about what I'm doing now," Muir said

Muir took a job economic development for the KSU Foundation in February 1987. Since then, he has been busy serving the students and being involved in a job he loves. He moved into his current position as assistant to the vice president in 1990.

Over the years, Muir has helped K-State grow and improve. He works with the city to use $500,000 collected from sales tax on university commerce to make improvements that benefit the Thai toddler, two others survive fiery Vietnam Airlines crash

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia — A Thai toddler and two others survived when a Vietnam Airlines plane carrying 66 people crashed Wednesday on approach to Phnom Penh's airport, skidding through a dry rice paddy before exploding.

Relatives expecting loved ones on the flight from Ho Chi Minh City rushed to the site. A Cambodian man surveying the carnage wept, saying "My brother! My brother's supposed to be here."

The Soviet-built Tupolev 134 crashed during a rainstorm. The cause is under investigation.

Cambodian leader Hun Sen said the dead included 22 Taiwanese, 21 South Koreans, eight Chinese, four Cambodians, two Vietnamese, one Japanese, one Australian and one "European." The nationalities of the rest were unknown.

The Thai boy, 1-year-old Chanayuth Nim-Anong, survived the crash with a broken leg and was hospitalized in stable condition. His mother, a Chinese national, died in the crash.

The boy's father, Niphon Nim-Anong, 40, a businessman from the Thai coastal resort of Pattaya, was awaiting the flight when the plane crashed and exploded. He rushed to the site.

"There were so many people, and I saw someone carrying my boy," Niphon told the Associated Press. "I saw it was my son and brought him to the hospital."

Hun Sen said two other survivors also were hospitalized, but further information was not available.

Hun Sen visited the capital's main hospital, Calmette, while 49 bodies covered with white sheets were unloaded from trucks. Workers were to recover the rest of the bodies Thursday, which was declared a national day of mourning.

"It's big tragedy, an accident," Hun Sen said, saying that the crash was caused by weather and "not by terrorists."

The Tupolev 134 was approaching the Pochentong International Airport runway from the east at about 2,000 feet when the control tower ordered the pilot to attempt an approach from the west.

Tith Chantha, chief of the control tower, said the crew lost communication with the tower and three minutes later the plane was diving into palm trees. It leveled trees and bamboo stands, killed a tethered cow and slid 200 yards in a dry rice paddy before exploding and skidding to a fiery stop.

Rescue workers pulled bodies from the flames, which burned for more than an hour. Rain flooded the narrow dirt road into the site, delaying fire trucks.

NIU coach gives Huskies' look into upcoming game

SUN DEE MILLS
sports editor

Northern Illinois' Huskies have met five Big 12 teams and hold their best record (2-2) in the conference against the Wildcats.

However, this record doesn't overshadow the fact that the Cats are now a top-25 powerhouse, heavily favored in this meeting with Huskies coach Joe Novak and his young squad.

"Bill Snyder has done a tremendous job turning around a program that most people thought was dead and buried," Novak said. "The last three or four years, Kansas State has been a national story — on a par with Gary Barnett at Northwestern."

Ranked No. 111 and 112 in three sports magazines, Novak's team lists 32 freshmen and sophomores on the depth chart. After a 44-10 loss to Central Michigan last Thursday, Novak said he had one simple goal.

"Our objective this week is to improve," Novak said.

Twelve of Novak's players are true freshmen, including No. 1 quarterback Frisman Jackson and several running backs. Novak said Jackson is the talk of the team, but had some problems last week with the Chippewas that stemmed from his lack of experience.

"Frisman needs to settle down," Novak said. "He had happy feet at Central Michigan. We had some people open, and we didn't get them the ball. That's inexperience. He's our future right now."

Novak, (1-12) who is entering his second season with the Huskies, is experiencing the growing pains Cat coach Bill Snyder did when he came to K-State in 1989.

Snyder said the Huskies' low ranking was nothing to sneeze at, and he was speaking from experience.

"We've been ranked dead last in the world," Snyder said. "It's not something we would make light of, by any stretch of the imagination."

This weekend's game is the Cats' first season opener on the road since Snyder began in 1989.

The Cats lost that contest with Arizona State, 31-0, and Novak only hopes the home field will work to the Huskies' advantage.

"It's an opportunity to make a statement for ourselves," Novak said. "It's our home opener. It'll probably be sold out, and we're playing Kansas State, which has a really good team."

The Cats have not lost an opening match-up in the '90s and are anxious to get onto the field vs. anybody but themselves. Novak knows the Cats' emotional status, because his team showed it in its opener at Central Michigan last week.

"We made mistakes, and we're not good enough to overcome them yet," Novak said. "But I thought 98 percent of our kids competed hard, and that's what we ask of them."

With all the pent-up energy the Cats will likely exhibit, Novak said he knows it will take a lot to pull off an upset.

"For us to win, we have to do a lot of things right," Novak said. "Kansas State needs to make mistakes, and they have to come out unemotional. But that's probably not going to happen."

Snyder said he could see some comparisons to his team nine years ago.

"They're 1-10, we were 1-10," Snyder said. "We were there, but we've overcome that. It's important for us to take care of Kansas State."

Funny, that's exactly what Novak said.

"Kansas State is an awfully good football team and one of the best that's ever played in Huskie Stadium," Novak said. "I'm not trying to sound corny, but right now I'm more concerned about us than them."

New coaches bring championship rowing experience to women's team

JOEL WHITE
staff writer

Championship experience, recruiting ability and training expertise.

That's what new assistant women's rowing coaches Collette Crenshaw and Ellen Minzner bring to K-State.

Both Crenshaw and Minzner have distinguished careers in rowing.

From 1995 to 1996, Crenshaw was a graduate assistant at Smith College, where she received her master's in exercise and sports science. There, her varsity lightweight-four crew took first place at the Eastern Sprints and the Head of the Fish.

A co-captain on the K-State crew, Kathy Gaitros, said she has been impressed with Crenshaw.

"She's really strong and a great leader," Gaitros said. "I think she'll bring a lot to K-State rowing."

Before her tenure at Smith College, Crenshaw was the head novice coach at Mount Holyoke College.

Crenshaw has spent the past two years as the men's varsity rowing coach at Amherst College.

Crenshaw's counterpart, Minzner, has excelled as both a rower and a coach.

"I have won the world championships the last two years in a row, in '95 and '96," Minzner said.

Minzner was the lightweight pairs gold medalist at the 1995 Championships in Finland and the 1996 Championships in Scotland.

In addition to her own rowing career, Minzner has coached on the collegiate level for the past seven years.

"I was the head rowing coach at the Winsor School, which is a girl's prep school back in Boston," Minzner said.

In 1990, Minzner coached at Wellesley College, where her crew won a New England Championship in the coxed eights.

Now that Crenshaw and Minzner are at K-State, they have a new task at hand.

"I want to help build a Division I program," Crenshaw said.

Although the Midwest has little reputation in rowing, the new coaches aren't discouraged.

"I think part of loving the sport of rowing is bringing it to people who don't know anything about it," Minzner said.

"This is the fastest growing women's sport," Crenshaw said. "With the Olympics, people are seeing what rowing is all about."

Head coach Jenny Hale also said she is optimistic about the future of rowing, especially in Kansas.

"Getting the sport identified by the NCAA as an emerging women's sport really put us on the fast track growth-wise," Hale said. "It's definitely moving from a regional to a national sport."

Since both new coaches have coaching roots on the East Coast, recruiting experienced rowers will be made easier for K-State's program.

"I think they'll have a huge impact on our recruiting ability," Hale said. "Ellen and Collette have some connections on the East Coast, where there's quite a bit of high school rowing. We'll get into those areas and have a little bit of pull."

With added expertise of the rowing technique and training methods along with the improved recruiting, Crenshaw said she is expecting K-State rowing to improve.

"I think we have the chance to become one of the fastest crews in the Midwest," Crenshaw said.

Maggie Robertson, sophomore in history and second-year rower, said Crenshaw and Minzner are great assets to the program.

"Their history as rowers and coaches will help us get better because they know how it's done," Robertson said.

"TO SAY THAT WE'VE HAD ANY REST WHATSOEVER AND WE AREN'T TIRED ISN'T TRUE."

Wildcats defeat Mavericks in home opener

SAM FELSENFELD
staff reporter

The K-State volleyball team's first home game of the year Wednesday night at Ahearn Field House was filled with news.

New season, new coach, new team and new student body cheering on the Wildcats.

There was even a new mascot, as the new Willie the Wildcat made its game-day debut.

But it was the same old story for the Cats.

K-State, which finished 26-9 last season and advanced to the second round of the NCAA Tournament, easily defeated the Texas-Arlington Mavericks in three games, 15-7, 15-4, 15-8.

The Cats continued their home dominance, winning for the 22nd time in their past 28 home matches.

However, despite the winning trend, they're trying to come up with a new story.

"We're not last year's team, and we don't want to be last year's team," senior setter Devon Ryning said. "We're this year's team."

The Cats started off slowly, falling behind 6-1 in the first game, likely a result of jet lag.

On Tuesday, the Cats returned from a six-day trip to Hawaii, where they opened the season by winning two out of three matches in the Aston Wahine Volleyball Challenge in Honolulu.

"To say that we've had any rest whatsoever and we aren't tired isn't true," Ryning said.

After quickly falling behind against the Mavericks, K-State called a timeout, regrouped, and went on a 14-1 run to close the game and take control of the match.

"We were challenged mentally, because we were tired," Cat coach Jim McLaughlin said. "We had to show emotion."

The Cats maintained their momentum in the second game, jumping to a 5-0 lead before taking the game, 15-4. K-State struggled again early in the third match and found itself trailing again, 3-1.

But the Cats put together a run of seven consecutive points on the way to finishing off the match with the Mavericks, 15-8.

Ryning led K-State with 39 assists, and the Cats also received help from some of the younger players.

Sophomore outside hitter and middle blocker Dawn Cady continued to step up for K-State, posting a match-high 15 kills, giving her 68 through the first four matches of 1997. In all of 1996, she had 38. She also had a team-high 17 digs.

Freshman middle blocker Kelle Branting had the highest kill percentage for the Cats, converting eight kills out of 15 attacks for a .533 mark.

The contributions from the younger players pleased McLaughlin.

"Everyone's got to contribute," McLaughlin said, "because we lost three pretty good vets from last year."

With the win, K-State improved to 3-1 on the season. The Cats, ranked No. 27 in the nation, suffered their only loss to No. 11 Hawaii on Sunday in Honolulu.

It was the third match of the season for each team, and they had common opponents — Illinois State and San Francisco — in their first two matches. Statistically, the Cats played their opponents tougher.

However, K-State fell in three games to the Rainbows.

"We didn't play bad," junior middle blocker Val Wieck said. "They just played at the top of their game. We expected them to come out and play like they did against Illinois State and San Francisco."

K-State's next match is Wednesday at home against intrastate-rival Wichita State. Aside from catching up on sleep, the Cats plan on working to improve their game and being ready to compete in the Big 12 Conference opener against Colorado on Sept. 26.

"Until we make our opponents earn everything, we'll be a middle-of-the-road team," McLaughlin said. "We have an opportunity to be a really strong team. But we have to earn that."

Columnist's run-in with Michael Jordan will have long-term, far-reaching effects

CRESTON KUENZI

CRESTON KUENZI is a junior in computer engineering. You can send e-mail comments to Creston at creston@ksu.edu.

I just had an unworldly experience Labor Day weekend.

I'm talking about the kind of thing that changes a person's life forever. Something that makes you want to sell all of your possessions, move to some obscure country and devote the rest of your life to helping others.

Ironically, this divine experience occurred in "the evil capital of the world," Las Vegas. At least, that's what I call it.

Let me explain.

It was 3 a.m., and a friend and I were just about to wrap up a long night's work of losing money at the blackjack table when I heard a commotion behind me.

Something told me to pick up my few remaining chips and walk toward the source of the hubbub. It was as if an invisible force was guiding me by the hand to the entrance of a secluded section of the casino.

That's when I saw it.

At first, I thought it was a vision induced by the wide array of complimentary beverages supplied to me over the course of the night at the various casinos.

I shook my head a couple of times, rubbed my bloodshot eyes and looked again.

It was still there.

No, it wasn't an angel, or a ghost, or even Jenny McCarthy who, by the way, was rumored to be in town for the weekend.

The vision I beheld sitting at the head of a poker table was none other than Michael Jordan.

OK, so maybe it didn't happen quite so dramatically. Actually, the dealer told me that M.J. had reserved a section of the casino and was gambling with some of his friends in the back. That's when I decided to sneak a peek.

Nevertheless, I gambled for the next 30 minutes, a mere 20 yards from the greatest basketball player — no, make that the greatest athlete — ever to walk on the face of the earth.

Don't get me wrong.

I'm not normally the type of guy who drools over athletes and other celebrities. After all, they're just people like us that have to put on their pants one leg at a time. In fact, I passed the boxer James "Buster" Douglas in another casino the next day, and I didn't think it was too big of a deal.

For some reason, though, I get the feeling that Jordan can slide his pants on both legs at the same time, while doing a 360 dunk from the free-throw line.

Maybe I'm making too big of a deal out of seeing Jordan.

Except for the whole $36 million contract thing, he is just a person like any other.

It could be that he's just a great basketball player turned worldwide celebrity by the help of clever marketing and opportune circumstances.

I believe he's more than that, however. Several people in the casino were mesmerized, just like I was, at the sight of Jordan. He simply has a profound effect on people.

I know I'll never forget last weekend as long as I live, and I'll probably be telling my grandchildren about it 50 years from now.

Of course, by that time, the story will probably be a little exaggerated.

It'll go something like, " ... and then Jordan invited me over to play poker with him and his friends. He was pretty impressed with me after I won $100,000 from him, so he asked me to be his new agent. After graciously turning down his offer, Jenny McCarthy and I went for coffee..."

Well, maybe that would be taking it a little too far.

Baby dies from dehydration while mom plays video poker

COLUMBIA, S.C. — A 10-day-old baby, who died when her mother left her in a car in 90-degree heat while she played video poker, was probably dead for several hours before she was found, a newspaper reported today.

An autopsy indicated Joy Baker died at 4 p.m. Friday, The Beaufort Gazette reported. That was two hours after police say she was left in the car at a South Carolina casino by her mother, Sgt. Gail Baker. Baker didn't realize anything was wrong until after she drove home late in the evening.

"Joy was my pride and joy," Baker, 26, told police after her arrest Sunday. "I never meant to hurt her in no way. It was just pure negligence on my part."

Baker, stationed at Hunter Army Airfield in Savannah, Ga., was being held without bond at the Beaufort County Detention Center, Jasper County Sheriff Maj. Roy Hughes said Tuesday.

Joy was in the car at State Line Casino, about a mile outside Savannah, from about 2 p.m. until 9:30 p.m. Friday with the windows rolled up, Hughes said.

A pathologist from Candler General Hospital in Savannah said the baby died from dehydration as temperatures rose into the mid-90s, Hughes said.

Officials from Georgia began the investigation, but Jasper County, S.C., officials were called as the baby is presumed to have died on their side of the state line.

Once she arrived home and noticed Joy was not breathing, Baker called for help, police said.

"I never went to the car to check on her," Baker told police. "I just went to the door of the casino. I thought she would be OK."

Homicide by child abuse carries a maximum penalty of life in prison.

19-year-old man arrested Tuesday in aggravated robbery

A 19-year-old Manhattan man was arrested in a case of aggravated robbery and aggravated battery early this week.

A Riley County Police Department press release said that late Tuesday morning Manhattan resident Melissa Ann Hargis appeared at RCPD, reporting she had been robbed.

The police arrested Matthew R. Muse at his residence where the alleged incident occurred, 530 Pierre St., Apt. 1. Bond was set at $7,500. According to RCPD, he remains confined and has not posted bond.

During the incident, Hargis was shot with a BB gun and received treatment. She was released from Mercy Health Center on College Avenue. Cash was also taken during the incident.

Hargis was unavailable for comment.

Because it was after 5 p.m. when this article was written, the Registrar's Office was closed. It was therefore unknown at the time of publication if the individuals involved in the incident were K-State students.

UNION

A similar setup is in store for Sbarro, which will arrive in early October and set up shop in Union Station to sell pizza and Italian food. Stolle said he will hire its manager, but it will have its own inventory, cashiers and food preparation area. It will be the only place in the Union to sell Italian fast food.

"When Sbarro comes in, I can't do pizza in the Stateroom any longer," he said.

There won't be any more concepts in the Union this year, Stolle said, though a national hamburger chain will move in at some point.

"I don't know if it's going to be a McDonald's or a Burger King or a Hardee's, or a Wendy's," he said.

The Union is undergoing a renovation project, and food services has the most to change, he said. At one point, the Union considered shutting the entire Stateroom operation down and moving it all upstairs, but Stolle said it wisely decided against that.

"Well, what would you do if you had to walk up two flights of steps to go to lunch?" he said. "We didn't want to risk the chance of losing our customers that way. That's why the Stateroom will be open during the building process."

There is always a concern about the amount of labor a business can pay for, Stolle said, and if customers don't come, then Chartwell's will have to cut back. That's always been true, he said.

"Our catering operation is continuing to expand," he said. "We'll need more people for that."

In fact, nearly two-thirds of food services' $2.25 million budget covers catering, Stolle said. The Bluemont Room, the restaurant on the second floor of the Union serviced by catering, serves about 80 customers per day, he said.

"That's low," he said. "We expect more than 100 per day."

The Union also caters off campus, such as weddings and gatherings at professors' houses, he said. The only negative side to that is the liquor policy of the Kansas Board of Regents, which prevents the Union from catering alcohol off campus.

But the new concepts like Amigo's and Sbarro are the reason the student body has been making money lately on campus operations, Stolle said. All of those will need to be staffed by Union employees.

There will definitely be jobs in the Union, Stolle said.

trucks.

At least three people — two men and a 4-year-old boy — survived the initial crash, but died later from their injuries.

Khieu Kanharith, the secretary of state for information, said Cambodia would seek investigative help from foreign technical experts.

Photographer David Longstreath, waiting at the airport to catch a flight, said he heard a plane on approach and then the rev of engines trying to regain altitude.

"There was a red ball of fire followed by a huge plume of black smoke," Longstreath said.

Bodies from the crash were strewn around the fire-blackened wreckage. Looting began almost immediately, Longstreath said. Bodies scattered, and hundreds of people rushed to the area a half-mile south of the runway — to pick the pockets of the dead, steal luggage or make off with pieces of wreckage.

were having dinner at the Ritz.

Since Langevin was on call that weekend, he hurried across town to the luxury hotel.

A group of photographers had already gathered at the hotel's two main exits by the time he arrived.

> "The car took off very fast. My car was up the road. There was no way mine could keep up, so I knew it was finished for me."
> • Jacques Langevin, photojournalist

One van took off, apparently to try to trick the waiting photographers, and another driver came out, Langevin said.

"He was laughing a lot. A lot of photographers said he wasn't his usual self," Langevin said.

When Diana emerged from the hotel, Langevin said he took four or five pictures of her before she got into a black Mercedes.

"The car took off very fast. My car was up the road. There was no way mine could keep up, so I knew it was finished for me," Langevin said.

Langevin said some photographers at the Ritz went after Diana on motorcycles and some of them did not act professionally.

"There were photographers who did follow them, and there were those who did not behave properly," he said. He would not elaborate.

He then got into his car and decided to return to his friend's house near the Eiffel Tower, taking the same main route that Diana's car had roared down a few minutes earlier.

Traffic was stopped when he got to the tunnel at the Pont de l'Alma.

"I saw lights in the tunnel. I parked and thought there was probably a car accident," Langevin said.

"I met some of the same colleagues I had seen before. I didn't make the connection immediately," Langevin said. "Then after a moment, I understood. The scene was already under police control."

Reacting instinctively, Langevin said he began to take pictures, shooting from behind police lines after he saw the wrecked vehicle about 15 to 20 yards away.

Visibly tense, police quickly intervened, taking his press card and those of five other photographers and a motorcycle driver.

Then the photographers were herded into the center of the tunnel, stripped of their film and cellular phones and put into a police van.

"I don't think the police even really understood (yet) who was in the car," he said.

They were taken to police headquarters, where they were in custody for more than 48 hours.

During that time, they were under constant questioning by a special high-level police unit that usually deals with terrorism cases, he said, adding they were given little food or time to sleep.

MUIR

lighting on and around campus, the escort service, bike trails on campus, and the stoplight at Kimball Drive and College Avenue.

Muir tries to keep a low profile in politics these days, he said. He represents the university's interests first. When he is talking to the legislators who vote to send money to K-State, it is easier if political parties are not involved.

Muir also has served as the faculty representative to Student Senate for five years.

"That takes up quite a bit of time, but it's fun," he said.

Muir tries to be as supportive as possible without taking over the decision-making process.

He knows what has worked and not worked in the past and helps provide a sense of continuity as new student government leaders take office.

"The administration trusts the students to do the right thing, and they come through," Muir said.

One area that Muir anticipates a lot of interest in is the plus system Student Body President Tim Riemann has proposed. Muir said that two years ago a similar plus/minus system was voted down.

Muir said the plus system would help keep students competitive against other universities as far as grades are concerned.

Muir has also been the chapter adviser for Alpha Tau Omega fraternity for 27 years, starting the day he graduated from K-State. He has also served on several national committees for the fraternity.

Muir said he never plans to leave Manhattan or K-State.

"I probably never will retire unless someone forces me to. I just don't know how," he said. "I keep telling somebody that the next move I make is to the grave. I'll be here till I die, which will be a damn long way away."

Even with his success, Sherwood will be the first to admit science is always challenging.

"Science is very humbling," he said. "There's still a lot we don't understand. If you're not humble, then you can miss important things. It's a fascinating but complex world that we live in."

Besides his duties as department head, Sherwood also directs the Kansas Department of Defense's Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research and is editor of Critical Reviews in Surface Chemistry. He also publishes his own work.

Even with his own accomplishments, Sherwood said he prides himself most on the department's graduate students.

"The most lasting thing we do as scientists and teachers is to train others so they can go on to make contributions in science. Graduate students are a key part of any research. We're proud of our fine graduate program. It's a team effort here, and we all learn from each other," Sherwood said.

Kull provides not-so-great experience

SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
staff writer

I want blood. And after sitting through the campy so-called "action" movie "Kull the Conqueror," I don't care if it belongs to mythical bad guys or untalented screenwriters.

Movie Review

Treating the storyline with about as much respect as they did, here's the beef: Once upon a time there was a pirate named Kull, played by Kevin Sorbo, who accidentally killed a nutty king in battle and ended up getting the throne from the guy.

But jealous rivals in court brought a demon sorceress, played by Tia Carrere, back from the dead to trick Kull into making her his queen so she can fake his death and exile him.

Yadda, yadda, yadda, a little swordplay here and there, cheap jokes, returning to claim his crown, war to save the earth, basically nothing original.

In fact, one of the few charms behind "Kull the Conqueror" was how much it stole from other films of the past.

Carrere not only plagiarizes cool "Star Wars" lines like "I have altered our agreement. Pray I do not alter it further," but cackles maniacally in the flames — a la Wicked Witch of The West.

Sorbo meanwhile, tries to have Conan's look, Hercules' jokes, Superman's manners and other stuff just too obscure to mention. Sort of like how his escape from the dungeon is so closely copied from Bruce Willis' "Bring-out-the-Gimp" scene in "Pulp Fiction" that the viewer truly knows fear (basically because they suddenly believe "Pulp" can occur in any time or place).

However, that is the only fear you will feel unless you wonder what new project these producers will work on next if "Kull" turns a profit.

My problem certainly wasn't really with the supporting cast. At least they were bad enough to match the rest of the movie. No, no, the real troublemakers were Sorbo and Carrere, people who really can act when they try but got stuck in this tripe instead.

For punishment, I suggest docking Sorbo his regular pay on "Hercules: The Legendary Journeys" for about a month so he can think about what he's done. Carrere can get away with this one free since she's apparently having a tough time finding good parts lately anyway. Everyone else involved can either sign an oath to never try this sort of half-assed attempt at action again or be forced to act alongside Pauly Shore for the rest of their lives.

To summarize, the biggest of "Kull"'s numerous flaws (other than bad supporting cast, goofy-looking sets, superthin plot and lack of any really good monsters) was saddling it with a PG-13 rating. The fact is: Barbarian movies need lots of gore and absolutely obscene levels of violence. "Conan the Barbarian" knew this and didn't screw around.

If Sorbo is not equipped to do this sort of stuff, that's OK. He makes a good Hercules because he's a family-oriented sort of hero who can come across as a clever strong guy. My suggestion: Play Captain America next time. The violence is PG-13 level, and you even get a shield with the part.

Varney's offers free art classes, special art events in September

SANDY DAVIS
staff writer

Students with an interest in art can now go to Varney's Book Store to get expert advice from local artists.

Varney's is offering free art classes on Thursday nights to anyone with an interest in art. The first class, which focuses on charcoal, meets tonight.

Penny Cullers, art supplies manager at Varney's, said the idea for the classes was a collective idea from the staff, receiving a lot of support from Varney's owner/general manager Jon Levin.

"We may be a store, but we're excited about art in a lot of ways," Cullers said.

Cullers said all the instructors are volunteers, mainly local artists and K-State professors.

Tonight's charcoal class will be taught by Tom Korte, a local artist that works with the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department.

Cullers said the classes are limited to about 15 students, and this month's first two classes are full. Cullers said the instructors have been very flexible about the class sizes, but there are waiting lists for the first two classes.

This is the first semester Varney's has offered the art program, but Cullers said that if the classes are successful, the program will continue.

"We're hoping to keep it going indefinitely," Cullers said.

Other classes scheduled this month focus on pencil drawing, collage techniques and new art products.

Future classes could include oil painting, hand-made paper, calligraphy and pastel drawing.

Cullers said she thinks the classes will be good because as children people are expressive, but they tend to unlearn that as they grow into adulthood.

"My philosophy is that everyone is an artist," Cullers said.

Cassie Thompson, activities coordinator at Varney's, said the Thursday night classes are just a part of Varney's art program.

In October and November, Varney's will have special classes at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art to correlate

Judge promises quick decision for license secrecy law challenge

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — A federal judge promised a quick ruling after arguments Wednesday in South Carolina's challenge to a federal law that puts motor vehicle records under a shroud of secrecy later this month.

State Attorney General Charlie Condon challenged the Driver's Privacy Protection Act of 1994 on behalf of media groups from five states and two national media organizations. U.S. District Judge Dennis Shedd promised to rule before the law takes effect Sept. 13.

The law would make almost everything in state motor vehicle records that can be looked up using a license plate or driver's license number is off-limits unless an individual agrees to its release.

Condon says it is an illegal federal intrusion into a state's right to manage its affairs. A total of 34 states make motor vehicle records public in some form, according to the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press.

The law was a response to the 1989 slaying of actress Rebecca Schaeffer, who was killed at her California home by a man who used a private investigator to obtain her driver's records.

The federal law still would keep motor vehicle records open to police, private investigators, insurance companies, credit agencies and direct-marketing companies.

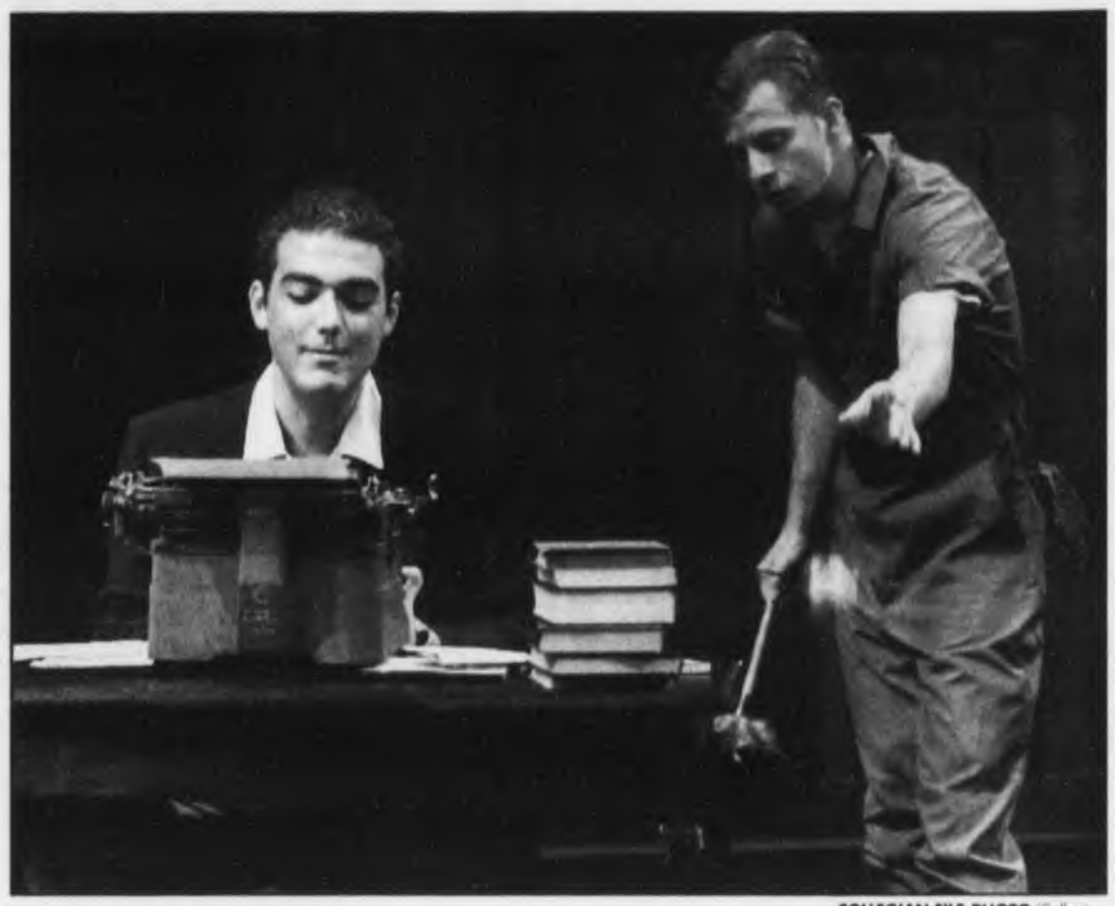
Motorist Victor Burger, 34, of Columbia thinks some records should be off-limits.

"Say you pulled in front of somebody and he turns out to be a nut. He can go get that info and come right back at you," Burger said.

States that do not designate their records as secret could face federal penalties of $5,000 a day. State workers who give out such information could be penalized $2,500 each time.

"If the federal government can make states not give out this information, when will it stop?" Kenneth Woodington, senior assistant state attorney general, asked Shedd. "If they want to regulate those records, the federal government should start licensing vehicles."

The Constitution does not guarantee open motor vehicle records, responded Gail Levine, a U.S. Justice Department lawyer.



Media groups point to stories about wrongdoing or social problems in which the use of public driver's license records has been important. Among their examples are stories about school bus drivers with lengthy motor vehicle violation records.

If Shedd blocks the law, his ruling would apply only in South Carolina but could be used for challenges in other states, media lawyer Jay Bender said.

The judge said he wants briefs from both sides by Monday. In instructing lawyers, Shedd indicated he was willing to consider opening some information, but not items such as Social Security numbers and any medical information that might be in drivers' records.

Media lawyers have said the state's challenge may have been strengthened when the U.S. Supreme Court, in a June ruling on the so-called Brady Law, said Congress could not make local police perform criminal background checks on those who want to buy handguns.

According to the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, the following states have open records: Arizona, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin and Wyoming. Nevada's records are kept private, but can be released to reporters.

LONDON — Fearing that mourners could be crushed in the throng, Buckingham Palace decided Wednesday to more than triple the length of the route for Princess Diana's funeral procession through London.

The royal family said it was "deeply touched" by the public outpouring of grief over the princess's death in a high-speed car crash in Paris early Sunday.

The coffin, borne aboard a gun carriage, will leave Saturday from Diana's Kensington Palace home instead of St. James's Palace as first planned, adding 2 1/2 miles to the original one-mile route to Westminster Abbey, palace officials said.

"It is important there is a longer route so we can have as many people able to participate," said Prime Minister Tony Blair, who spoke by telephone Wednesday to Diana's ex-husband, Prince Charles.

"We want it to be something of which Princess Diana would have been proud."

The funeral proceedings at Westminster Abbey will be shown live on two giant TV screens — about 16 feet high and 22 feet wide — in Hyde Park. Diana's coffin then will travel a 77-mile route to the princess's home village for burial.

All week, relatives, close friends and staff quietly have been visiting Diana's coffin, which lies before the altar in the Chapel Royal at St. James's Palace. Diana's brother Charles, the ninth Earl Spencer, looked distressed and covered his face as he was driven into the palace grounds Wednesday afternoon.

"There is a constant, loving, prayerful presence in the chapel," one Queen Elizabeth II's chaplains said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Diana's sons, 15-year-old Prince William and Prince Harry, 12, will return to London with their father Friday and will go to the chapel.

Diana's mother, Frances Shand Kydd, left her home on Scotland's Isle of Seil on Wednesday to travel to London.

"I thank God for the gift of Diana and for all her loving and giving. I give her back to Him, with my love, pride and admiration to rest in peace," she said in a statement to Press Association, the British news agency.

Accused by some of rigidly clinging to formality while the nation vents its grief, the royal family said Wednesday it was "deeply touched and enormously grateful" for the public outpouring of love.

"All the royal family, especially the Prince of Wales, Prince William and Prince Harry, are taking strength from the overwhelming support of the public, who are sharing their tremendous sense of loss and grief," a statement from the palace said.

It was the palace's first formal statement on the family's feelings since Sunday, when it issued a 24-word statement saying the queen and Charles were distressed.

Later Wednesday, Charles and his sons sent a large bouquet of white lilies in her memory to the Great Ormond Street Children's Hospital, where Diana was a frequent visitor.

For the fourth straight day, thousands of mourners converged on London palaces and queued for up to 12 hours to sign condolence books at St. James's Palace — signaling a huge turnout of

Princess Diana's funeral plans underway; guest list includes world-famous, obscure

remembering Princess Diana

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Buckingham Palace has not released a guest list for Princess Diana's funeral, but organizers hope attendees will range from the world-famous to the obscure.

The mix reflects Buckingham Palace's stated goal of staging a "unique funeral for a unique person."

Prime Minister Tony Blair will attend Saturday's ceremony in Westminster Abbey, and former premiers John Major, Margaret Thatcher, John Callaghan and Edward Heath have been invited.

The list of 2,000 people certainly will include dignitaries. But it promises to be less stacked than usual with the politicians and royalty generally invited to the funerals of important figures. It is not a state funeral, so the usual protocol does not apply.

Organizers said they wanted to keep the number of politicians down to have more room for Diana's friends and those involved in the charities she supported.

A palace spokeswoman said Wednesday the full roster of attendees probably would not be released before the funeral.

This much is known:

U.S. First Lady Hillary Clinton is to attend, as is U.S. Ambassador William Crowe and Bernadette Chirac, the wife of French President Jacques Chirac.

Elton John, a close friend of the princess, plans to be at the funeral, but denied newspaper reports he had been invited to sing, saying that was still "up in the air."

The Italian news agency ANSA said the designer Valentino, who had worked with Diana on AIDS projects, would attend.

The Spanish royal family said it had received an invitation but had not decided whom to send.

The royal families of Sweden, Norway and Denmark, which do not have close contacts with the British royals, will not send anyone. A Dutch government spokesman said it was unclear if anyone from the government or royal family would go.

probably well over a million on Saturday.

News reports said some 750,000 people already have signed books of condolence around the country — St. James's Palace increased its number of books from five to 43 — and at British embassies worldwide.

Diana's coffin will be taken from St. James's Palace to Kensington Palace on Friday night.

After the service at Westminster Abbey — details have yet to be announced — Diana's coffin will travel a long and winding route by road — back through central London, across the capital's northern suburbia, past a huge shopping center, and on to the MI, the six-lane highway to the north.

It will make its way to Great Brington, a tiny village 50 miles north of London where Althorp House, the Spencer family seat, is located.

Diana will be interred privately with 20 generations of her forebears in the Spencer family vault in the village church of St. Mary the Virgin.

The Civil Aviation Authority announced Wednesday that no low-flying aircraft will be allowed over Westminster, the route or Great Brington on Saturday, preventing press photographers from following the proceedings from the air.

with the special exhibits on display, Thompson said.

In October, the class will focus on the Wolf Kahn exhibit and painting with colors. In November, an African-American exhibit will lead into lessons about printmaking and collage.

Around the holiday season, classes will show students how to make artistic gifts, like charcoal rubbings, for friends and family.

Another idea in the works is an art program that will travel to local schools. Volunteers will dress in costumes, such as a Mona Lisa outfit, and give hour-long presentations about the art. Then the children will learn how to do that particular style of art.

Special art events are also planned for Oktoberfest and Arts in the Park.

"Everything we do will be free of charge," Thompson said.

Thompson said students don't have to be artistic to participate in the classes.

"I don't consider myself very artistic, but some of these things we're doing, I can do," Thompson said.

Riemann says alumni center won't hurt students

ANDERSON AVENUE EXPANSION SPELLS TROUBLE FOR LACROSSE, RUGBY FIELDS

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

A proposed KSU Alumni Association center, to be constructed on the south side of Memorial Stadium, won't mean the loss of sports fields.

It won't cause parking problems.

It won't be an eyesore.

It won't cause problems for students.

That's what Student Body President Tim Riemann told Student Senate members during their Thursday night meeting. Riemann, whose office earns him a spot on the KSU Alumni Association's Board of Directors, said the construction of a new center would be a win-win situation for the Alumni Association and the university.

Feedback about the proposal had been entirely positive, Riemann said, until an article in Wednesday's Collegian addressed the loss of the empty area south of the stadium used for rugby, lacrosse and other intramural sports.

"Up until (Wednesday), we had heard nothing but good things about this. Today, we are still in favor of the alumni center," Riemann said.

Many constituents, he said, told him they oppose the alumni center because they believe it will cause the loss of green space and playing fields south of Memorial. On the contrary, Riemann said the city of Manhattan's construction project on Anderson Avenue in 1998 is the reason for the loss of space.

The Anderson Avenue project will widen the street from four lanes to five lanes between 14th Street and Sunset Avenue, but it will increase the stretch between 17th Street and Denison Avenue to six lanes. That six-lane section is directly south of Memorial.

The extra lane means extra space, and that spells trouble for the grassy knoll, Riemann said.

"For each lane of traffic that will be added, the avenue is expanded 12 feet. We automatically have 24 feet of that land that will have to be used for the street. Then, they will have to come in and build a new sidewalk and replace trees," he said.

"The area that will remain after the expansion of Anderson Avenue is about one-third the size of a rugby field. As you can see, there's essentially no field left," he told senators.

Even though the alumni proposal isn't the catalyst in the loss of land, Riemann said the university is still committed to providing adequate facilities for teams that use the Memorial space.

The solution? The teams will practice in Memorial instead of south of it, Riemann said.

WHAT ELSE HAPPENED AT STUDENT SENATE?

After extensive debate and several amendments, a package of changes to standing rules was defeated, 21-28. The bill needed a two-thirds vote to pass the Student Senate.

Changes considered in the bill included reducing the time senators are allowed to speak during debate from 10 to five minutes. Also, the bill would have added a section to the Senate's standing rules that allowed the Senate chair to rule any question presented to a speaker during debate out of order.

Senators questioned the ethics of declaring certain questions out of order during debate. After amending other portions of the bill twice, senators voted it down.

Senators considered a bill that would further define separation of powers among student government's three branches: executive, legislative and judicial.

Senate Governmental Relations Chairman Patrick Carney, author of the bill, defended the merits of drawing clearer lines during positive debate.

More than 120 attend meeting to voice concerns about low-income housing project

MANHATTAN RESIDENTS attend the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board meeting Thursday night at Eisenhower Middle School. The majority in attendance were opposed to the plan to add low-income housing to their neighborhood.

Board votes against housing project idea

MATT KREPS
staff writer

The Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board decided it was against the proposed Cohen-Esrey low-income housing project in the Northview neighborhood. Of the seven-member board, four voted against it at Thursday night's meeting with three in favor of the project.

ED PHELPS, retired captain of the Manhattan Fire Department speaks at the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board. On behalf of public safety, Phelps spoke against the measure to add housing.

The Planning Board will give its recommendation to the City Commission for a final decision.

More than 120 community residents attended the five-hour meeting. Many voiced opinions against the development during the comment period.

The president of Cohen-Esrey, Tracy Taylor, presented the company's plan and studies supporting the project.

The developer proposes to build up to 112 apartment units in two equal phases. The apartments would be two- and three-bedroom units renting for $400 and $450 respectively.

The development also called for a new drainage system at Cohen-Esrey's expense. Plans also include an on-site manager's office, a coin-operated laundry, play areas and a pool. The development would be separated from existing houses by a 6-foot fence and an earthen levy.

In response to the negative response from the neighborhood, Taylor said there are residents who support the development. He said these people were not willing to come to the meeting because of the negative environment.

The largest issue was flooding and water management. The Northview area has a history of flooding.

The neighborhood association raised the issue of agricultural use of the land, which is used for livestock and crops. As farmland, it has a high capacity for water retention and a low effect on nearby residents.

As a living complex, the land would no longer buffer the storm drainage system or complement the neighborhood's characteristics. They argued the development would raise the land level by three feet. The citizens suggested this would increase the flooding problems in the three neighborhoods adjacent to the new development.

"There are only a couple of areas adjacent to Manhattan that are suitable for cultivated crops," Northview resident Paul Barkey said.

Regarding water drainage issues, the developer and city staff reported there were no additional concerns they would not address.

However, residents cited personal experiences with flooding after only 1.5 inches of rainfall. They also expressed concerns that the development would shunt water into the residential areas and increase the likelihood of flooding.

Residents pointed out the only point of exit from the area was Casement Road.

Taylor said surveys sponsored by the developer showed there would be no significant problems with traffic flow. He addressed concerns the housing would cater to low-income groups and degenerate into slums.

"At a minimum, 36.6 percent of Manhattan residents have incomes that would qualify to live in our housing," he said.

Taylor cited tax credit housing projects around the state that have similar housing next door to high-income housing. The neighborhoods exist well together, he said.

"We have a vested interest in protecting our investment," Taylor summarized.

Steve Zilke, representing the city staff, gave a positive report supporting the development. The staff represents engineering

Low-income, subsidized housing still controversial

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Tell someone to describe a low-income housing project and you're likely to get a drab picture.

Like 10-story, dilapidated brick buildings placed among withering green spaces. Or endless rows of small, identical housing units overtaken by trash, abandoned cars and loose dogs.

The picture Americans have of low-income housing is part myth, part reality. It's based more on the failed housing schemes of post-World War II America: the Pruitt-Igoe disaster of St. Louis, the deserted wasteland of the Bronx and the crack houses of south central Los Angeles.

While these extremes definitely exist, the majority of low-income housing fits into existing neighborhoods with few problems.

Heated discussion at Thursday night's Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board meeting focused on the proposed Cohen-Esrey low-income housing development for Northview.

Northview residents have formed a steering committee, Citizens for Stable Neighborhoods, which has lead the opposition to the project. At Thursday's meeting, the group argued the project would create infrastructure and density problems while also placing a burden on neighborhood schools.

The project developer, Cohen-Esrey Housing Partners of Kansas City, Mo., argued they simply wanted to build low-income housing.

It's up to the Planning Board to decide to rezone the project's site for residential or leave it zoned for agriculture.

Kinesiology decision inches toward final vote

LORI GUILFOYLE
staff reporter

Faculty Senate will be making a decision that will affect the graduation requirements of all students attending K-State.

The proposal to drop Kinesiology 101 will be brought to formal vote in an open meeting Sept. 16. If the vote is unanimous, the class will be formally dropped.

The decision to drop 101 as a general requirement for all students is approaching the final stage of the process, David Dzewaltowski, Department of Kinesiology head, said.

Dzewaltowski said he does not see any indication of opposition to the class being dropped.

In anticipation to the class being opposed as a requirement, Kinesiology 101 was not listed in the fall line schedule. The department did not see it necessary to waste graduate teaching instructors and other additional resources to offer a class that was not necessary.

The kinesiology office has handled the issue by advising students not to waste their money by taking a class that might not be a requirement to graduate. If there is opposition to the class being dropped, the department will take appropriate measures to ensure that students anticipating graduation in December could still be eligible to do so.

"It was something we initiated, it wasn't initiated externally," Dzewaltowski said.

Through surveys and feedback generated from students, Dzewaltowski said, it was determined that 101 was remedial for undergraduates who had been subjected to the same information in high school classes.

To replace 101, the department is offering Kinesiology 220, Dynamics, Sports and Exercise, a three-credit-hour class, designed to provide students with an intense experience about human movement and how exercise relates to personal health.

"It is still a general education class that takes interesting topics that students will find personally relevant," Dzewaltowski said.

There are 180 students enrolled in Kinesiology 220 this fall.

Student organizes local memorial to reflect on life of Princess Diana

TRAVIS D. LENKNER

The death of Britain's Princess Diana has sparked emotions worldwide.

Now, a Junction City woman is helping local residents come to terms with their grief.

Susan Barnes, sophomore in criminology, is organizing a memorial for the fallen princess that begins tonight on the lawn south of Memorial Stadium. Mourners can visit the site throughout the weekend to pay their respects, Barnes said.

"Washington, D.C., has the British Embassy. Paris has the accident site. I thought that it would be nice to have a place to go to share my respects for the loss and to put a finality to the tragedy that has happened," she said.

The memorial, she said, is necessary because of the effect Diana has had on people around the world.

"Princess Diana is our generation's JFK," Barnes said.

"She was a wonderful lady. She really impressed me as a mother. I have a 2-year-old daughter, and I admire her for her love of her sons. She put them first over everything, and that really hits home," she said.

Items left at the memorial will be sent to England along with the book of visitors' names and pictures of the site, Barnes said. Flowers that remain when the memorial closes will be distributed to local pediatric wards, nursing homes and shelters, which are places that Princess Diana cared about and took special interest in, Barnes said.

Barnes also plans to place a large picture of the princess at the memorial and to light a candle that will burn throughout the weekend. She said her plans for the event have grown since she first had the idea.

"When I first started, I didn't dream that it would get as big as it is now. My thoughts were to set up just a table with a candle," Barnes said. "I hope that people are interested, and they come out to a place where they can share their thoughts and feelings about her."

British students and faculty members were pleased to learn of the plans for the memorial. Peter Sherwood, distinguished Mourners can bring flowers and mementos to the site and will also be able to add their names to a book that will be sent to the royal family when the weekend is complete. Television coverage of Princess Diana's funeral begins at 4 a.m. Saturday on most networks.

Pizza Hut takes credit cards for home delivery nationwide

NEW YORK — Hungry for pizza but short of cash and stuck at home? Pizza Hut is going to let you charge it.

The nation's largest pizza chain said Wednesday that all company-owned outlets will accept most prominent credit cards by the middle of this month — including the use of cards to pay for home deliveries.

The Dallas-based chain, the first to take credit cards nationally, is investing $3 million in phone lines and card verification equipment.

Its biggest rival, Domino's Pizza, has similar capabilities in more than a third of its company-owned stores and hopes to expand to all company-held outlets by the end of next year.

Both chains say taking credit cards make it more convenient for customers while making drivers a less-tempting target for robbers since they will carry little or no cash on such deliveries.

Pizza Hut began equipping its 4,200 company-owned restaurants to take credit cards a year ago and estimates 80 percent of its stores already take cards. The rest are expected to be ready by Sept. 14.

Franchisees own another 3,500 Pizza Hut outlets. The company said 85 percent of those stores either take credit cards or are planning to do so by October.

Spokesman Jay Allison said stores have found the fees they must pay to credit card issuers are more than offset by the business and lower losses due to bad checks.

Jury awards $900,000 to cashiers who were strip-searched

HARRISBURG, Ill. — A jury awarded $900,000 to four female cashiers who sued Hardee's Food Systems Inc. after they were strip-searched by managers looking for a missing $50.

Connie Toothman, Gennifer Dismuke, Nena Sherrod and Krista Boardman said managers Judy Rochford and Kim Thompson ordered them into a back room at a Hardee's in 1992 and forced them to remove items of clothing to prove they had not taken the money.

The four women, ages 18 to 20 at the time of the incident, each were awarded $200,475 in punitive damages and $25,000 in compensatory damages. Their lawsuit claimed they were wrongfully accused, humiliated and exposed to public disgrace.

Hardee's spokeswoman Sharon Hamilton said the fast-food chain planned to appeal Tuesday's ruling.

FTC challenges condom company claims of being stronger

WASHINGTON D.C. — The nation's second-largest condom maker has agreed to settle Federal Trade Commission charges of deceptive advertising, after the government attacked ads claiming Ramses condoms are stronger than competing brands.

The FTC said Wednesday that Ramses manufacturer London International had no proof that Ramses condoms are stronger or break less often than competing condoms.

The government regulates condoms as medical devices that must be tested for defects before they are sold, and public health experts say all latex condoms are generally effective when properly used.

But the FTC said London International ran ads claiming that Ramses were 30 percent stronger than the leading brand and break 30 percent less often than other brands.

Under an administrative consent agreement, London International admitted no wrongdoing. But the Norcross, Ga.-based company agreed not to make any comparative claims about condom strength, effectiveness or breakage rates unless it can provide scientific proof that meets government standards.

Montana may end status as only state without fixed speed limits

HELENA, Mont. — Confronted with a 31-percent increase in highway deaths, lawmakers are pressing to end Montana's status as the only state without a fixed daytime speed limit.

The secretary of state's office on Thursday received its 10th request for a special session. That triggers a mail canvass of lawmakers. A majority vote is needed to convene the Legislature.

Montana has been without a posted daytime speed limit for most vehicles since December 1995, when Congress repealed the federal speed limit.

Speaker says diversity, communication needed

ZACH VADER
staff reporter

John Harris said his students have no idea who he really is when they walk into his office.

Harris, special assistant to the vice chancellor for student affairs at the University of Nebraska, talked about diversity to a group of K-State students Wednesday in Forum Hall.

He said all students should be less afraid to learn other people's stories.

"Take a step," Harris said. "Take a step to learn about your neighbor's experiences and cultures."

A graduate of the University of Missouri, Harris used many students in role-playing situations to help audience members understand that diversity should be functional.

Communication is a basic skill everyone should utilize more often, he said.

"Culture is diverse," Harris said. "It influences what you think, do and say."

Harris also told students American society often views differences in a negative light. Students should challenge themselves and each other to view differences as strengths and challenges.

"Diversity is what employers want in a potential employee," he said. "People need to step out of their comfort zones and learn from other people around them."

Harris, who is an actor, poet and an award-winning author, said he enjoys giving motivational speeches around the Midwest because it offers an important perspective into other cultures and from other lifestyles.

> "Culture is diverse. It influences what you think, do and say."
> John Harris

The St. Louis native also covered stereotypes in America and how the stages of multicultural development can help the average college student in everyday situations.

Harris used humor and personal stories to help students understand his life and travel experiences.

"We may have all come over on different ships," Harris said, "but we all are in the same boat."

Students win NASA aviation competition

TONYA ALLOWAY
staff reporter

Although K-State isn't a friend of the University of Kansas on the football field, the departments of Mechanical and Nuclear Engineering has teamed up with KU and Wichita State University to win a national aviation design competition sponsored by NASA and the Federal Aviation Administration.

The award was won with a four-passenger kit plane design for a pilot with limited resources. The engineering departments of the three colleges will split the $5,000 cash prize, while the students will share a $3,000 cash award.

The team included seven students and four faculty members from K-State and three faculty from the Department of Aviation at K-State-Salina.

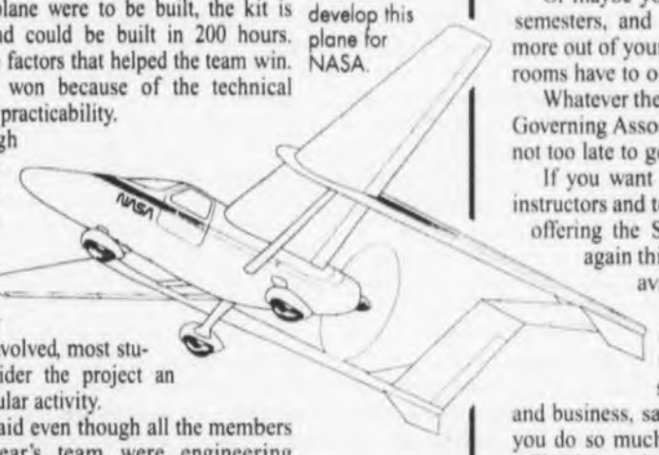
Mechanical engineering students on the design team include Dale Knoeber, senior; Anil Reddy, graduate student; Jitender Uppal, graduate student; Mario Dippolito, junior, Robb Raney, graduate student; Doug Snead, senior, and Scott Dillon, graduate student.

Byron Jones, professor and head of the mechanical and nuclear engineering departments, was one of the lead faculty advisers for the project.

"The students did all the work," Jones said. "We (the faculty) are in the background of the project."

The students began working on the project in the fall semester, and the planning and design took approximately one year. Jones said all student adds their own element to the aircraft design.

In addition to the design of the engine mounts, wing flaps and other parts of the aircraft, there are many business aspects that need to be researched.



"It takes a lot of market analysis to see if it would really be competitive in the market," Jones said.

A ceremony took place on Aug. 1 to honor the winners at the Experimental Aircraft Association's Annual Convention in Oshkosh, Wis. Jones, Knoeber and Dippolito represented the team. NASA paid most of the expense of the trip to Oshkosh, while the rest was covered by the mechanical and nuclear engineering departments and the dean's office.

Most of the expense of the project is the time and effort involved rather than materials, Jones said. This is because the plane doesn't actually have to be built by the team.

If the plane were to be built, the kit is $75,000 and could be built in 200 hours. These were factors that helped the team win. They also won because of the technical design and practicability.

Although it is possible to receive a general problems credit for the work involved, most students consider the project an extracurricular activity.

K-STATE STUDENTS worked with other state schools to develop this plane for NASA.

Jones said even though all the members of this year's team were engineering majors, other fields of study would be a great contribution to future teams because of the market analysis involved.

Interns get involved with SGA, university

SAM FELSENFELD
staff reporter

You're a freshman, finally getting used to your new schedule and wishing you could get involved on campus.

Or maybe you've been at K-State for a few semesters, and you've finally decided to get more out of your education than what the classrooms have to offer.

Whatever the case, if you missed the Student Governing Association elections last spring, it's not too late to get involved with SGA.

If you want to learn more than what your instructors and textbooks can teach you, SGA is offering the Student Senate Intern Program again this year, and applications are still available.

"We're all here to get an education," Senate Intern Coordinator Kimberly Peschka, sophomore in political science and business, said. "But when you're involved, you do so much more — so many things that will aid you when you start your career."

The intern program gives students who weren't elected or are new to K-State the opportunity to become involved with Student Senate. Interns don't have a vote in the Senate meetings, but they do have full speaking rights, and they serve on committees where they are able to vote.

"It was a good opportunity to get in on the ground floor and take a look at a lot of activities to get involved with on campus," said Peschka, who was an intern last year and is an arts and sciences senator now.

Interns work on special projects, participate on committees and attend weekly Senate meetings. It also gives students who plan to eventually run for a position the opportunity to learn how SGA operates.

"The thing that's great is that you come in and learn the system," said last year's Senate Intern Coordinator Ryan Evans, junior in mechanical engineering. "If you come in as just a senator, you come in confused."

Another benefit for interns is that experience in the program can help a student learn how to win an election.

"It's beneficial," said Chris Bainter, sophomore in computer engineering, who served as an intern last year and was elected as a senator for the College of Arts and Sciences last spring, "but it's not designed to help you get elected."

Low-income housing should be high priority for city commission

The recent debate on whether to let Cohen Esrey, a Kansas City, Mo.-based real-estate firm, build low-income housing in Manhattan's Northview neighborhood has come to a head. Thursday, the Manhattan Area Urban Planning Board met to hear all sides of this heated debate.

More important than the sides of the debate is the main problem from which this situation stems. That problem is the lack of affordable housing in Manhattan.

We invite you to drive around town and pick out as many low-income housing communities as you can. You'll find there aren't very many, and the condition most of them are in is unimpressive.

Who's responsible for this — those who live in these communities, or higher powers?

Perhaps such legislative bodies as the City Commission should make the availability of low-income housing a higher priority. Just think of how many different groups of people are lumped into the "low-income" category.

Students, for one, are an integral part of the low-income bracket. Many students who attend K-State are either putting themselves through school or working part-time jobs to make ends meet.

Many teachers, soldiers, new families and K-State employees fit into the now-notorious low-income bracket as well. With such a broad range of people that low-income housing provides for, shouldn't it be a priority?

Or maybe the reason low-income housing is met with such resistance is the neighborhood's desire to stay uniform.

But is that really that important? Isn't diversity one of America's saving graces? Will this desire to stay separate one day turn our city into a community of gated neighborhoods where housing, infrastructure and economic consistency is divided?

We hope not. We'd like to see community members accepting each other regardless of economic status. After all, if they're your neighbor, it's likely your children will be playing with theirs. So when's a good time to tell your children their friends don't belong there?

On Wednesday nights at 8, I slip off into an empty room, turn on the television and boldly watch a show that millions have watched before.

Well, maybe not so boldly. I close the door, pull the curtains and make sure no one knows that I'm watching "Star Trek."

For starters, I'm not one of those Trekkies (actually, we prefer to be called Trekkers) who goes off around the world to conventions. I don't dress up like a Romulan, and you'll never hear me speak Klingon.

But I did buy a phaser, a communicator, a Starfleet uniform and numerous videos and books concerning "Star Trek." I plan to take a trip to Las Vegas to try the Star Trek Experience, and someday I plan on trying out for the show as an extra.

For years I thought something was wrong with me. I thought the only people who could like "Star Trek" were the same people who play "Magic" and belong to the Math Club. I thought in order to like science fiction you had to like science, which definitely ruled me out.

So I asked some of my friends if they had watched the show, and they all answered no. I felt so alone, yet compelled to watch the show over and over again.

I tried to convince myself that I was impressed by the acting in the series. After all, I have enjoyed watching Patrick Stewart (Capt. Picard of "Star Trek: The Next Generation") in movies such as "Masterminds" and "Jeffrey." I carefully paid attention to his stage career, marveling at his performances in "A Christmas Carol" and "The Tempest."

But that couldn't be it. I enjoy watching Dustin Hoffman act, too, but I don't buy "Rain Man" action figures.

So I thought maybe I was attracted to the content of the series. But the show wasn't really all that funny, and there wasn't the raw violence that usually attracts me to the television set. I just couldn't figure it out.

The answer came to me, ironically, while I was doing the least nerdy of things — watching football. It was a Sunday afternoon, and the Miami Dolphins were playing the Indianapolis Colts.

As usual, I was decked out in my Dolphins garb, including a T-shirt, jersey and jacket. At about halftime, as the Dolphins were clinging to a narrow lead, a thought crossed my mind — why do I care about this team?

Sure, it would be neat if my favorite player had a chance to go to the Super Bowl. And I definitely hoped the management would find a way to keep the team together a few more years.

But none of that explained my obsession. When my team was on defense, my heart would pound. I would jump up from my seat if my team was penalized. Even when the game wasn't on, I would be wearing team logos and buying memorabilia.

Once I made the connection to my fascination with "Star Trek," I felt a lot better. Having an inexplicable obsession is a lot easier when there are millions of "normal" people doing approximately the same thing.

Sports fans and "Star Trek" fans have a lot in common, actually. The hope that an organization will do well and accomplish its goal underlies both loyalties. None of it is real, and none of it will matter in the large scheme of things. To me, Star Trek gives hope for the future. I see myself in the characters who explore the universe and carry on humankind. It's just like living through a football player who is doing something I can't.

In fact, the big difference between the two groups of spectators is the sheer size. As popular as "Star Trek" is, there are many more football fans out there trading statistics and predictions.

But I don't think even "Star Trek" fans want that to change. There's something amusing about understanding the show that we don't want to share.

However, as a "Star Trek" fan, I could survive without the ridicule. I'm tired of buying "Star Trek" items and telling the cashier that I'm actually buying it as a gag gift for a friend.

The Christian who was almost a Christian

Christianity is littered with too many loose ends and double standards

VIEWPOINT

One of the most disheartening revelations in life is when something that has been upheld as truth for as far as memory stretches suddenly crumbles.

I remember being baptized when I was seven. It's not the religious significance I remember, though. All I recall is my mother squeezing my hand when I giggled and squirmed during the prayer.

After that, it was Sunday school, Vacation Bible School and Christmas programs. And somewhere along the line, the notion of Christianity lodged itself into my subconscious. I didn't doubt — I just accepted what I had been spoon-fed.

Naturally, I couldn't play the good, unassuming Christian for long. There were too many loose ends in the Bible, too many one-way concepts adhered to by others in the church for me to fall blindly into faith.

But I did the youth group thing in high school, and I do the Bible study thing now in college. Partly because it seems inherent, and partly because I'm trying to convince myself that maybe for all of the close-mindedness and piety enveloped around Christianity, it's still something I can accept.

Then again, I can't overlook the double standard I seem to be setting for myself when I am trying to wrangle my way into something that wants me to live every facet of my life by one book — a book I don't agree with.

I cannot accept the Bible as any sort of guide for day-to-day living when it flagrantly tells me I need to believe things I always thought my God would want me to reject as truth. Nor can I accept it when it contradicts itself.

The Bible clearly states its position on homosexuality. Funny thing is, it states it in the same chapter as the sins of having intercourse with your father's wives and having sex with a woman while she is menstruating. Of course, this is in the Old Testament, which is pretty hard to take to heart in the first place.

But it is the Bible, and if I'm supposed to be a Christian, I suppose I should take on everything it says as my own beliefs.

And I simply can't do that.

Christianity is kind of a funny thing. I think about the means they've used throughout history to bring the heathen to salvation, and I can't help but be embarrassed to be even loosely affiliated with the ilk.

One example is Christians' attitude toward Judaism throughout history. First, they tried to convert the Jews. When that didn't work, they decided the Jews should be segregated or exiled. In the end, an attempt at annihilation of the race seemed to be the only answer Christians saw feasible.

And there but for the grace of God go they.

The disillusionment felt is not at the concept of Christianity or a higher being. It's at the people who like to put themselves on some sort of moral high ground and close their mind to any view that doesn't run parallel to their own. It's at the people who feel they are capable of interpreting what God says. It's at the people who then force that interpretation on others.

I have a difficult time accepting the general Christian view of God being a source of fear and retribution as well. Again, that fear has been perpetuated for centuries by the same people who felt so inclined to interpret the Bible to their liking.

But despite all of this, I still consider myself a Christian. And what a moral quandary it presents. There just is no middle ground for those of us who hedge on saying their faith is absolute.

When I disagree with a topic at hand during Bible study, I feel less and less Christian and more like some cynical punk.

But I have yet to find a place for those liberal Christians out there who cannot make their ideals and the church's ideals match up. How would a meeting like that go?

"Hi, my name is Brandi, and I'm a Christian, but I think the Bible and most Christians are a crock. Are there refreshments here?"

It's not a matter of catering the creeds of your religion to suit your needs. It's a matter of making sure you're thinking about what you might be supporting when you take on the title of Christian.

No reason to wonder why greeks hold many offices

Editor,

There is no mystery to be found in why greeks, who compose only 20 percent of the population, occupy 65 percent of the leadership positions. The answer involves another percentage, and that is the fact that only 5 percent of students on this campus vote in important elections.

A figure I would be interested in would be what percentage of greeks vote?

In one paragraph of the story titled "Greek system encourages involvement," Greek Affairs adviser Barb Robel said, "Communication between houses helps greeks get involved, but doesn't give them a big advantage over other students who aren't fraternity or sorority members."

This statement is completely bass-ackwards. It is the communication between the houses that is the big advantage of the greeks. With only 5 percent of the student body voting, people could easily get elected if they simply got the members of their fraternity or sorority, and their sister or brother house to vote for them.

I'm not saying that this is an unfair advantage — it is simply how they go about getting into that 65 percent of the positions. Greeks also benefit by having members of their house in leadership positions. It keeps them involved and in control of what goes on around campus.

If greeks have leadership positions, they are going to work toward the benefit of their houses. People living in residence halls are not as tight-knit as greeks, and therefore would not have the communication abilities to get all of the voters in their hall. They could try, but they don't know everyone in their hall the way greeks know everyone in their house.

Hall residents would also be more likely to vote their conscience on issues, instead of voting the conscience of their house as greeks would tend to do. Interfraternity Council President Greg Davis said in the article that the greeks were not blaming other students for not taking leadership roles, but were encouraging other students to get involved.

To paraphrase his statement, if you want to get voted in, you better saddle up to some greeks.

Media should be held responsible for Diana's death

Editor,

In your editorial about Princess Diana's death (Sept. 2), you wrote that "the blame game is easy to play," but so is the denial game. The so-called reputable news media have played a bigger role in the increased aggressiveness of the paparazzi and the celebrity press than the journalistic community cares to take responsibility for.

There recently has been an unsettling trend in the reputable news media to present stories that have traditionally been the domain of the celebrity press. Go to the library and look at the evolution of such news magazines as Time and Newsweek in the past 15 to 20 years as they have raced each other to become more and more like People Weekly.

As the reputable news media successfully move into the terrain of celebrity coverage, the tabloids, if they want to survive, are left no other choice but to become more aggressive and more tasteless in obtaining and presenting their stories.

It has been said the press is just offering what their audience is willing to buy (and the drug pusher is just offering what the heroin addict's willing to buy), but I'm not too sure the public really wanted to know all this crap about which celebrity is sleeping with whom and what their new hair style is.

The truth is the public has been convinced to want this crap by those who peddle it in the same way we have all been convinced to want whiter teeth, softer toilet paper and shinier, more bouncy hair.

But the real windfall on Princess Diana's blood money goes to ABC, NBC and CBS for their overly excessive coverage these past several days on the "Life and Death of a Princess, Her Royal Family, and Any and Everyone She Ever Came Into Contact With."

Local resources can help in search for part-time jobs

JAMI NELSON
staff reporter

The solution to many students' financial worries is simple. They find a job.

K-State and Manhattan businesses offer many part-time job opportunities. To find a job, students use campus resources including job-search programs and the K-State Student Union job board.

One office on campus, Career and Employment Services in Holtz Hall, offers several job-search resources.

"One of our big pushes this year is to get new part-time job opportunities both on campus and off campus," Tim Henderson, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, said.

"A couple of weeks ago, we had 250 new jobs put onto the job board."

Career and Employment Services sponsors the part-time job board in the Union, which is the starting point for many students' job searches. It features opportunities for food service, clerical work, customer service, human resources, technical work and the labor industry.

For each job, the board describes duties, work-study status, hours required to work per week, expected wage and a contact name, address and phone number.

Other services provided by Career and Employment Services include job opportunities listed on its World Wide Web home page at www.ksu.edu/ces/ces.html.

One Internet feature, Jobline, lists all job vacancies, which are updated daily. It suggests employment opportunities based on students' majors and interests.

Students can also seek help by stopping into the office in Holtz. Assistance with résumé development and interview techniques is available through workshops or one-on-one appointments, Henderson said.

Another resource, the Office of Student Financial Assistance, offers two work-study programs to help students find part-time work. The federal government funds the Federal Work-Study Program, and Kansas finances the Kansas Career Work-Study Program.

In the 1997-98 school year 1,472 students earned jobs through work-study, said Jack Taylor, assistant director of service for the financial aid office.

"With both work-study programs, students tend to work 10 to 20 hours a week," Taylor said.

Students can apply for work-study by filling out the federal student aid application. Work-study is awarded on the configuration of both parents' and students' assets and incomes, or the expected family contribution. If these figures are low enough, students may be awarded work-study eligibility, he said.

Students are not assigned jobs but must take the initiative to find jobs with work-study classifications. Both work-study programs offer on- and off-campus opportunities.

The state-funded program offers employment outside of the university in restaurants, insurance agencies and other local businesses, Taylor said. The federal program offers jobs through campus offices.

When students find a work-study job, they can receive their financial aid.

"Some students truly believe they get a job and get to study while working,"

Bombs explode in center of Jerusalem, killing 7

▶ Mall bombing. Three suicide bombs explode in a crowded mall in Jerusalem, injuring 192 people, including several American tourists.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Three suicide bombs exploded within a few deadly seconds in the heart of Jerusalem on Thursday, spraying rusty nails into a crowd of shoppers and late-summer tourists on the city's main pedestrian mall.

The blasts, claimed by the Islamic militant group Hamas, killed seven people — including the three bombers — and struck a new blow to the peace process just as hopes were rising for its revival.

At least 192 people, including several American tourists, were wounded in the attack, which turned the bustling Ben Yehuda Street walkway of cafes and shops into a chaotic nightmare of broken glass and blood. The dead included a 12-year-old girl.

The bombers apparently positioned themselves outside three stores, close enough to make eye contact, and blew themselves up within seconds of each other.

"There were three of us talking, and suddenly I heard an explosion," said Bob Helfman of Detroit, who was sitting at a cafe when the attack began.

"I tried to get up, realizing it was a bomb, but my feet could not even support me, and I fell over. Then I heard another bomb, and everyone started running. No one knew which direction to go in."

With sirens wailing and a charred smell in the air, rescue workers treated some victims on the sidewalk, surrounded by overturned cafe chairs and umbrellas. In a scene that has become all too familiar in Israel, ultra-Orthodox burial squad volunteers searched for pieces of flesh in the debris.

After the blasts, Israel stepped up pressure on Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat for an immediate crackdown on Islamic militants and sealed its borders with the West Bank and Gaza Strip. A previous closure had been eased only two days earlier, ahead of the planned visit of U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright next week.

That closure was imposed after a double suicide bombing in a Jerusalem market on July 30, which killed 17 people.

In Washington, President Clinton denounced the latest bombings and said Albright would go ahead with her trip. He urged Arafat's Palestinian Authority to "do all it can to create an environment that leaves no doubt that terror will not be tolerated."

Clinton called Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on Thursday to express his outrage and condolences, Netanyahu's office said.

Israel Radio said Netanyahu canceled plans for his security chiefs to meet with Palestinian and U.S. security officials, and a source in Arafat's office said Israel was refusing Arafat permission to travel by helicopter from Gaza to the West Bank city of Ramallah.

The three nail-studded bombs exploded shortly after 3 p.m., when hundreds of shoppers and tourists crowded the pedestrian mall, which is lined with cafes, tourist shops, and American fast food restaurants such as Burger King and Sbarro.

In the tumult, a toddler was rushed into the back of an ambulance. Paramedics splashed water in the face of one weeping man. Blood spattered the facade of the Israel Discount Bank.

Hamas, which has carried out 13 bombings in four years of Israeli-Palestinian peacemaking, claimed responsibility and threatened more bombings unless Hamas prisoners held by Israel were released by Sept. 14.

Arafat condemned the attack, and a senior Palestinian official pledged full cooperation with Israel on security matters. But Netanyahu said the already deeply troubled peace process could not go on unless Arafat crushed Hamas once and for all.

"No peace process can exist when the Palestinian Authority enables the leaders of the terrorists to walk around free with their arms, demonstrations and flags in cities that have become refuges for terrorists," he said.

Palestinian authorities detained two Hamas political leaders in the West Bank on Thursday night, arrested eight activists and shut down a Hamas newspaper in Gaza, Palestinian security sources said. But the moves fell far short of the mass arrests Israel is demanding.

Hamas leader Abdel Aziz Rantisi said he did not think Arafat would crack down on Hamas as he did following a spate of suicide bombings in early 1995.

"They know that a crackdown is not for the benefit of the Palestinian people," he told The Associated Press at his home in the Gaza Strip.

"Without a solution for the agony of our people inside and outside and without a return to our homeland, I believe that the bloodshed will continue."

Netanyahu called a meeting of his security cabinet on Friday, at which ministers were expected to consider authorizing Israeli troops to carry out strikes in territory under Palestinian control, Israeli radio reports said.

In response to Thursday's attack, Israel resealed the West Bank and Gaza Strip, barring Palestinians from entering Israel. Israel also imposed an internal closure, meaning Palestinians could not travel between towns and villages in the West Bank.

Welcome Back Concert leaps at chance to bring three-woman act to town.

Frogpond

MIKE ENGELHARDT/Collegian

Manhattan will rock again with the Welcome Back Concert on Saturday in City Park.

Five bands are scheduled to play for the eight-hour concert, sponsored by K-State's radio station, KSDB-FM 91.9.

Eric Melin, DB92 music director, said it's a great opportunity for the denizens of K-State to get together and see live music for free. The concept was resurrected by the radio station four years ago as an event sponsored by local businesses to bring in musicians on their way up.

"We've always been ahead of our bands," Melin said. Many bands that played at Welcome Back have gained more widespread notoriety after the concert, he said.

This year, the headliner is Frogpond, a three-woman act whose members met at Central Missouri State University in Warrensburg. The band's TriStar Records release, "Count To Ten," appeared in stores last September.

Heidi Phillips, guitar and vocals for Frogpond, said she, Megan Hamilton, drums, and Justine Volpe, bass, are looking forward to Saturday.

Phillips, who describes Frogpond's sound as "pop rock, alternative, whatever, I don't know," said she's looking forward to playing with the other four bands, though on Wednesday night she was still getting over a cold.

"It's no big deal. Hopefully I'll be better tomorrow," she said.

Other bands on the bill include Jiffy Boy, a five-piece punk rock "chicken core" band, and Ruskabank, an eight-piece ska outfit, both from Manhattan, and both favorites on DB92.

After those two, Ultimate Fakebook, another Manhattan band, is scheduled to play. Melin, who plays drums for Fakebook, said the band's Noisome Records release, "Electric Kissing Parties" is expected to hit the stores next month.

Following Frogpond will be TV Fifty, a four-piece band from Kansas City, featuring guitarist-vocalist Jim Cregeo, of the legendary former Manhattan band Truck Stop Love.

Melin said he felt awkward about booking Ultimate Fakebook, a band he's part of. After calling Frogpond's members, however, they recommended TV Fifty, who in turn told Melin to put Fakebook on the bill, he said. Melin was also a part of Truck Stop Love.

Streetside Records will be giving away compact discs, cassettes and posters, and will be selling Frogpond CDs.

Varney's Book Store will have a booth with a stretched canvas that people can paint on for 10 minutes if they spend a dollar, said Penny Cullers, art and general supplies manager for the bookstore.

Proceeds from the painting will go to the education fund of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, Cullers said.

Len Potillo, DB92 station manager, said he regrets not being able to attend the concert, because he has a conference to attend in New York, but has high hopes for success.

"I think it's gonna be a blast with everybody out," he said. "Support!"

Actors able to make physical comedy a success

Theater Review

MARY RENEE SMITH
staff writer

A young audience was treated to one of the last showings of "Charley's Aunt" Thursday night in Nichols Theatre.

Nearly every seat in the house was filled by the students of the Freshman Seminar class.

The play, which has been held over from summer performances, has just two more shows, tonight and Saturday.

Written by Brandon Thomas, the play was originally opened and set in 1892. K-State director Charlotte MacFarland states in the playbill that she has wanted to do this play for years, but the Victorian period costumes were cost-prohibitive. To get around those costs, the play has been adapted for the stage by being set in the American 1950s.

Fortunately for MacFarland she has wonderful actors able to pull off this attempt at modernization.

In a nutshell, this is the story of three young men and their search for love. The story line and comedic element are dependent on Victorian societal rules that just don't make the jump into the '50s. The comedy comes from the men attempting to get around these rules and get the girls alone so they can profess their love.

At times, the language and references don't translate at all to the '50s and do little more than confuse the audience.

Tyler Lansdown makes this play an incredibly enjoyable experience. Lansdown plays Fancourt Babberley who is forced, physically, to dress as Charley's aunt, and the comedy ensues. Lansdown carries the script through places that could have lost the audience. He is the highlight of the night, hilarious and filled with energy.

The physical comedy throughout the performance is extraordinarily demanding and appears painful for the actors at times. Lansdown and fellow cast members Paige Smith as Jack Chesney and Kevin Bishop as Charley Wykeham have beautiful timing throughout the play.

Bishop is a relatively fresh face in a theater program where the same faces keep popping up. They are mostly talented faces but the same faces none the less.

Col. Chesney, portrayed by Scott Chamoff, had the walk, talk and mannerisms of a bad '50s commercial and was perfect for the part.

As with most productions at K-State, the set and costuming were impressive. The '50s were adequately portrayed through the hoop skirts and cheap suits.

Overall the performance was an enjoyable one worth the laughs and the bruises on Lansdown.

Jazz legends to perform at KC museum grand opening

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Charlie Parker didn't live long enough to see the birthplace of Kansas City jazz reclaim its funk.

Kansas City, Mo.'s famed 18th and Vine district — for years the heart of K.C.'s black and jazz communities — will achieve a hint of its former glory this weekend with the gala opening of the Kansas City Jazz Museum tonight.

At least Kansas City still knows how to throw a good party.

Tonight's lineup of performers at the restored Gem Theater include Tony Bennett, Jay McShann, locals Pat Metheny and Kevin Mahogany, Ellis Marsalis, Al Jarreau and the George Duke Orchestra.

The hosts for the event are no less than Billy Dee Williams and Harry Belafonte. Also scheduled is legendary K.C. jazzman Claude "Fiddler" Williams, who performed at K-State last year.

Belafonte and Mahogany will be returning to the area where K.C. native Robert Altman directed them in the 1996 film "Kansas City." Some of the film sets, eerily evoking the former glory of the district, still sit around the area, colorful set pieces amid the urban decay indicative of the area east of downtown Kansas City.

Years of neglect, however, are being reversed as development money is being poured back into the area.

K.C. Mayor Emanuel Cleaver said the museum will be a showpiece for Kansas City.

"We will re-create the rhythm and movement of the people that walked the streets," Cleaver said.

Dennis Wilson, director of jazz studies, has been in Kansas City since Thursday rehearsing for Friday's gala with the Duke Orchestra.

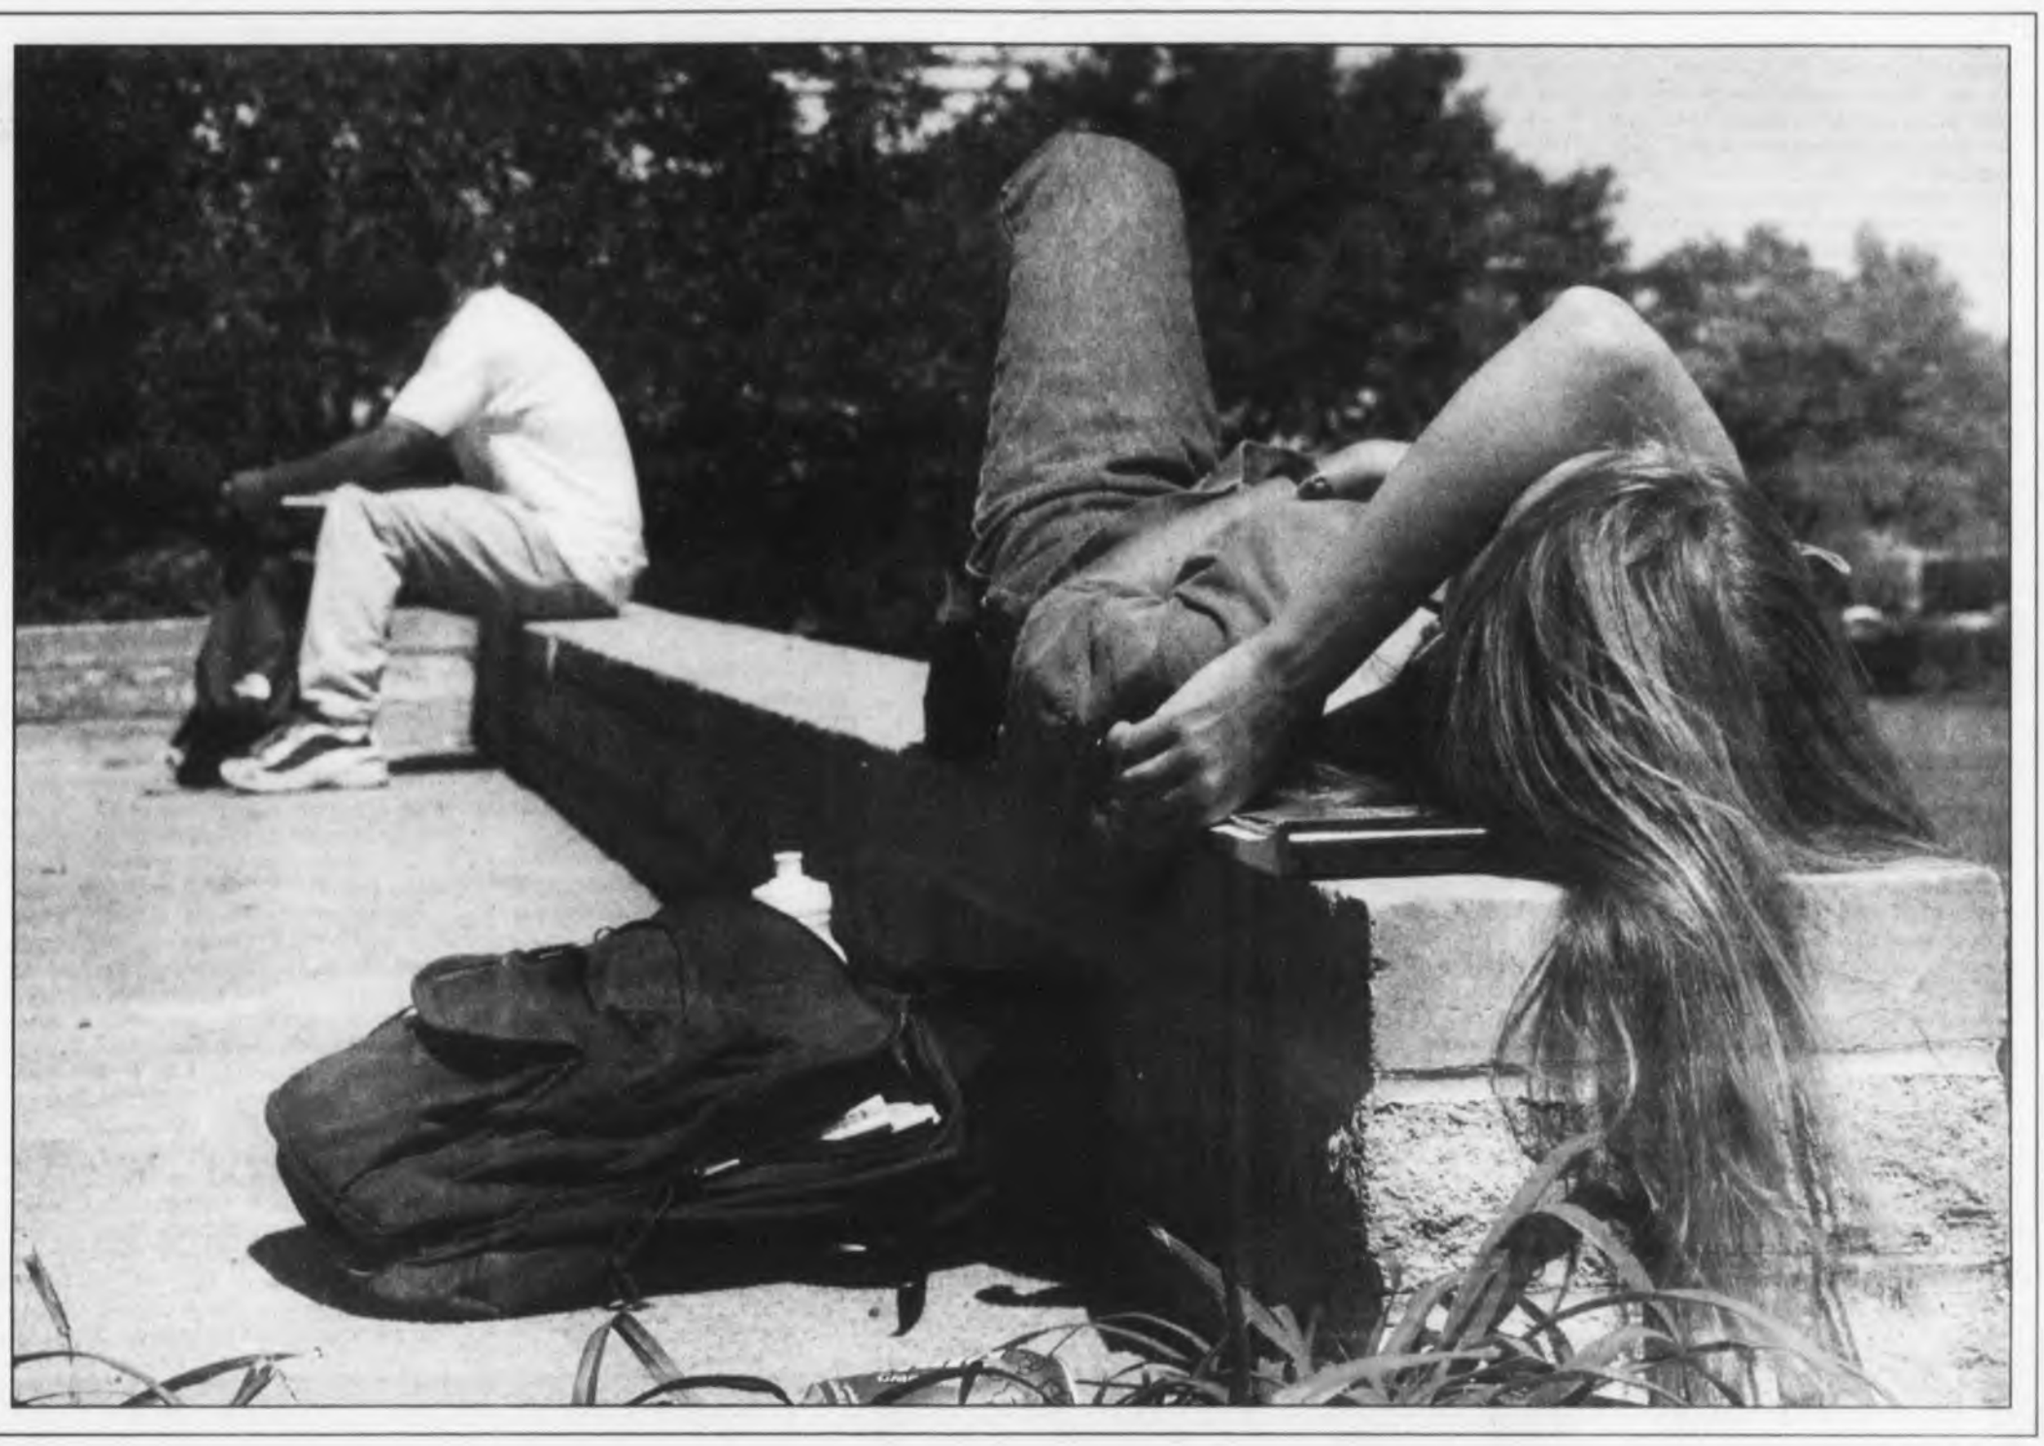
"Kansas City needed to do this, as much history as it has. It's not one of the top scenes today, but it's got history. This building is long-overdue and well-welcome," Wilson said.

Wilson said although New York, London and Tokyo have become the centers of the jazz world, many practitioners and influential performers came out of the K.C. scene in the 1930s.

The Count Basie Orchestra, which comes to K-State once a year as part of Wilson's K-State Jazz Festival, is from K.C.'s jazz scene.

Wilson said he plans to bring some K-State music students, who are playing in Overland Park this weekend for a K-State recruiting event, to the opening celebration to talk with musicians.

"I'm trying to bring a real jazz experience to these students," Wilson said. "I'm trying to get these students exposed to these jazz artists."



The event will be taped to be televised later this year on the BET network.

"Kansas City needs to tell the U.S. that this is our history and we need to preserve it," Wilson said. "This is the real deal. I don't know of any other jazz museum in the country like this."

The jazz museum will share space with the Negro Leagues Baseball Museum.

The $27 million public redevelopment project began in 1989, but was delayed because of to political problems. Private developers are also looking to open restaurants and other services in the area.

The area fell into decay in the 1950s after having been a popular district since the 1920s. In their heyday, 18th and Vine clubs would have various jam sessions featuring some of jazz's greatest artists.

New viruses could help destroy HIV-infected cells

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Scientists have created the first virus-killing viruses, cleverly crafted microscopic missiles that zero in on AIDS-infected cells and destroy them.

The idea is to fight infection with infection. The newly created viruses target only cells that have already been captured by HIV.

The approach works well in the test tube but has not been tried yet in people or even in animals. Even though no one knows whether it will eventually help control AIDS, experts say the idea is noteworthy for its novelty alone.

"It's absolutely amazing that you can make a virus that will specifically target HIV-infected cells," Dr. Ronald Desrosiers of the New England Regional Primate Center, said. Desrosiers plans to begin testing one of the viruses soon on monkeys.

One version of the virus, created by Dr. John K. Rose and his research team at Yale Medical School, is a genetically altered form of vesicular stomatitis virus, or VSV, a bug that ordinarily infects livestock. Another is based on the rabies virus and was created by a team led by Dr. Karl-Klaus Conzelmann of the Federal Research Center for Virus Diseases of Animals in Tubingen, Germany.

"It's a completely new approach to limiting viral infection," Rose said. "This is the first virus that's an anti-virus."

Reports on both experiments are being published in Friday's issue of the journal Cell. An accompanying commentary by Dr. Garry P. Nolan of Stanford University called the work highly significant and a leap forward.

If it works as its developers hope, the technique will stop the AIDS virus by employing a sort of mirror image of HIV's own sly tricks for worming its way into cells.

Each individual bit of HIV is a ball of genetic material wrapped in a protein known as gp120. This substance has a powerful chemical attraction to two other proteins called CD4 and fusin. Some types of blood cells carry CD4 and fusin on their surfaces. The AIDS virus uses its gp120 as a magnet to attach itself to these cells.

Once gp120 latches onto these two proteins, HIV opens the cell and inserts its genetic blueprint. This information is then stitched into the cells' genes, turning them into virus-building factories.

In the new experiments, the scientists built versions of rabies and VSV that are missing their original outer coats. Instead, their surfaces are made of CD4 and fusin.

Reversing the process of HIV infection, this CD4 and fusin is attracted to the gp120 on the surface of the AIDS-infected cells. The genetically engineered virus enters and takes charge. After a few hours, the cell dies, never producing HIV.

The experimental rabies virus cannot reproduce. However, Yale's bullet-shaped VSV can actually command the cell to make new versions of itself before killing it. These new bits of VSV can then spread to other HIV-infected cells, eventually becoming a self-manufacturing AIDS drug.

Dr. Edward A. Berger of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, who discovered fusin last year, called the approach interesting and clever.

"This is a selective way of delivering something to the HIV-infected cell, in this case a virus that will kill the cell," he said.

In the test tube, the reproducing VSV was able to reduce levels of HIV to almost zero for three months.

This means the treatment is unlikely to wipe out HIV, even if it works, but it might be used with other medicines to keep HIV infections from progressing to AIDS.

The newly created viruses are designed to attack HIV-infected cells and nothing else. However, the safety of the new approach will be one of the first questions to be answered.

Other unknowns involve whether the immune system will attack cells that are infected with the genetically engineered viruses.

Coaches had been opposed to using the grass inside Memorial Stadium, because its use by the K-State Marching Band leaves it in poor condition, but officials have promised to keep the field in top condition.

"I met with President Jon Wefald and Vice President for Administration and Finance Tom Rawson. They are committed to refurbishing the Memorial Stadium field, and as soon as the band season is over this year, they are going to redo it. Then they're committed to putting together the resources, funding and manpower to keep that field in a condition that the lacrosse, rugby and other teams that want to play on it can — forever," Riemann said.

The new plan settles well with team coaches, too, he said.

"I got a hold of the coaches this afternoon and they said that this would work. They said that they weren't against the alumni center. They just wanted to make sure that they would have a place to play," Riemann said.

Opposition from intramural teams isn't the only obstacle facing the construction of a new center. He addressed other questions raised by senators during his presentation.

Patrick Carney, Senate governmental relations chairman, asked Riemann about the effect a center would have on parking availability in lots next to the proposed building. Riemann said it shouldn't be a problem.

"The parking for alumni events will, for the most part, take place in evenings and on weekends. If you look at where the building's going to be, it's an equidistance from the west lot and from the Union lot. I suspect that there will be some parking in the rear of the building, and I don't foresee a strain on parking at all," Riemann said.

Senators asked Riemann and University Architect John Carter about the effects of the loss of green space caused by new construction. Riemann's answer was simple.

"Progress has a cost," he said. "Always."

Construction on the south side of the stadium has been planned for many years, Carter said, and the loss of greenery won't have significant effects in the long run.

"There were two original projects when the stadium was built. The concrete seating was built first, and then the stone walls were added later. The third project was supposed to be closing off the horseshoe and building on the south side of the stadium. That had been the intention of the university and was a regular feature of the plans of the university up until the '60s, when it became apparent that a new stadium was going to be built," Carter said.

He admitted that he too had been concerned about how a building would look in that location. But Carter said he was confident a building wouldn't detract from the appearance of campus.

"I've had a lot of concerns about the landscaping and about the way that area would be closed off and the perception that you have as you drive and walk past," Carter said.

"They have emphasized the landscape planning aspects of the project, so that while we would lose some of that green space, and you might not be able to see into the field itself, you would have a very attractive space to be able to look at."

A new building will also match the architectural styles of other buildings on campus, Carter said.

"I've got the hope that the architect has some good sensibilities and knows and appreciates the history of the university," Carter said.

Carney also asked Riemann if a new center would take business away from a newly renovated Union, which would need the revenue.

Riemann said the center, which would be open to students and other groups for meetings and banquets, would work hand-in-hand with the Union to coordinate resources.

"As far as I know, the Union is booked quite frequently for banquet areas and for other activities. The fact that the Alumni Association is going to offer their rooms is another benefit. They are offering their rooms more as a helping hand and not as a revenue source," he said.

The center would contract its food service with the Union as a benefit, he said.

Throughout the discussion, Riemann stressed that the proposed center is just that — a proposal. The Alumni Association is waiting for results of a feasibility study to determine if K-State alumni are capable of raising the necessary funds. Positive answers from that study mean that the fund-raising process will begin.

Construction, he said, will not begin until funds have been raised for the entire project. That, he said, could take years.

"If the feasibility study says that we have the capacity to make the money from our alumni, then they'll start raising the money, but it's not a pay-as-you-go sort of thing. We don't want to start a building and then not be able to put a roof on it," he said.

SENATE

"There are conflicts of interest. Can we eliminate them all? Probably not. What this does is it attempts to draw a clear line. It says if you're serving in this branch of government, you should not ... serve in another branch of this government," he said.

The bill was referred to the Senate Operations Committee.

Senate approved, 48-4, a motion to speed debate on less controversial issues. The bill clarified earlier bylaws that allowed six debates on an issue, but did not specify whether those were affirmative or negative debates. Now, at least three debates from each side will be allowed, but the question can be called at that point to avoid repetitive argument.

- Senate approved, unanimously, a commendation to Samuel M. Kruckenberg. Kruckenberg, who died July 11, had served at K-State in various capacities in the College of Veterinary Medicine since 1963.

JOBS

Taylor said. "Work-study is a program to make it easier for students to find a job. I believe students prefer to work their way through college than pay a huge debt."

"I don't want students to think they have to have work-study to get a job," Taylor said.

He explained more than 7,000 students work on campus, and only 1,500 have work-study.

Once students find some part-time possibilities, they must consider whether to work on or off campus.

"I think there are benefits to both," Henderson said. "On-campus jobs are a good way to learn about campus. Off-campus jobs expose students to the community and businesses in Manhattan."

Flexible hours, a close location and job-related skills are advantages of on-campus work.

"One benefit I see to working on campus is it's so much easier to have a backpack on, go to work, leave work and go to class," Taylor said.

Other students enjoy the time away from the campus atmosphere.

"I spend so much time on campus with my classes that it's good to get away to my job," Jason Shields, sophomore in marketing, said.

Both on-campus and off-campus jobs can offer experience relative to students' career plans. Henderson said part-time jobs, community service, internships and cooperative education help students to be marketable in the work force when they graduate.

university professor and head of the chemistry department, said that he was glad to hear of a local movement to honor the princess.

"It's a remarkable story," he said. "This is not just a British event. She touched people around the world. It's nice to hear that others will be paying their respects."

Nathan Havercroft, graduate student in chemistry, said emotions of British K-State students are mixed.

"Their main emotions have been disbelief and shock, but also anger at the press if indeed it comes out that they played a role in the accident," he said.

The Diana memorial area will be open from 5 to 9 p.m. today, 6 a.m. to 9 p.m. Saturday, and 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. Sunday at Memorial Stadium.

HOUSING

Planning and Design and member of the Planning Board, said he sees the proposed housing project as keeping in line with the city's land-use plan.

"I think housing types and economic levels ought to be mixed," he said.

"It really makes for a better city. It's interesting that people go to Europe and see these mixed types in cities and come back here and talk about how good their cities are, but you won't see us building like that here.

"There's a great fear in the U.S. that these low-income people may be bad neighbors, which may or may not be true," he said.

As a member of the Planning Board, Weisenburger helped put together a comprehensive plan for development in Manhattan.

For example, Weisenburger said the plan encourages more residential development in the older parts of the city, especially the downtown commercial district.

He said costs associated with buying land make relocating the development to virgin suburban land much more economical.

"I'm not sure this is helping build the vibrant city center," Weisenburger said.

The Cohen-Esrey project is the first low-income housing project to come before the Planning Board since an earlier Cohen-Esrey plan in west Manhattan backfired three years ago because of traffic circulation problems.

The issues and interests of low-income housing are many.

Vernon Deines, professor emeritus of regional and community planning, has lived in Manhattan for 40 years, spending some of that time living in Northview as a student at K-State.

"Clearly, there are areas in town that serve different housing needs," he said.

Deines said Northview's cheap housing, compared with the rest of Manhattan, reflects the socioeconomic mix of families, students, married students and faculty who live there.

"This housing being proposed is to meet that demand, and it seems consistent with housing and income levels of the people over there," he said.

Deines said because the area is mostly single-family residences, the perception is that the low-income housing would crowd too many people in too little space.

"The real problem is they are adjacent to a flood plain," he said. "The city needs to look at those issues."

Other issues integral to low-income housing projects are convenience to shopping, public transportation and green space.

"They might not have the access or opportunity to own and operate a vehicle," Deines said. "What we really need in Manhattan is a good public transportation system."

While infrastructural issues are a concern, in many neighborhoods residents complain that low-income housing will bring low-quality neighbors.

"That's a lot of conjecture and speculation by people," he said. "Students just don't have the money to buy expensive housing. Neither do older, retired people."

Deines' daughter, who works in Manhattan, lives in Northview.

"There are a lot of good people over there," he said. "Just because it's low-income doesn't mean they aren't good people."

The Cohen-Esrey debate has proved that vocal citizens can make a difference in the development of their cities.

Weisenburger said, "I don't know if this is serious or not, but I think the neighborhood people see this as a severe challenge to the integrity of their neighborhood. They are concerned about density and land values.

"This is really a citizen participation community," he said. "Citizens in this town can really get organized and affect the outcome of projects."

and zoning concerns.

Board member Carol Peak suggested there might be problems the city staff did not consider. Access by emergency services was questioned.

Zilke said the staff did not consider the issue important enough to address. Both the audience and some board members responded with negative comments.

Other issues included soil stability, lack of sidewalks along Casement Road, pedestrian access to the development and the proximity of some units to other homes in existing developments.

Barkey opened the presentation by the Northview Community Citizens for Stable Neighborhoods. The organization represents the concerns of housing surrounding the proposed development.

"We oppose the Cohen-Esrey project because it is a bad plan on a bad site. We do not oppose low-cost housing," Barkey said.

The neighborhood association raised concerns regarding access to jobs, shopping, medical facilities and the lack of public transportation in Manhattan. The organization considers these needs important to the lower-income families Cohen-Esrey would focus on.

Barkey also noted that the proposed development would not fit the character of the three neighborhoods it would border.

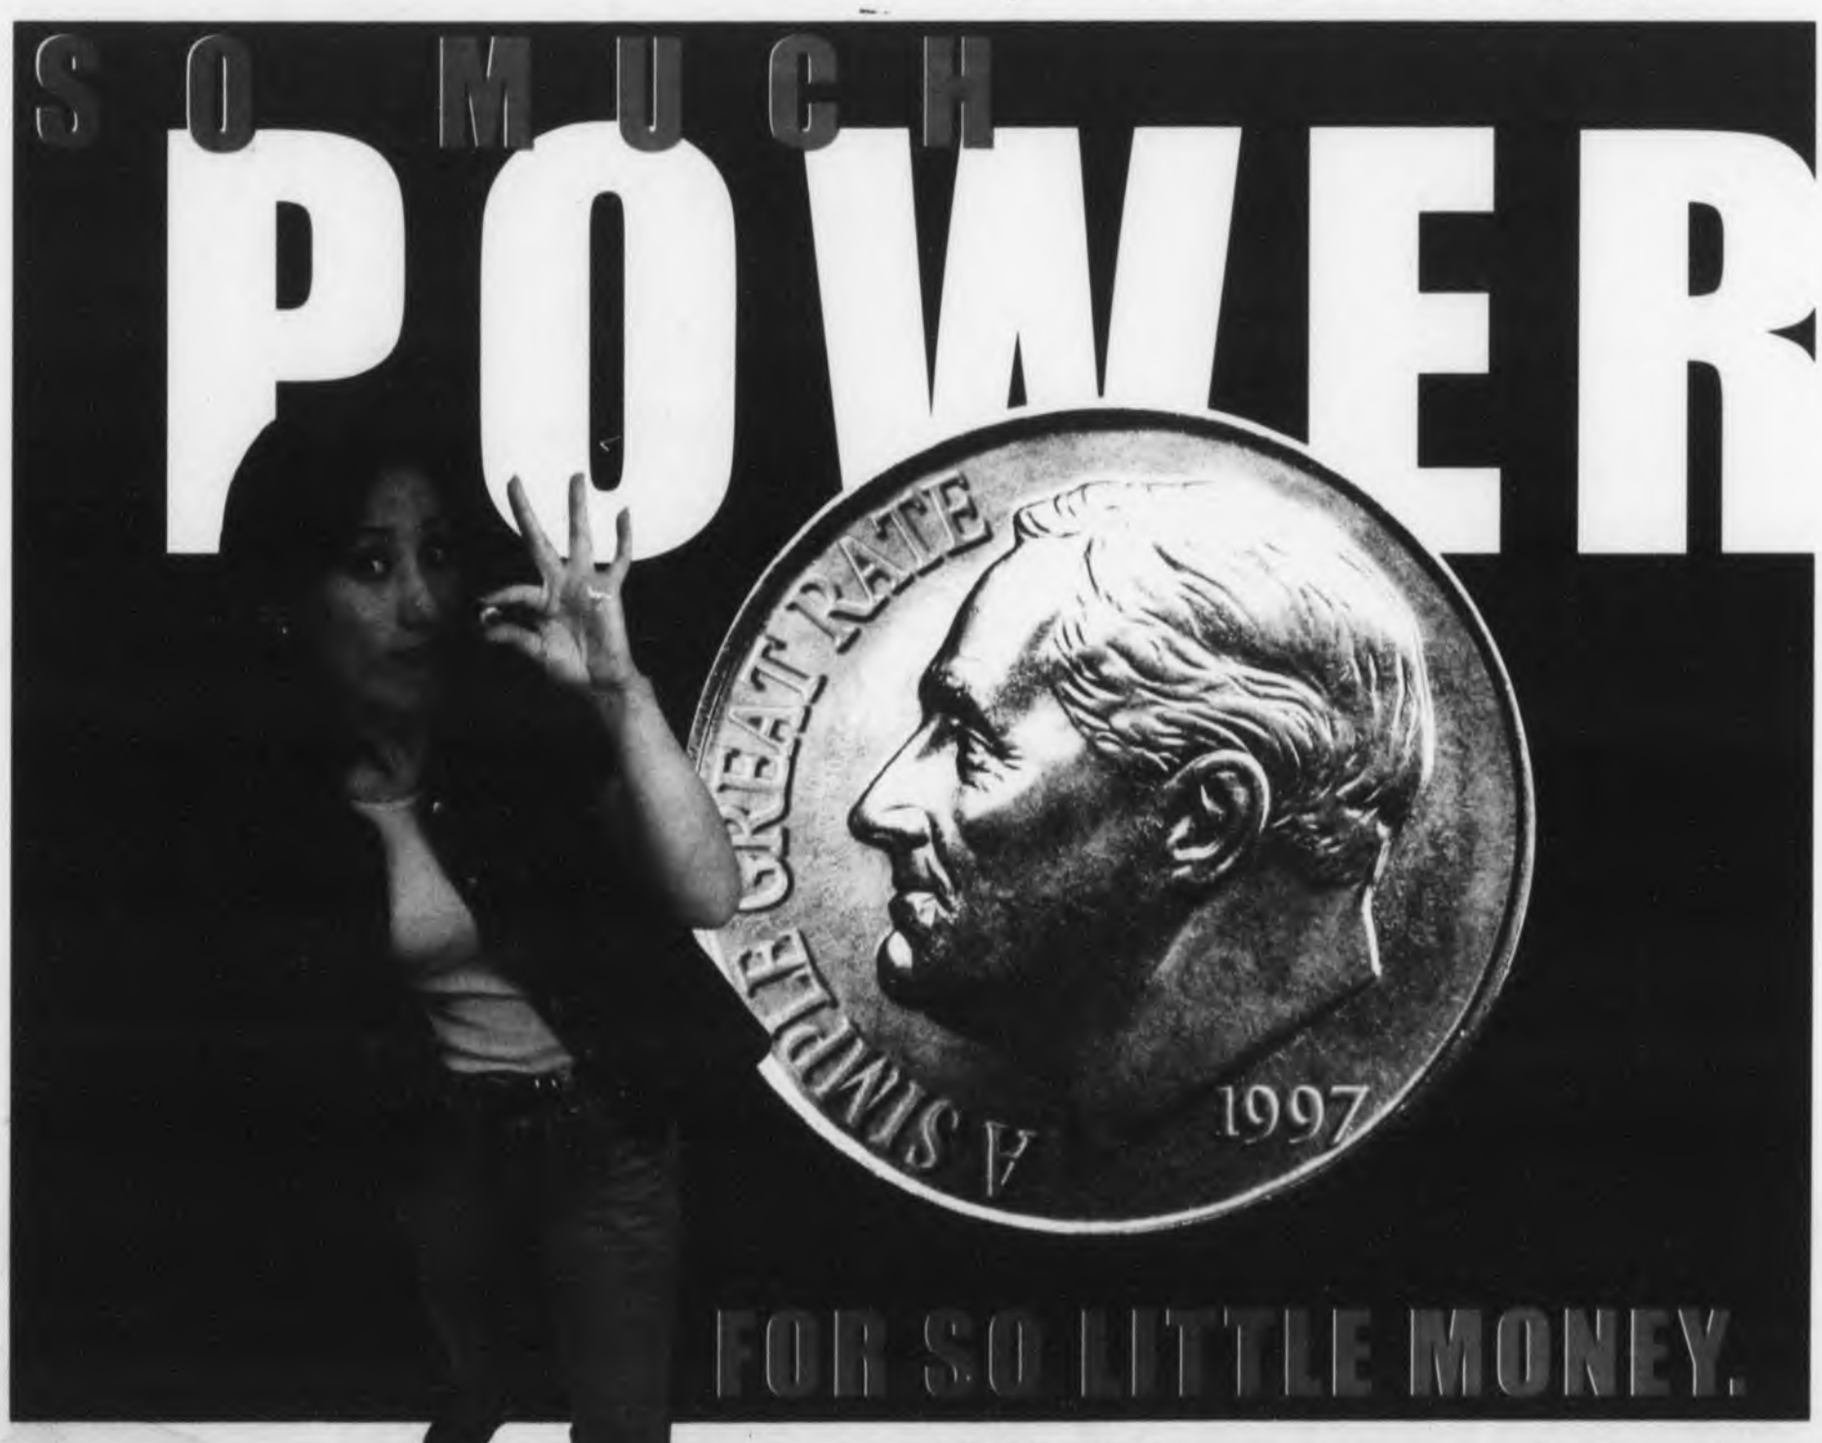
"Our quiet Northview neighborhood is something that we feel about passionately," Barkey said.

The association suggested several other points against Cohen-Esrey. These included increased traffic, increased loads on schools and demographic problems with the development.

The neighborhood also questioned the classification of the housing project. The developer proposed the project would be medium density, but area residents said the actual number of residents to usable land ratio placed it in the high-density category.

The opposition raised questions about Cohen-Esrey's financial stability. If they do build, the developer will be responsible for maintaining the complex. Speakers cited state documents suggesting that Cohen-Esrey's finances were not stable.

Another concern was area recreational facilities. Residents argued the pool and parks were not designed for the increased demands the new housing would place on them. Further, the city had not budgeted any increased funds to meet the need.



Residents also expressed outrage about the plans to bus children to other schools rather than neighborhood schools. Concerns about safety and keeping neighbors in contact came up.

The neighborhood summarized its standing with a question. "The question we see proposed to this board is, is it a good idea?" they asked.

Cats schedule leaves much to be desired

▸ K-STATE NEEDS TO PLAY top-caliber opponents to legitimize team.

VIEWPOINT

DAN MERKER

DAN MERKER is a senior in computer science. You can send your e-mail comments to Dan at dmerker@ksu.edu.

I mean no offense to the Huskies, Bobcats or Falcons.

Who are they, you ask? These teams, Northern Illinois, Ohio University and Bowling Green, make up the non conference portion of the Wildcats' football schedule this season.

I know most people don't need any information on any of these perennial powerhouses, but I feel obligated.

They are all in the Mid-American Conference. Of these teams, only Bowling Green has a winning record in the 90s. Remember back in 1995? The Cats beat NIU 44-0, and the Huskies' MAC rival Akron 67-0. Why not just bring in Manhattan High?

They might score.

Despite high expectations, it appears the Wildcat football program is still viewed as kind of a Cinderella team. It's time for a change of mind. While the Cats' recent success is great, it's time to make the next step and progress into one of the true elite teams in the nation.

There is a big step that has to be taken to exceed another 9-2 season, which suddenly has become rather routine. I mean no disrespect to the Cats — that's quite an accomplishment. They can do more, though.

I'm talking about beating Colorado and Nebraska.

That should be the immediate goal of the program. Doing so would almost guarantee a trip to the Big 12 Championship game, but beating them takes a full year of preparation.

They must eliminate Northern Illinois, Bowling Green and the like from their schedule. One, maybe two, of these games is fine.

They would be like preseason games for NFL teams. The Cats can get used to playing against unfriendly competition again and have fun.

They need to get down to business for their other non conference games, though. They should at least step up and play mediocre teams from the better conferences in the country. Teams such as Minnesota and North Carolina State can at least put up good competition, if not more (just ask Syracuse).

Every few years, the Cats should play a top-15 team out of conference. If they beat a very good team early, K-State would get more respect in the polls and have the confidence necessary to beat the perennial Big 12 powers.

> "They should at least step up and play mediocre teams from the better conferences in the country."

Regardless of the results, a more difficult non conference schedule would prepare the Cats for their usual first conference game, Nebraska.

With their traditional non conference schedule, K-State is simply not being prepared well enough to play in a pretty good conference.

The Wildcats can compete with the elite teams, but not after playing inferior opponents regularly.

It takes them a while to get used to the speed, intensity and quality of play. After getting used to the pace of the game, they play fine but are already too far behind to realistically come back.

They usually play Colorado much later in the season than Nebraska and are generally much more competitive against the Buffs.

I find it no coincidence that this is after getting used to the increased quality of play of the conference.

A lot of teams wish they would have the "problem" of trying to bust out of the 9-2 regular-season funk, but it's time for more. It might mean taking a few lumps in the process, but the team would be better for it.

Arizona State shocked Nebraska last season with a 16-0 victory in Tempe. That much everyone knows.

It took a 77-28 thumping in 1995 from the same Cornhuskers to toughen the Sun Devils, and they nearly ended up with a national championship a year later for their efforts. It would take a similar sacrifice by the Cats to be able to step up to the next level.

With heavy losses on both sides of the ball, Saturday marks the beginning of a new era.

Youth Movement

"NOW THE DOOR IS OPEN. THE LIGHT IS THERE. THEY'RE GOING TO GET TO PLAY. GAME WEEK HARBORS A SIGNIFICANT FEELING."

BILL SNYDER, K-STATE FOOTBALL HEAD COACH

Spring practices ease players into the summer training schedule, which prepare them for the fall's two-a-day sessions.

But "winter" arrives in the form of the first game, and Coach Bill Snyder said his squad is more than ready for that 6:30 p.m. kickoff Saturday.

"It's game week. These guys have been knocking heads against each other for three weeks," Snyder said. "Now the door is open. The light is there. They're going to get to play. Game week harbors a significant feeling."

So significant, in fact, that certain players step out and demonstrate they want to be the ones on the field after that first kickoff. Defensively, Snyder said things are looking good.

"I've been really pleased with Damion McIntosh," Snyder said. "Andrae Rowe, a transfer student who really has picked up the pace, I'm also pleased with the progress that he has made. Darren Howard as well. Probably those two interior people have made the most progress in the period of time that we've been here."

The middle linebacker position has been a consistent battle between Garden City Community College's Jeff Kelly and sophomore Turelle Williams.

Snyder said a decision had been made, but the players didn't know at press conference time. He said both of them will play.

The linebacker bookends, duties shared by junior Travis Ochs and sophomore Mark Simoneau, are two positions Snyder said he forgets to worry about.

"It's unfair to say that about players like Travis and Mark, but they're so consistent that sometimes you don't even know they're there," Snyder said. "That's no slight whatsoever on their ability. They make very few mistakes. When people aren't making mistakes, they may not look flashy, but they're always getting the job done, and those guys have done that."

One battle that hasn't been won yet is the wide receiver duel. Snyder was still looking for someone to step up and deem himself as ready to play.

"To be honest, I'm not overly impressed with any of them at this particular point in time," Snyder said. "I know that they're capable, but I'm not real happy with them. They just have to practice better. If they don't, then we'll play with two tight ends and three running backs."

Running backs are plentiful on the 1997 roster, and the starting man will be one who sat out the entire 1996 season: senior Eric Hickson. However, Snyder said the entire core is solid.

"We'll start Eric Hickson," Snyder said. "Towards the end of the spring, I really saw him gain a step or two of quickness and closer to the year before. Hickson gives us consistency at that position."

Junior Marlon Charles has been looking good lately and will also see playing time.

"I'm pleased with Marlon as well," Snyder said.

"He isn't forgotten in the package," he said.

Snyder didn't specifically mention last year's starter, senior Mike Lawrence, but Lawrence will contribute to the position's depth factor.

"The depth (at this position) is formidable for our program," Snyder said. "All three of them are going to help us. All three of them are going to play and all three will be instrumental in our season."

Injuries aren't holding players out at this time.

Despite senior center Kendyl Jacox's surgery a short time ago, Snyder said Jacox would likely start against Northern Illinois.

Place kicker Martin Gramatica returns from an injury last season to assume extra-point and field-goal duties.

"Martin's gaining his strength back, and he can hit the ball the distance," Snyder said. The question of who will kick off still lingers.

The main question fans had regarding the starting quarterback has been answered, but Snyder said it remains to be seen how junior transfer Michael Bishop will respond in Division-I game situations.

"He's a poised young guy," Snyder said. "He has some leadership capabilities. He has a good strong arm throwing the football. I think he's making a pretty steady improvement."

Junior Joe Bob Clements said Bishop brings many talents to the table.

"Bishop has the ability to run, but he's got to learn the complicated offense," Clements said.

However, the quarterbacks haven't put too many balls in the wideout targets' hands, although Snyder said he knows the players will improve.

"Well, if you bounce it off their helmet, I give the quarterback a plus and the receiver a minus," Snyder said. "In all fairness, they will get better. They'll make an effort to do better."

Since the receivers aren't catching balls, the secondary is also a point of concern.

"If our receivers were better, I might have a better idea, but I don't know," Snyder said. "Until those guys can line up and play, they can't be tested."

Senior Demetric Denmark and sophomore Lamar Chapman haven't been in the system for a while, but Snyder said they're doing well.

Battles at strong safety and cornerback are tight, but Snyder indicated senior Monty Spiller and redshirt freshman Adrian Beard would receive starting nods.

Old hats and rookie players alike, Clements said no one discounts Saturday's game as an "easy" one.

"We're definitely not taking anybody for granted," Clements said. "Coach (Jon) Fabris was coaching a team that was 0-8-1, and they were barely behind Nebraska 12-16 in the fourth quarter the year Nebraska won the championship."

It seems all the players had heard stories like this one, and Snyder confirmed it.

"Our team has observed that teams who maybe aren't anticipated to do quite as well sometimes jump up and do extremely well," Snyder said.

"We've always believed anybody can beat anybody at any given time, and that's true in this ball game."

But now that "winter" has finally arrived, every player is ready to deliver a cold blow to anyone not wearing a Powercat on his helmet.

"It's going to be nice," Clements said.

Cross country teams open with first-year coach, abundance of youth

▸ SEASON OPENS SATURDAY WITH a meet against Fort Hays State and Nebraska.

MICHAEL RYAN
staff writer

The K-State men's and women's cross country teams open the season tomorrow with a triangular meet at Warner Park against Fort Hays State and Nebraska. The meet, scheduled to start at 2 p.m., is the only home meet of the season for the Wildcats.

First-year head coach Randy Cole will use this meet as a spring training of sorts for his young and inexperienced team.

Cole said 10 freshmen, six men and four women, will compete in their first collegiate meet this weekend.

"I want them to get used to race preparation at this level," Cole said.

"I want to see who likes to compete, and I also want to see where everybody is at," Cole said.

Cole's main goal this year is to a build a solid foundation for the future and to establish a good long-distance program.

Getting the freshmen to develop a good work ethic and have the whole team improve each week are other goals Cole wants to achieve.

"We want to win this year, but the important thing is progression week after week. We want to build a nucleus for the future," Cole said.

The men are led by returning juniors Zach Davies and Brent Stover. Last year Davies finished 26th at the District V championships and Stover finished 40th. With no seniors on the roster, Cole will look to them for leadership for this young team.

"They have established themselves as leaders through good work habits and good attitudes," Cole said.

Stover and Davies are excited about their new head coach.

"I think he's a great coach," Stover said. "He runs a tight ship, and he lets us know what's expected of us."

"He's very structured," Davies said. "Everyone on the team respects him. He's what you want in a coach."

The leaders in fall workouts for the women have been returning sophomore Kelly Andra and true freshman Annie Wetterhus, a high school state champion from Illinois. Cole also mentioned Allison Canny, Anita Hallauer and Kathryn Wolfram as solid returnees.

K-State travels to Lawrence Sept. 13 for the Jayhawk Invitational.

Courtship of George adds spice to old rivalry

The savior? Both the Kansas City Chiefs and Oakland Raiders pursued quarterback Jeff George in the winter months. The Raiders won out, but the Chiefs can extract some measure of revenge with a win Monday in Oakland.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. — The Kansas City Chiefs wooed Jeff George. The Oakland Raiders won him.

Not that the bitter rivalry between the Chiefs and Raiders needed any more stoking, but the courtship of the controversial quarterback has added an extra element of drama as the AFC West rivals head into Monday night's game.

George, a free agent after being dumped by the Atlanta Falcons midway through last season, interviewed with the Chiefs last winter. When the Raiders became interested, George stopped talking to Kansas City.

"We got him," Raiders coach Joe Bugel said. "I don't think there was any question he was coming here."

George was looking for a new home after being suspended for most of last season following a sideline tirade at Atlanta coach June Jones during a nationally televised game.

He visited Kansas City, meeting with Coach Marty Schottenheimer and general manager Carl Peterson and hanging out with players such as Derrick Thomas. Then the Raiders called, and George told agent Leigh Steinberg to stop all other talks.

George ended up signing a five-year, $27.5 million contract with the Raiders. The Chiefs ended up taking Elvis Grbac away from the San Francisco 49ers.

Both quarterbacks were losers last weekend in their debuts, but George had a much more impressive afternoon.

George was 21 of 37 for 298 yards and three touchdown passes to Tim Brown in the Raiders' 24-21 overtime loss at Tennessee. Grbac was 14 of 25 for 115 yards, with an interception, in the Chiefs' 19-3 loss at Denver.

Grbac was slowed by an abdominal injury in preseason. Wide receiver Brett Perriman, signed as a free agent from Detroit, saw little action in training camp and missed the game against Denver because of a hamstring problem.

Perriman practiced this week, and the Chiefs hope he will start on Monday.

"We're still not where we need to be," Schottenheimer said. "We still haven't put all the timing together that you need to do if you want to throw the ball efficiently."

The Chiefs might not need to pass effectively to move the ball on the Raiders, who gave up 255 yards on the ground to Tennessee, including 216 yards by tailback Eddie George.

"After seeing us give up 216 yards, they may change their whole game plan," said Raiders free safety Eddie Anderson. "If there's a breakdown somewhere, teams are going to attack that until you show you can stop it."

Thomas, who has had 74 tackles, 14 sacks and five forced fumbles in 16 games against the Raiders, is probable for the game with a left tricep injury. When the linebacker plays, he'll get plenty of attention from the Raiders, now that Chiefs defensive linemen Neil Smith and Dan Saleaumua are gone.

The game will be tailback Marcus Allen's last regular-season contest in front of a Raiders crowd. Allen, now a role player for the Chiefs who has announced he will retire at the end of the season, spent 11 years with the Raiders and has had some of his best games for Kansas City while facing his former team.

The Chiefs have won 13 of their 15 games against the Raiders in the 1990s, but their seven-game winning streak against Oakland ended last December, when the Raiders won 26-7 at home.

The Chiefs-Raiders "hate rivalry," as Bugel calls it, dates back to the 1960s. The Raiders lead the series 36-35-2, and the animosity remains strong for players who have been with Kansas City or Oakland for several years.

"It's Raiders week. That's always special around here," said Chiefs guard Dave Szott. "We've got rivalries with other teams, too, like Denver. But you learn quick that, to the fans, the Raiders are special."

Players with less experience don't have that same sense of history.

"I get up for playing Kansas City because they're a good team and an aggressive defense," said Raiders tailback Napoleon Kaufman. "But I ain't been here that long to have a grudge against them."

Greg Townsend, who played for the Raiders from 1983-93 and returned this season after two years out of the NFL, remembers bench-clearing brawls in the 1980s.

"You get a guy my age, I know what the rivalry's about. Some of the young guys, they don't know about the rivalry," said the 35-year-old defensive end. "But in a nutshell, this team needs a win. The rivalry is worth nothing no more. I think everyone we play against is a rival."

Colorado State wide receiver has score to settle with Buffs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Fort Collins, Colo. — Geoff Turner has a personal score to settle with University of Colorado football when Colorado State plays the No. 8 Buffaloes Saturday in Boulder.

It dates back to 1994 when the Rams' top receiver played for Iowa State.

"I carried the ball once in our game in Boulder," Turner said. "I got tackled by Matt Russell, broke my leg on the play and never got back in the game again.

"I'd like to make up for it with a big night against them," he said. "More importantly, I would to make enough of a contribution for us to win the ball game."

Turner, who caught six passes for 99 yards and a touchdown a week ago against the University of Nevada, wasn't around in 1995 when the Rams last visited Folsom Field. He spent that season on the sidelines after transferring from Iowa State to Colorado State.

Last year, Turner had more of an effect, catching eight passes for 157 yards. Twice he got behind Colorado cornerbacks for touchdown receptions from Moses Moreno.

"Turner is a real game," said Colorado coach Rick Neuheisel. "You have to be aware of him at all times on the field or pay the consequences."

The responsibility will be borne by the same two cornerbacks Turner beat last year, Toray Davis and Marcus Washington.

"They are both fast, gifted players with a lot of athleticism," Turner said. "That's the only kind of cornerback Colorado brings into its program."

None of that seems to bother Turner, a 5-foot-8-inch, 191-pound senior who always seems to find ways of beating taller, faster opposition.

"I'm not Jerry Rice, I don't run a 4.3 40 and I'm not 6-2," said the Urbandale, Iowa, high school graduate.

"I get it done using a combination of hard work, determination, focus and wanting it more than the guy defending me."

Colorado State coach Sonny Lubick insists its more heart and determination than anything else.

"I've never been around a player as intense and so full of belief in himself that he can get it done," Lubick said, "sometimes to a point where he almost puts himself in danger."

Turner takes great pleasure in making the catches where he leaves his body fully extended and vulnerable to big hits from defensive backs. He plays with equal abandon on special teams, enough that Lubick took Turner off at least the punt coverage unit.

"We had him running down punt returners and he became the best we had," Lubick said. "The punishment was taking his toll so I had to take him off that unit."

Turner still returns punts and kicks for the Rams.

He has been an unexpected find going to Colorado State after former Iowa State coach Jim Walden made the suggestion to Lubick. Walden stepped down as coach of the Cyclones and was trying to find a program for Turner and running back Calvin Branch.

"Jim and I have been friends for 15 years. He called and told me there were two players that were probably leaving Iowa State, Calvin Branch and Geoff Turner," Lubick said. "He said they were great young guys. All I asked was are they good character kids. They were and certainly exceeded my expectations.

"Geoff has better speed than people think. He works hard every day. He is strong, he can run over defensive backs who are trying to impress him and knock him around."

Turner figures to be a key to any hope of the Rams beating Colorado. Colorado State managed only 81 rushing yards in the game a year ago, forcing the Rams to count heavily on the passing combination of Moses Moreno to Turner and the same should be true this year.

"I have to have a big game, so do the other wide receivers, our offensive line and running backs," Turner said. "If we come away with a victory it is going to be a total team effort and a way for us to get a measure of respect from Colorado."

And a chance for him to settle a personal score.

Experts fear El Nino phenomenon will harm marine life along coast

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MONTEREY, Calif. — Fish experts fear that the weather phenomenon known as El Nino, now brewing in the Pacific Ocean, could devastate salmon and other species along the West Coast.

"We should really pay attention to this one, because it looks like the El Nino of the century," said Jim Martin, a salmon expert in the Oregon governor's office.

Martin was among the 2,000 researchers and fisheries experts attending the American Fisheries Society's annual meeting Aug. 25 in Monterey. They were appalled to hear a federal weather forecaster warn that the latest El Nino is on track to be more severe than the one that hammered the West Coast 15 years ago.

Elbert Friday Jr., assistant administrator of the National Office of Oceanic and Atmospheric Research, said the Pacific is warming at a faster rate than it did before the El Nino of 1982-83, which was considered the century's strongest.

And there are other threatening clues, including wind, the depth of the warm surface water and appearance of warm-water fish on the central California coast.

Many in the audience of several hundred gasped or groaned when Friday displayed a chart comparing this year's El Nino with the one 15 years ago.

Martin said coho salmon off Northern California and the Pacific Northwest were nailed when the weather changed.

"The effects this would have both on freshwater and ocean fisheries would be profound," Kristin Merriman-Clarke, editor of the society's magazine Fisheries, said.

El Nino is an oceanic and weather phenomenon that occurs in the tropical Pacific every few years. It was given its name, which means the Christ child, by Peruvians 200 years ago when they noticed ocean warming at Christmas time.

The change can cause unusual or more severe weather over a large part of the world, leading to above-normal rainfall in some areas and drought in others, while affecting crops and fish populations.

In the winter of 1982-83, El Nino opened up the entire West Coast to a greater-than-usual number of storms, Friday said. That caused flooding and mudslides in California and affected fish and marine mammals.

"It brought great changes," Friday said. "It completely wiped out some fisheries' stocks that year."

Many species of fish suffer because they depend on cold, nutrient-rich water welling up from the depths. The warmer, nutrient-poor water keeps it from rising far enough. Some fish migrate to colder, richer water. Others simply don't survive.

The latest El Nino already is affecting fish populations, Friday said in an interview after his talk.

Fish such as albacore and marlin — usually found no farther north than Santa Catalina Island — are being caught off the central California coast, Friday said.

But the West Coast isn't the only area to feel El Nino's effect. While California can expect to see storms, the Southwest and South can expect a cooler, rainier winter while the Pacific Northwest is likely to have below-normal rain and snow, Friday said.

NOAA also foresees warmer-than-usual weather in early 1998 for southern Australia and the Sahel region of Africa. Meanwhile, southern Africa and the Amazon basin are in for heavy rain.

Fish are also at risk. Previous occurrences have damaged fisheries off the western coast of South America.

Experts are also concerned about cod populations in the North Atlantic and the Gulf Coast's red drum, said Charles Coutant, president of the American Fisheries Society and a research ecologist at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee.

K-State alumni to wed at Renaissance Festival

ANGELA BUCCIGROSSI
staff reporter

When he bent down on his knee and asked her, how could she refuse? He was the one and this was their special place.

Almost two years after Mark Whitehill asked Karissa Lundgrin to marry him at the Kansas City Renaissance Festival, the two will be returning there Sunday to exchange wedding vows.

As May graduates of K-State, Lundgrin in park resource management and Whitehill in information systems, the two met in class and began visiting the Festival together.

"I never thought that guy in English class would be the one," Lundgrin said.

But the years of attending the Festival led to a romantic surprise proposal and now, a wedding.

The Renaissance Festival is set in the era of Queen Elizabeth I and portrays the time period through the costumes, crafts, food and entertainment. They have sword fights, jousting matches, roaming jesters and pompous kings. The Festival tries to replicate the historical time of knighthood and chivalry.

This atmosphere immediately attracted the couple and sparked an interest that has now transformed into a fully costumed 16th-century renaissance wedding.

"It's awesome. I fell in love with it the first time I went there," Lundgrin said.

The entire wedding party and almost all of the hundred-some guests will be fully costumed for the ceremony and reception. Some have bought or rented their costumes, but many have made their outfits.

"Almost everything has been handmade," Lundgrin said. "People have really gotten in to it."

The groom's mother, Donna Whitehill, spent a little more than 10 days straight working on her costume, she said.

The bride and groom will both be dressed in handmade black velvet costumes with gold trim.

"When we dressed up before I was always a peasant, but now I finally get to be a queen. I'll be royalty," Lundgrin said.

Along with the costumes, the bride will be driven into the chapel in a white carriage built for her by her brother, and guests will dine on a cake in the form of a renaissance castle.

The Festival provides many couples with the opportunity to have their wedding be different and non-traditional. The Festival has lots of different options for couples interested in a renaissance wedding and many choose it because it's romantic and flexible, Anderson, festival wedding coordinator, said.

"There are three places to have a wedding. You can be married in the Royal Gardens, the Queen's Pavilion or the Chapel. It's a complete 16th-century chapel," Anderson said. "Also it's reasonable, and we can tailor it to fit whatever you want."

For Lundgrin's and Whitehill's families, the wedding has been surprising and fun.

"At first, I thought they were kidding," Donna Whitehill said. "But now we can't wait. It's going to be a big deal."

As Sunday draws nearer, the final fittings are being done and the minister is practicing saying the words thee and thou to authenticate a renaissance wedding ceremony. The years of attending the Festival and the months spent planning are finally coming together for the couple.

"It has character and persona," Lundgrin said. "It will be a great memory in my life."

remembering Princess Diana

STORIES BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Jeweler claims Fayed gave Princess Diana diamond ring

PARIS — Love apparently blessed Princess Diana in her final hours. A Paris jeweler said he created a $200,000 diamond ring Dodi Fayed gave to Diana during dinner Saturday night at the Ritz Hotel, just before they died in a car crash.

Queen Elizabeth II, pressed by British papers to make a show of grief, announced she will speak to the nation on Friday, the day before Diana's funeral in London.

The Paris jeweler, quoted in The Sun Thursday, said he created an extraordinary diamond ring that Fayed gave to Diana that fateful night.

"He told me how much he was in love with the princess and he wanted to spend the rest of his life with her," jeweler Alberto Repossi was quoted as saying.

Fayed had asked him to create "a ring of the like that had never been seen before," Repossi said. The $205,400 ring was found in the wrecked car, according to The Sun.

When contacted today by The Associated Press, Repossi refused to confirm or deny reports of the ring, but a shop employee, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the ring had been sold to Fayed.

> (Fayed) told me how much he was in love with the princess and he wanted to spend the rest of his life with her.
> • Alberto Repossi jeweler who claims Fayed used a $200,000 diamond ring to propose to Princess Diana

Press Association, the British national news agency, said the ring was turned over to Diana's sisters when they went to Paris to recover the body Monday, and it is now at Kensington Palace, Diana's London home.

The Italian celebrity magazine Chi reported that a day before the fatal car crash, Princess Diana told supermodel Cindy Crawford that Fayed had brought her happiness for the first time in her life.

Diana called Crawford while on her Mediterranean cruise with Fayed, Crawford was quoted by Chi as saying.

Crawford said when she asked Diana how she was feeling, Diana replied, "I am immensely happy. You know, I'm serious. For the first time in my life I can say I am really happy. Dodi is a fantastic man. He fills me with attention and care. I again feel loved."

Buckingham Palace more than tripled the length of Saturday's funeral procession today to allow as many people as possible to share in the massive public grieving. The procession will proceed through central London to Westminster Abbey along a 3 1/2-mile route.

The abbey announced that Elton John will put new lyrics to his song "Candle in the Wind" and perform that special version at Diana's funeral. The two had been friends.

British papers, meanwhile, criticized the queen and the royal family for failing to respond to the public outpouring of grief. "Speak to us Ma'am," one headlined today. "Show us you care," another said.

The queen's spokesman responded with a rare public television appearance.

"The queen has asked me to say that the royal family have been hurt by suggestions that they are indifferent to the country's sorrow at the tragic death of the Princess of Wales," spokesman Geoffrey Crawford told the BBC.

The queen has remained with Prince Charles and her grandsons Prince William, 15, and Prince Harry, 12, at Balmoral Castle in Scotland.

"The princess was a much loved national figure, but she was also a mother whose sons miss her deeply. Prince William and Prince Harry themselves want to be with their father and grandparents at this time in the quiet haven of Balmoral," Crawford said.

"As their grandmother, the queen is helping the princes to come to terms with their loss, as they prepare themselves for the public ordeal of mourning their mother with the nation on Saturday."

Diana's brother-in-law, Prince Edward, signed a book of condolences today at St. James's Palace, where thousands of mourners have waited hours in line to pay their respects. He was whisked in a side door.

As Britain mourned, French police detained three more photographers today in the investigation of the crash that killed Diana, Fayed and their chauffeur in a Paris tunnel early Sunday.

The three photographers, whose identities were not revealed, knew they were being sought and turned themselves in at Paris police headquarters.

They can be held for up to 48 hours without charges being filed.

Meanwhile, another photographer sought to counter claims he was trying to shove his way to professional glory at the accident scene.

"I tried to help, just to see if they were still alive," said Romuald Rat of the Gamma agency, explaining on French television why he opened a door of the mangled car before police arrived.

Rat is one of seven people — six photographers and a press motorcyclist — placed under formal investigation Tuesday for manslaughter and failure to help the victims, an obligation under French law.

"I'M TERRIBLE, AND I'M SORRY. BUT SHE WAS A JUST A HUMAN LIKE EVERYONE ELSE. MAYBE IF JESUS CHRIST DIED I'D CLOSE MY SHOP ..."
DAVID MASON, RESTAURANTEER AND POET ABOUT THE GRIEVING PERIOD

People debate length of time grieving cycle should take following Princess Diana's death

NORWICH, England — The lines are shorter outside London, but all the rest is the same: the red-rimmed eyes, roses, farewells in a leather book and a half-guilty urge to get it over with.

"It's the same everywhere in England, absolutely everywhere," Carole Howes said, waiting by a blaze of flowers carpeting the grimy steps of Norwich City Hall for her turn at a condolence book. "People loved Diana so."

Norwich is typical heartland Britain. Off beyond the fens northeast of London, it is a lovely medieval city, which once boasted a pub for every day of the year and a church for every Sunday.

A subdued mood pervaded the old market, a rabbit warren of fruit stalls, racks of cheap clothes and lunch counters offering a specialty, mushy peas.

At the 1,000-year-old stone cathedral, under a towering spire, mourners crowded a side chapel ablaze in candlelight and stained-glass hues to pray for the fallen princess.

"We all feel like we knew her personally, just from the TV," Howes said at City Hall, before sitting down by a flickering candle and framed portrait to write her last words to the princess.

"She was so nice to everyone," added her 11-year-old daughter, Carly, who seemed as stricken as her mother.

Just as in London, grief had its limits.

"It's a tragedy and all that, but they're going a bit over the top," said Ian Smithe, a student in health care. "There are other tragedies."

Until news of Diana's death came Sunday, he said, Norwich was shaken by the murder of a 12-year-old boy, abducted and later found 50 miles from home on Aug. 22.

"That poor little bugger died at the hands of a pervert, and everyone's forgotten about him," Smith said. "Isn't he about the same age as Diana's sons?"

At Jarrod's Department Store, Hannah Drake sold out of Diana biographies days ago.

"People around here are big-time upset," she said, "and I'm no particular fan of hers. How long can this go on?"

Still, sadness is all over, in unlikely places.

At Chi-Chi Restaurant, Tanya Stafford slung fajitas and margaritas with a happy smile, but the mention of Diana changed her mood.

"Just the other day, I was thinking she must be the luckiest woman in the world, able to go off wherever she wants on a whim," she said. "I guess not. It makes you think."

Near City Hall, a gruff and grizzled flower seller grew moist-eyed when asked about sales. He'd had a run on lilies, mums and everything else, and was embarrassed at profiting from tragedy.

"We didn't know how much we would miss her," said the vendor, Paddy Eagle. "It's like losing your parents. You abuse them, forget about them and then, all of a sudden, they're gone forever."

Norwich mourners line up at 7:30 each morning.

By 10:30 p.m., when City Hall closes, others are still there.

Later, the queen's representative in Norfolk County will bring the three condolence books to Buckingham Palace.

The procedure is similar in cities and sizable towns all across Britain. In uncounted tiny villages, grief is less organized, but the mood is equally mixed.

"There's no line here," said Beryl Sands, with a tight chuckle, outside St. Catherine's, a Norman stone church in Ludham, on the maze of inland waterways east of Norwich.

In the empty church, a thin condolence book lies open on an oaken table, next to a candle and someone's glasses. A plaque nearby lists the church's vicars since Robert de Gloucester in 1214.

Across the road, restaurateur-poet David Mason is wary of the enthusiastic entries from mourners who pause at the church, in ones and twos.

"It's terrible, and I'm sorry," said Mason. "But she was just a human like everyone else. Maybe if Jesus Christ died I'd close my shop, but Diana was only a woman."

Sophie Bridges, however, is not so sure. She is to be married in the old church on Saturday, the day of Diana's funeral, and long-standing plans have changed.

There will be no customary joyous wedding bells that day, in Ludham or anywhere else. Sophie's groom, a Royal Air Force officer, had scheduled a flyover of jets.

"I don't mind, really," she said, her eyes still red from signing the book. "The funeral is at 11 and the wedding at 2:30. We can grieve in the morning and then get on with our lives."

Coca-Cola accountant sentenced

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AKRON, Ohio — A former accountant at a Coca-Cola bottling company who tampered with a batch of the soft drink, threatening to make the action public if he was not paid off, was sentenced to a year in prison.

Neil Francis Roberts, 47, pleaded guilty June 25 in U.S. District Court to one count of tampering with a consumer product with the intent to cause serious harm to a business.

U.S. Attorney Emily Sweeney announced Wednesday's sentencing in a statement. Roberts could have received up to three years in prison and a $200,000 fine.

The public was never in any danger, company officials and prosecutors said.

Roberts, who worked for the Coca-Cola distribution plant in Akron, told his employer in March that he had placed an unspecified substance inside a small batch of Coke, prosecutors said.

According to the indictment, Roberts showed a company official a videotape in which he appeared to add a substance to the product.

Roberts threatened to release the tape to the media if he was not paid off over a six-year period, prosecutors said. The amount of money he demanded was not disclosed.

Instead of paying, company officials went to the authorities.

Roberts eventually admitted that he had made sure the 19 containers he tampered with were not shipped. Tests on the containers showed the only thing that was added was sugar water.

He was originally charged with extortion as well as tampering, but that charge was dropped as part of the plea bargain.

Roberts did not immediately return a message left at his home Thursday seeking comment.

Kevin P. Morris, a public affairs vice president for the bottler, said today that the company was glad to have the case resolved.

"It was a very unfortunate incident," he said. "As far as we're concerned, the matter is behind us."

All seven could face up to five years in prison and fines.

The paparazzi have been accused not only of precipitating the accident with their frenzied motorcycle pursuit of Diana but of hampering police access to the mangled car.

Rat and one other photographer have had their press cards and driver's licenses removed and are forbidden to work until the case is resolved. But after remaining silent for several days, the photographers are now speaking out.

"I saw the princess sitting on the floor, her back to me. I said in English to stay calm, that I was there, that help would arrive," Rat told France-2 television.

Rat's boss, Didier Contant, said earlier that his photographer had taken Diana's pulse.

Diana's driver, Ritz security man Henri Paul, was legally drunk at the time of the accident and reportedly had taunted photographers to try and keep up with his Mercedes.

The lone survivor of the accident, bodyguard Trevor Rees-Jones, remained hospitalized with serious injuries today. Press reports said it will be weeks before police can question him because of his severe injuries.

A police report, published by the Le Figaro newspaper, said photographers pushed back the first officer to arrive at the scene. It did not identify the photographers.

But Contant said of Rat: "He has no photo of the accident."

"None of the photos he took were taken before help arrived," Contant added.

- The acting mayor of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, renamed a road in an upscale district "Rua Diana Princesa de Gales," or "Diana Princess of Wales Road."
- Russia's leading diamond-producing company has named its latest find — a giant 64.22-carat diamond — after Diana.
- A New Jersey couple who hired Diana as a baby sitter in London before she entered the royal spotlight have been invited to the funeral, WCBS radio in New York reported.
- Mary Robertson, who lived in London in 1980, told The Associated Press she paid Diana $5 an hour at the time to baby-sit her 1-year-old son.

K-State scientists to monitor Colbert Hills project

▶ RESEARCHERS TO CHART possible environmental threats from golf course.

JOHN HENDERSON
senior staff writer

When the Colbert Hills golf course is built on the prairie northwest of Manhattan, the whole ecosystem will change.

Short grasses for the fairways will replace the native tall grasses, making the land greener and more suited for recreation. The land will be sculpted somewhat, but the developers will try to keep the movement of soil to a minimum.

The development of new housing around the course brings the promise of a boost in Manhattan's economy.

But change will occur. The delicate ecosystem of 1,040 acres of prairie will be disrupted. Plants will be uprooted. Animals and insects will be forced out of their habitats.

And, according to Robert Robel, professor of biology at K-State, birds will probably die.

When the change occurs, however, scientists from K-State will be there to monitor it. The study is already under way, and the ground has yet to be broken.

Steve Thien, a soil scientist and professor of agronomy at K-State, is coordinating the efforts of several faculty, graduate and undergraduate students to study the land itself.

Colbert Hills is an unusual opportunity for research in all fields, including agronomy, wildlife biology, civil engineering and entomology, he said.

"I don't know of another situation where a golf course has gone in and there's been such a concentrated effort by scientists to study the site before, during and after construction," he said. "It just hasn't been documented before."

Thien said the area is being studied by agronomists to establish baseline levels of organic matter in the soil, porosity of the soil, microbial life and other indicators of soil quality.

Working with him directly are K-State researchers Mickey Ransom and Chuck Rice, and Bill Wehmueller, agent with the Natural Resources Conservation Service, a division of the Department of Agriculture.

Also working with Thien are Bob Bauernfeind, part of the entomology team studying the insect population of the land, and Steve Sterrit, a civil engineer who will study the water quality of the land.

Robel, professor of biology, is studying the wildlife population of the

Riley County to talk trash, consider recycling program

ASHLEY YOULE

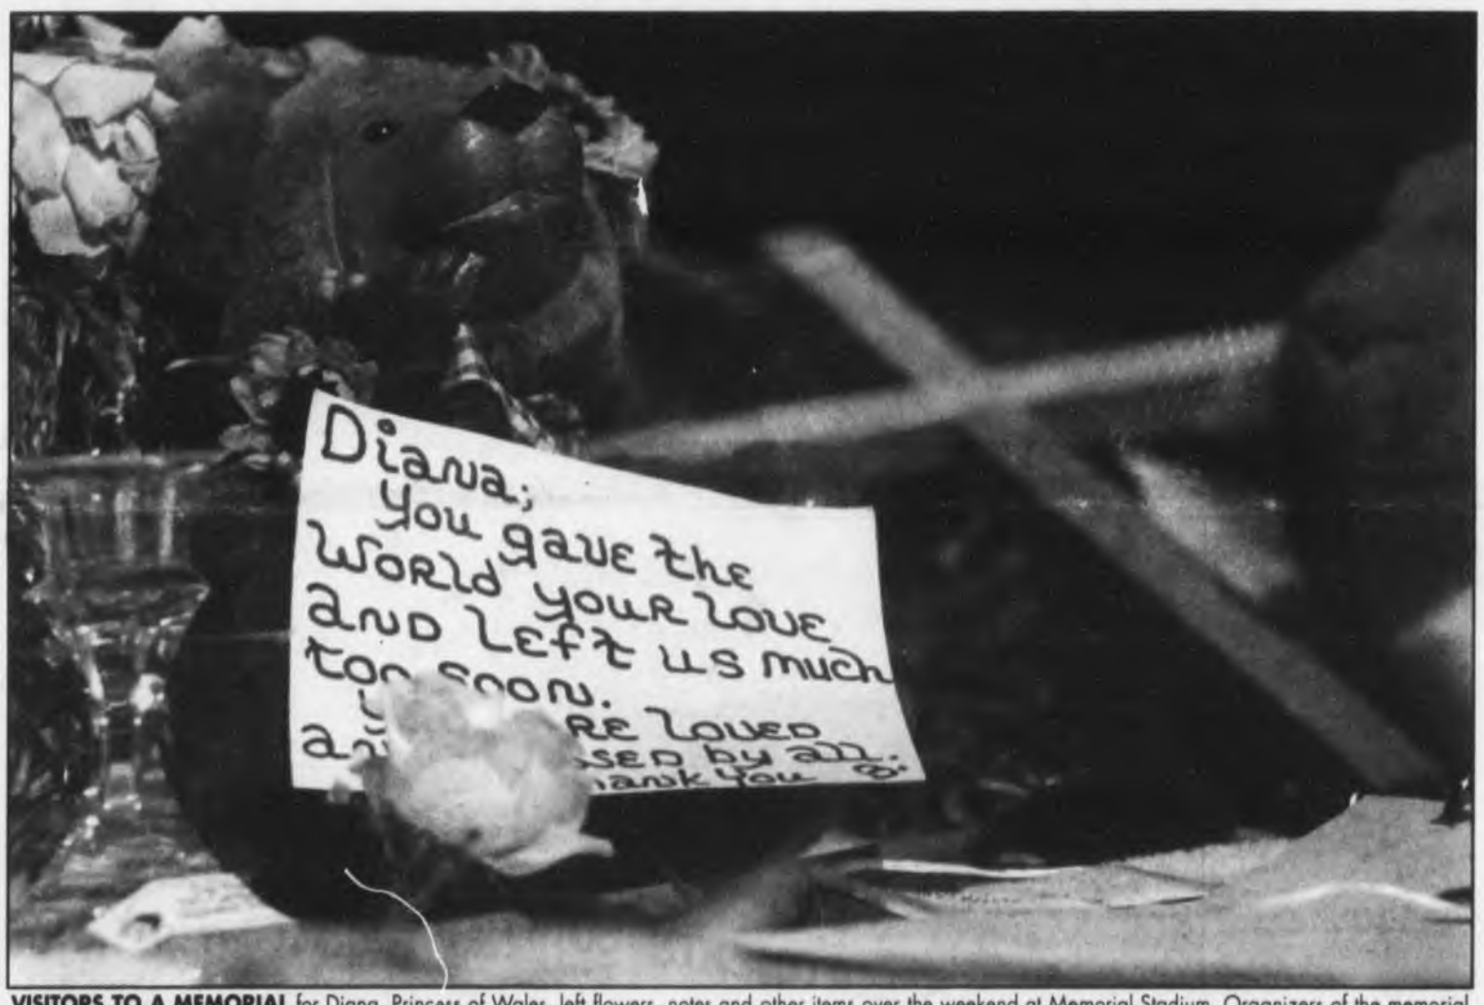
A proposed study will allow researchers to dig through Manhattan's trash.

The Riley County solid waste committee has received a grant to do a study on Manhattan waste. A proposal has been given to K-State to allow the waste committee to conduct and administer the study.

The proposal consists of two studies, one on wood waste assessment feasibility and the other, is a waste characterization study. The committee has been given approximately $121,800 for the study, which will consist of sorting through Manhattan and Riley County waste.

"We plan on doing a monthly sort for a year at the Riley County transfer station," said Monty Wedel, Riley County planner and special projects director.



The waste committee plans on taking random trash samples and putting the waste in categories. Wedel said this will allow the committee to evaluate what kinds of waste comes through the city and how much of it can be recycled.

"In order to build a recycling and waste-reduction program, we need to know what is in the trash," Wedel said.

Ultimately, the committee wants to

"EVEN THOUGH WE ARE SEAS APART, GRIEF KNOWS NO OCEAN."
ANONYMOUS MOURNER'S COMMENT IN A BOOK OF MESSAGES AT THE MEMORIAL

VISITORS TO A MEMORIAL for Diana, Princess of Wales, left flowers, notes and other items over the weekend at Memorial Stadium. Organizers of the memorial said nearly 300 people paid their respects at the site.

Nearly 300 mourners visited a memorial to Princess Diana in Manhattan this weekend. The visitors left flowers, messages and other tokens of their respect and sympathy at the site.

remembering Princess Diana

They came with flowers, stuffed animals and makeshift crosses.

They wrote messages of grief and condolence.

They shed tears for Diana, Princess of Wales.

From as far away as Dodge City, Kan., and Jefferson City, Mo., nearly 300 mourners came to Manhattan this weekend to pay their respects to the fallen princess at a memorial set up under the east side of Memorial Stadium.

JULIE FISCHER, resident in the College of Veterinary Medicine, writes a message of condolence Sunday afternoon at the memorial for Princess Diana. Books from the Manhattan memorial containing signatures and messages will be sent to England.

Susan Barnes, sophomore in criminology, organized the event and said she considered it a success.

"It was a real good turnout. We've had a lot of people thank us for doing it. Especially those with British descent have expressed feelings toward it. Everybody that's shown up has made it all worth being here," Barnes said.

For Barnes, the memorial was simply an attempt to give something back.

"She gave so much to the world. To me, this is just a small token of appreciation," she said.

Jammie Gardner, junior in speech pathology, visited the site Sunday. The princess, she said, deserved the honor.

"Even if no one met her, if they just heard or read about her, they have an idea of what an extraordinary princess she was. She deserves this respect. She earned it," Gardner said.

The event was a success, Barnes said, because it helped others come to terms with their grief.

"One lady from Big Lakes (Developmental Center) had watched the funeral, and she was pretty upset. They told her about us, and they brought her out so she could sign the book. That seemed to help her, and that was pretty special," she said.

After she opened the memorial Friday afternoon, Barnes said visitors requested a place where they could leave special messages to the princess and her family or statements about Diana's life. Barnes started a third book in addition to two that were used for visitors' signatures. Pages of text had been filled by Sunday afternoon.

"Even though we are seas apart, grief knows no ocean," one mourner wrote.

Younger visitors also left their marks.

"You were a good princess. You weren't like any other princess," an 8-year-old wrote.

The book of messages, along with two books full of visitors' signatures and items left at the memorial, will be sent to England. Barnes said she is trying to ensure that the items will be sent directly to Diana's two sons.

Flowers left at the site will be taken to local charities.

Brother speaks out against media, royal family at funeral

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Tears, flowers and inconsolable crowds followed Diana to her final resting place in England's green hills Saturday, in a day of pageantry and proud tribute from the same land the sad and smiling princess spoke longingly of fleeing.

Before her private burial, Diana's brother lashed out at the media and at a royal family in which she starred in the most bizarre life imaginable.

And before she was lowered into that solitary grave, reportedly with a rosary from Mother Teresa, millions of British people poured out their hearts in a final farewell.

They cried at the courage of Prince William, 15, and Prince Harry, 12, as they walked behind their mother's funeral cortege.

But mostly they stood and watched and reflected on the tragedy that snatched the Princess of Wales from their lives, in a car accident six days earlier.

"It is such a shame that we could not have done this for her in life," said one man outside Kensington Palace, "so she could have known how we felt."

In the age-old tradition of a 1,000-year-old monarchy, the day was well-scripted. But it was the one text that didn't appear in the pre-published program — the eulogy by the Earl Spencer — that electrified

India mourns loss of humanitarian

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CALCUTTA, India — Church bells pealed and anguished wails rose from mourners Sunday as Mother Teresa's body was carried in a simple wooden coffin from the Calcutta headquarters of her worldwide charity to a church where it will lie in state for the next week.

Mother Teresa died of a heart attack late Friday in the headquarters of her Missionaries of Charity.

The day after her death, her body lay in her order's small, dimly lit chapel, surrounded by flowers and praying nuns. The order's chapel was too small to accommodate crowds, so the public viewing was delayed until her body could be moved.

> She worked for the people and never thought about whether we were Muslim or Hindu.
> • Mohinulisam
> mourner

The church's bells rang out as the ambulance, accompanied by one police motorcycle escort and a security jeep, arrived. A line of mourners began forming before dawn, and by the time the coffin arrived it snaked a half mile along the sidewalk in front of the yellow brick-and-plaster chapel.

Thousands filed past Mother Teresa's body in the first hour it was on view. They stopped for just a few moments before Mother Teresa's body, which was taken from its coffin and placed under a glass case on a four-foot platform draped in white and blue cloth.

Mohinulisam, 38, said he saw Mother Teresa daily when she visited a home for the aged near his leather shop in Calcutta.

"She worked for the people and never thought about whether we were Muslim or Hindu," said Mohinulisam, who uses one name only. He broke down in tears after seeing her body.

She will lie in state for a week in St. Thomas', in a fashionable Calcutta neighborhood that contrasted with the slums where she toiled during life.

Among Sunday's mourners was Indian Prime Minister I.K. Gujral, who placed a large wreath of white flowers on the platform, then, standing in front of the body, told reporters his country was fortunate that Mother Teresa started her mission of compassion in India.

Gujral ordered a state funeral for Mother Teresa, an honor normally conferred only on serving presidents and prime ministers. Across the nation, flags flew at half-mast.

The site of Mother Teresa's funeral, scheduled Saturday, has not yet been decided, said the Rev. Valerian Nazareth, St. Thomas' priest. He said the government had offered a large indoor sports stadium in Calcutta, and officials also were considering the lawns of the city's premier Catholic college, St. Xavier's.

She will be buried at the convent in central Calcutta that was her home and the headquarters of her Missionaries of Charity order, according to Sister Brunet at the mission.

The frail, 4-foot-11-inch nun was born in Europe but became an Indian citizen during her six decades on the subcontinent. She had suffered heart problems and other ailments for years and gave up leadership of her order in March.

Mother Teresa's deeds leave strong impression on campus

APRYL MATHES
staff writer

The death of Mother Teresa poignantly affected some K-State students as they reflected on her tremendous charitable contributions.

"It's the death of the world's greatest humanitarian," said Lori Kieffer, junior in social work and women's studies.

Mike Pfannenstiel, junior in pre-medicine, agreed. He had said a prayer in remembrance of Mother Teresa.

"It's a tragic loss," he said. "The timing makes it worse."

The death of Mother Teresa within the same week as Princess Diana's fatal car accident increases the sense of loss, he said.

> She was really someone we should try to model our lives after. ... She was at the pinnacle of Christianity.
> • Michelle Peterie
> junior in environmental engineering

Unfortunately, coverage of Princess Diana's death has been a higher priority for the media, Tara Pestinger, freshman in kinesiology, said.

"I feel like they're giving too much publicity to Diana," she said.

Ironically, Kieffer said she first heard of Mother Teresa's death while watching television coverage about the princess.

Michelle Peterie, junior in environmental engineering, said the humble Roman Catholic nun never placed importance on whether she received recognition for her humanitarian efforts.

"I don't think publicity ever mattered to her," she said. "She cared about people, not being praised for her good works."

Peterie said those good works are what made her a role model for people everywhere.

"She was really someone we should try to model our lives after," Peterie said. "But I have no doubt that she is now in a much better place. She was at the pinnacle of Christianity."

Keith Weber, chaplain at Saint Isidore's Chapel, shared those bittersweet feelings about the loss of Mother Teresa.

"On one hand it's very sad. We've lost someone following Christ," Weber said, "but we're very happy that she's spending eternity with God."

Two wounded at birthday party for Orlando Magic player

TYSONS CORNER, Va. — A gunman opened fire early Sunday at a birthday party for Orlando Magic forward Dennis Scott at a hotel ballroom, leaving two people seriously wounded.

Police said the shooting occurred at the Sheraton Premiere Hotel in Tysons Corner, a Washington suburb, after the ballroom filled to capacity with 1,000 partygoers and was closed to additional guests.

Several hundred people who had bought tickets for the basketball player's 29th birthday rushed the ballroom and overwhelmed about a dozen security officers, said Lt. Mike Fish, a Fairfax County police spokesman.

Fights broke out as the officers called for assistance and the party was shut down.

A 21-year-old woman and a 26-year-old man, both from Oxon Hill, Md., were wounded when an unidentified gunman opened fire. They were admitted to Fairfax Hospital in serious condition.

Scott was not injured.

Small plane crashes in Rhode Island, killing five

LINCOLN, R.I. — A single-engine plane carrying skydivers crashed during takeoff, killing five people and critically injuring one other Saturday.

The Cessna Skylane Model 182 reached about 200 feet off the ground before it tilted left about 90 degrees and crashed into trees by the runway, said John Roan, a flight instructor at the North Central State Airport.

"The engine was in full throttle, then all of a sudden I didn't hear anything. The engine just quit. It died," said Chris Rossi, an airport maintenance worker who saw the crash.

Four people were declared dead shortly after the 5 p.m. crash, state police said. Two men in their 20s were flown to Rhode Island Hospital for treatment, said hospital spokesman Rick Piester.

A fifth victim died later Saturday at the hospital. The surviving passenger was said to be in critical condition late Saturday.

Gas from a ruptured fuel tank leaked from the plane, Roan said. Several firefighters were hurt in two explosions at the scene, but the injuries were not serious.

Former vice president says he's thinking about presidential bid

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. — Former Vice President Dan Quayle said he is traveling the nation to test the possibility of running for the presidency, but he hasn't made a final decision.

"We're doing everything we can to be in a very strong position in 1999 to make a decision to run for president," Quayle said Friday before addressing a Kansas Republican fund-raising dinner. "The country's a big country, and I'll continue to speak out on the issues and share my views with the American people for a smaller, more efficient government, lower taxes and a strong commitment to our families."

Quayle, who said he spends about 80 percent of his time traveling to support Republican candidates and seek support for his possible presidential bid, said Americans don't trust their government.

"People are very skeptical about what's going on in our nation's capital, particularly at the White House," Quayle said. "Look, you have a White House that doesn't tell the truth and people are responding to that. They've become very distrustful. There's a lot of cynicism out there."

Quayle said a recent poll showed about 57 percent of Americans think the country is heading in the wrong direction.

Rush continues for Tri-Sigma sorority

AMY BICKEL
staff reporter

Students who want to rush a sorority, but didn't get the chance, still have time.

Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority's open rush, which started Sept. 2, will last until Tuesday.

Barb Robel, director of Greek Affairs, said the Tri-Sigmas are having open rush because the sorority needed more pledges to fill the house. Fifteen women rushed the house during the traditional rush week in August.

The Tri-Sigmas have had rush tables set up outside the K-State Student Union since last week.

Students who didn't rush the first time have an opportunity to join the Greek system.

"We are trying to increase our numbers, and this gives those people who didn't go through formal rush or didn't have the finances to go through formal rush an opportunity to do so," Michele Wilmoth, president of the sorority said.

Wilmoth said open rush will give the sorority members a chance to meet some of the people who didn't go through rush.

"It will let them (rushers) experience our sisterhood, what we are about and let them experience the greek system," she said.

Tuesday through Thursday, the Tri-Sigmas will have rush parties for potential pledges at their house.

Membership and rush director Carrie Miller said the house will be extending bids on Friday.

Miller said the sorority could have up to 66 more students. Thirty-six have already expressed interest.

Those interested in rushing Tri-Sigma can contact Miller at 587-8609, Wilmoth at 776-8002 or the Greek Affairs office at 532-5546.

"So far, it's going well," Miller said. "We have a strong foundation through the women we have. This is an opportunity for other students — a leadership opportunity and a great experience."

Flint Hills Job Corps help MDA

BRANDI HERTIG
staff reporter

Be where you're supposed to be when you're supposed to be there.

Do what you're supposed to do when you get there.

Expect changes.

Student employees at the Flint Hills Job Corps put those three expectations into action when they played host to and staffed the Manhattan pledge center for the Muscular Dystrophy Association telethon Sept. 1.

When the MDA supplied the Job Corps with the materials needed for the telethon, they told the students not to plan on using all of the pledge slips.

By the end, they were using index cards to record the pledges.

The student employees from various schools manned the phones for 12 hours, sustained by pizza from area merchants, and brought in $975 in pledges by the end of the telethon.

"Our goal wasn't as high as what we got," Karen Garrett, student employee said.

The students also held a car wash the weekend before Labor Day weekend, which brought in $435. Another $60 was collected from students and faculty donating their change.

"When it came up to $1,400, we were like, 'Whoa. We did that ourselves?'" Garrett said.

Students also threw their own money into the mix.

"We don't make a heck of a lot, but it's a little more I can take out of my pocket to help somebody else," Garrett said.

Having felt the sting of stereotypes some people associate with Job Corps, the students were glad to have an opportunity to prove themselves.

Venuz Duran, student employee, said it's good to help the community because some people get the idea of Job Corps being a real bad place for real bad kids.

Some students looked at it as giving back to others what they have received.

"People have helped us out by letting us come up here, so why not help other people out by doing this?" Lonny Stuard, student employee, said.

Student employee Brian Estes said he used to throw quarters into donation cans and was glad to have the opportunity to help others.

"As long as it's for a worthy cause, I really don't mind," Estes said.

Next year's telethon isn't far out of sight for the students. They plan to start three months ahead of time with various fund-raising activities.

"Manhattan needs to know that Job Corps really cares," Garrett said.

Gamma-Phis, FIJIs win Beach Bash

KERRY BOYDSTON
staff reporter

It was fun in the sun yesterday as the Alpha Gamma Rho and Pi Kappa Alpha fraternities hosted their philanthropy, Beach Bash, on the shore of Tuttle Puddle.

Each year, proceeds from this event go directly to Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan, Inc.

"I think Beach Bash had a pretty good turnout this year, and we all know the money we raise will go to a great cause," Grant Harris, co-coordinator and member of Alpha Gamma Rho, said.

This year, Beach Bash events were spread over two days.

Saturday evening the Beauty and the Beast competition was at Bombers Upstairs. This event required each house participating to select a representative to model evening wear, casual wear and swim wear before a panel of judges.

Sunday, beach competitions were delayed two hours due to early morning showers.

"We weren't sure if we were going to be able to have the beach competitions due to the rainy weather. We waited a couple of hours and the clouds went away, the sun came out and we were ready to let the games begin," Harris said.

Greeks competed in events such as beach volleyball, tug of war, canoe races and obstacle courses. Harris said that each event was worth points and by the end of the day, Gamma Phi Beta sorority and Phi Gamma Delta fraternity were named overall winners.

Competition is not the only reason why some participants came out to the beach for the day.

"It's nice to see my friends from the other houses and get to know all the new members of the greek system," said Joanna Flock, sophomore in speech pathology and member of Kappa Alpha Theta.

Paul Freeland, senior in landscape architecture and member of Lambda Chi Alpha, praised the AGRs and Pikes for their philanthropy.

"I've participated in Beach Bash for five years, and they always put on such a great event for us," Freeland said. "There is nothing I would rather be doing on a Sunday afternoon than playing volleyball in the sun with my friends."

OPINION

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1997

OURview

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other staff members. Our View is the Collegian's official opinion.

Heart of rock 'n' roll begins to pulse in Little Apple's night life

The past two weekends in Manhattan have been a live music lover's dream. Last weekend saw the birth of the Manhattan Project, a local band compilation on compact disc. And this weekend featured the Welcome Back Concert in City Park — with several of the same bands and a few new ones.

Both these events were heavily attended and carried off with a minimum of hitches. Both featured diverse musical styles, and both took place within city limits and walking distance for most students. One event was free, and one was very cheap. What more could a concert-goer ask?

Could it be that live music is on the rebound in Manhattan? After being pronounced dead several times in the past few years, it's a real pleasure to be able to report that vital signs are being felt around town again.

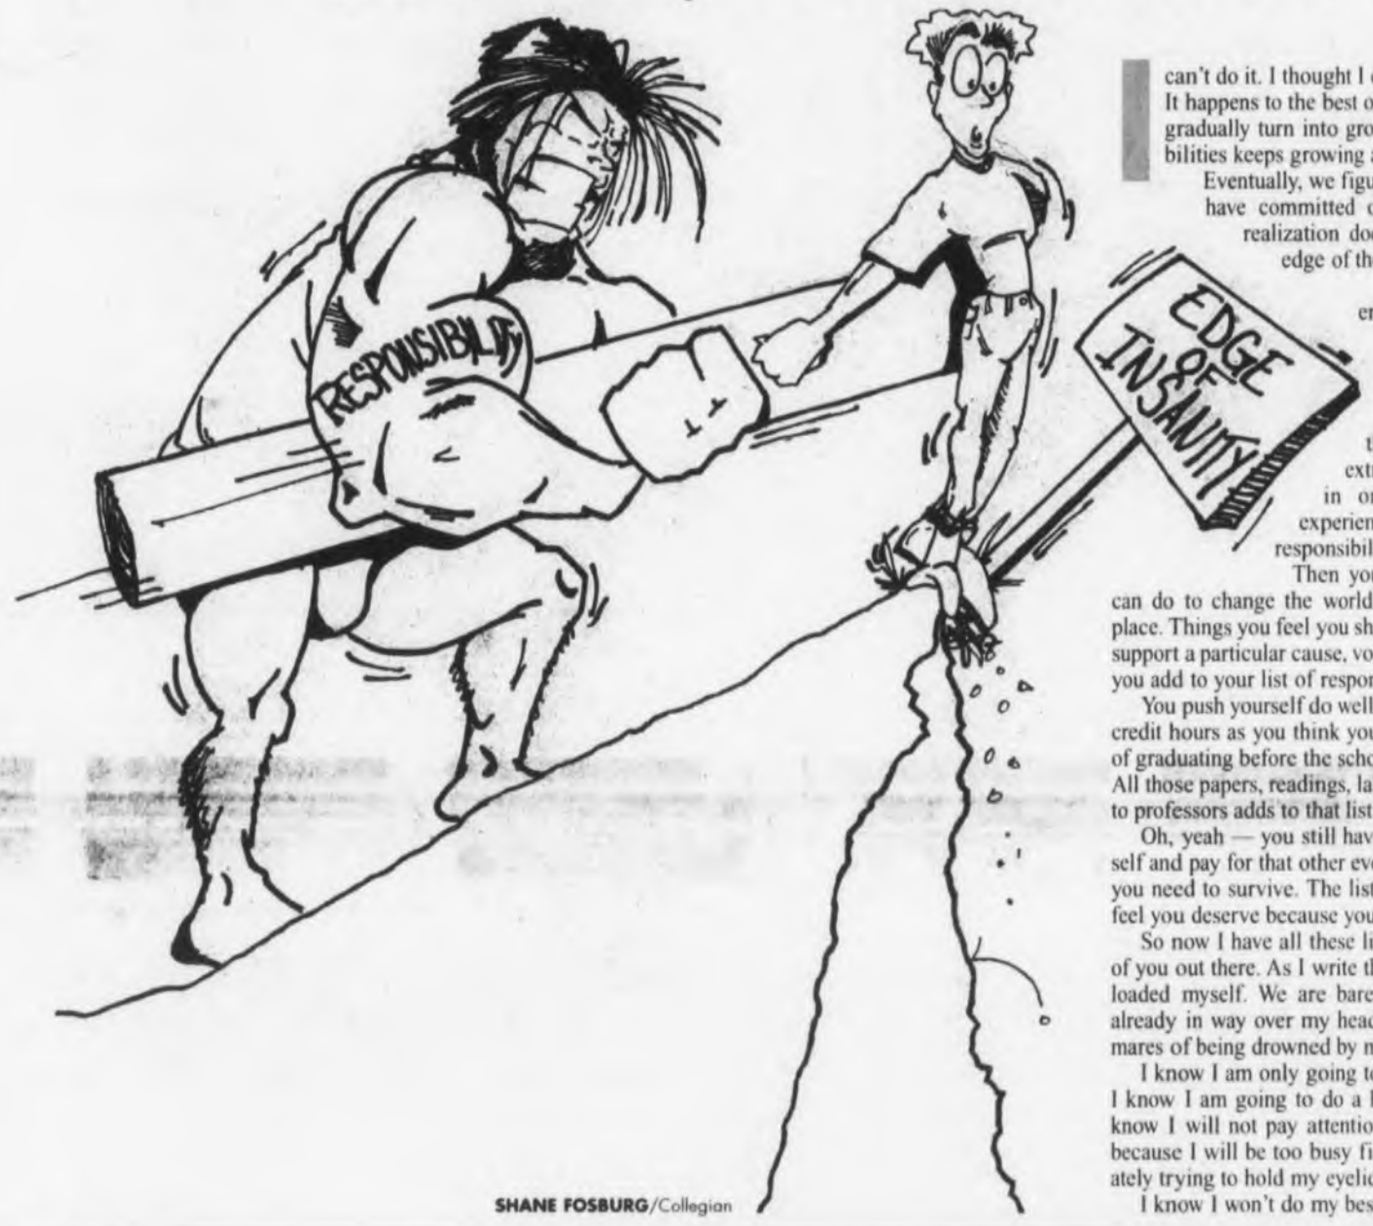
Bombers in Aggieville has several bands lined up for the next few weeks. Auntie Mae's Parlor has been featuring jazz on Friday nights for several months, and Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon is hosting Back Porch Mary's farewell concert Sept. 11.

K-State students no longer have to head up the road to enjoy good live music.

So what now? A couple good weekends does not a solid music scene make.

Go to these shows. Pay the cover and buy a tape. Support your local bands. Tell bar managers which groups you like and will be back to see. Audience feedback is a beautiful thing, and everyone in the business appreciates it.

A lot of musical talent resides in this area and deserves to be heard. By attending shows, spending a little cash and expressing your appreciation you give all those bands one more chance to be heard. This also helps attract other area bands to local venues, a snowball effect that benefits everyone. More bands equals more options for audiences, which equals more opportunity for everyone.



Support your local music scene. It's been a long time coming. Let's make it glad to be here.

New school year brings hint of insanity

It's too early in the semester to be drowning already

SHANE FOSBURG/Collegian

I can't do it. I thought I could, but I can't.

It happens to the best of us, especially in college. As we gradually turn into grown-ups, the list of our responsibilities keeps growing and growing and growing.

Eventually, we figure out we can't do everything we have committed ourselves to. Unfortunately, the realization doesn't come until we are on the edge of the cliff of insanity.

It all starts off innocently enough. You get offered a great opportunity, and you can't say no. And then you get offered another great opportunity, and you can't say no. Constantly thinking of your résumé, you add extracurricular activities, positions in organizations and employment experiences to your ever-growing list of responsibilities.

Then you discover there are things you can do to change the world in hopes of making it a better place. Things you feel you should do — join a political group, support a particular cause, volunteer in our community. Again, you add to your list of responsibilities.

You push yourself do well in your classes and take as many credit hours as you think you can possibly tackle in the hope of graduating before the scholarship or financial aid runs out. All those papers, readings, lab work and time spent kissing up to professors adds to that list.

Oh, yeah — you still have to find a way to support yourself and pay for that other ever-growing list. The list of things you need to survive. The list that includes all the things you feel you deserve because you work so hard.

So now I have all these lists and responsibilities like a lot of you out there. As I write this column, I realize I have overloaded myself. We are barely into the semester, and I am already in way over my head. I am beginning to have nightmares of being drowned by my Expository Writing II teacher.

I know I am only going to get five hours of sleep tonight. I know I am going to do a half-ass job on my homework. I know I will not pay attention in any of my classes Tuesday because I will be too busy fighting the urge to sleep, desperately trying to hold my eyelids up.

I know I won't do my best work at any of my three jobs. I know I won't be able to give the kind of dedication I should to the causes I chose to support. I know I will be tired and grumpy and not give my two sons the love and attention they deserve.

VIEWPOINT

MARY RENEE SMITH

MARY RENEE SMITH is a sophomore in speech. You can send your e-mail comments to Mary at mojo@ksu.edu.

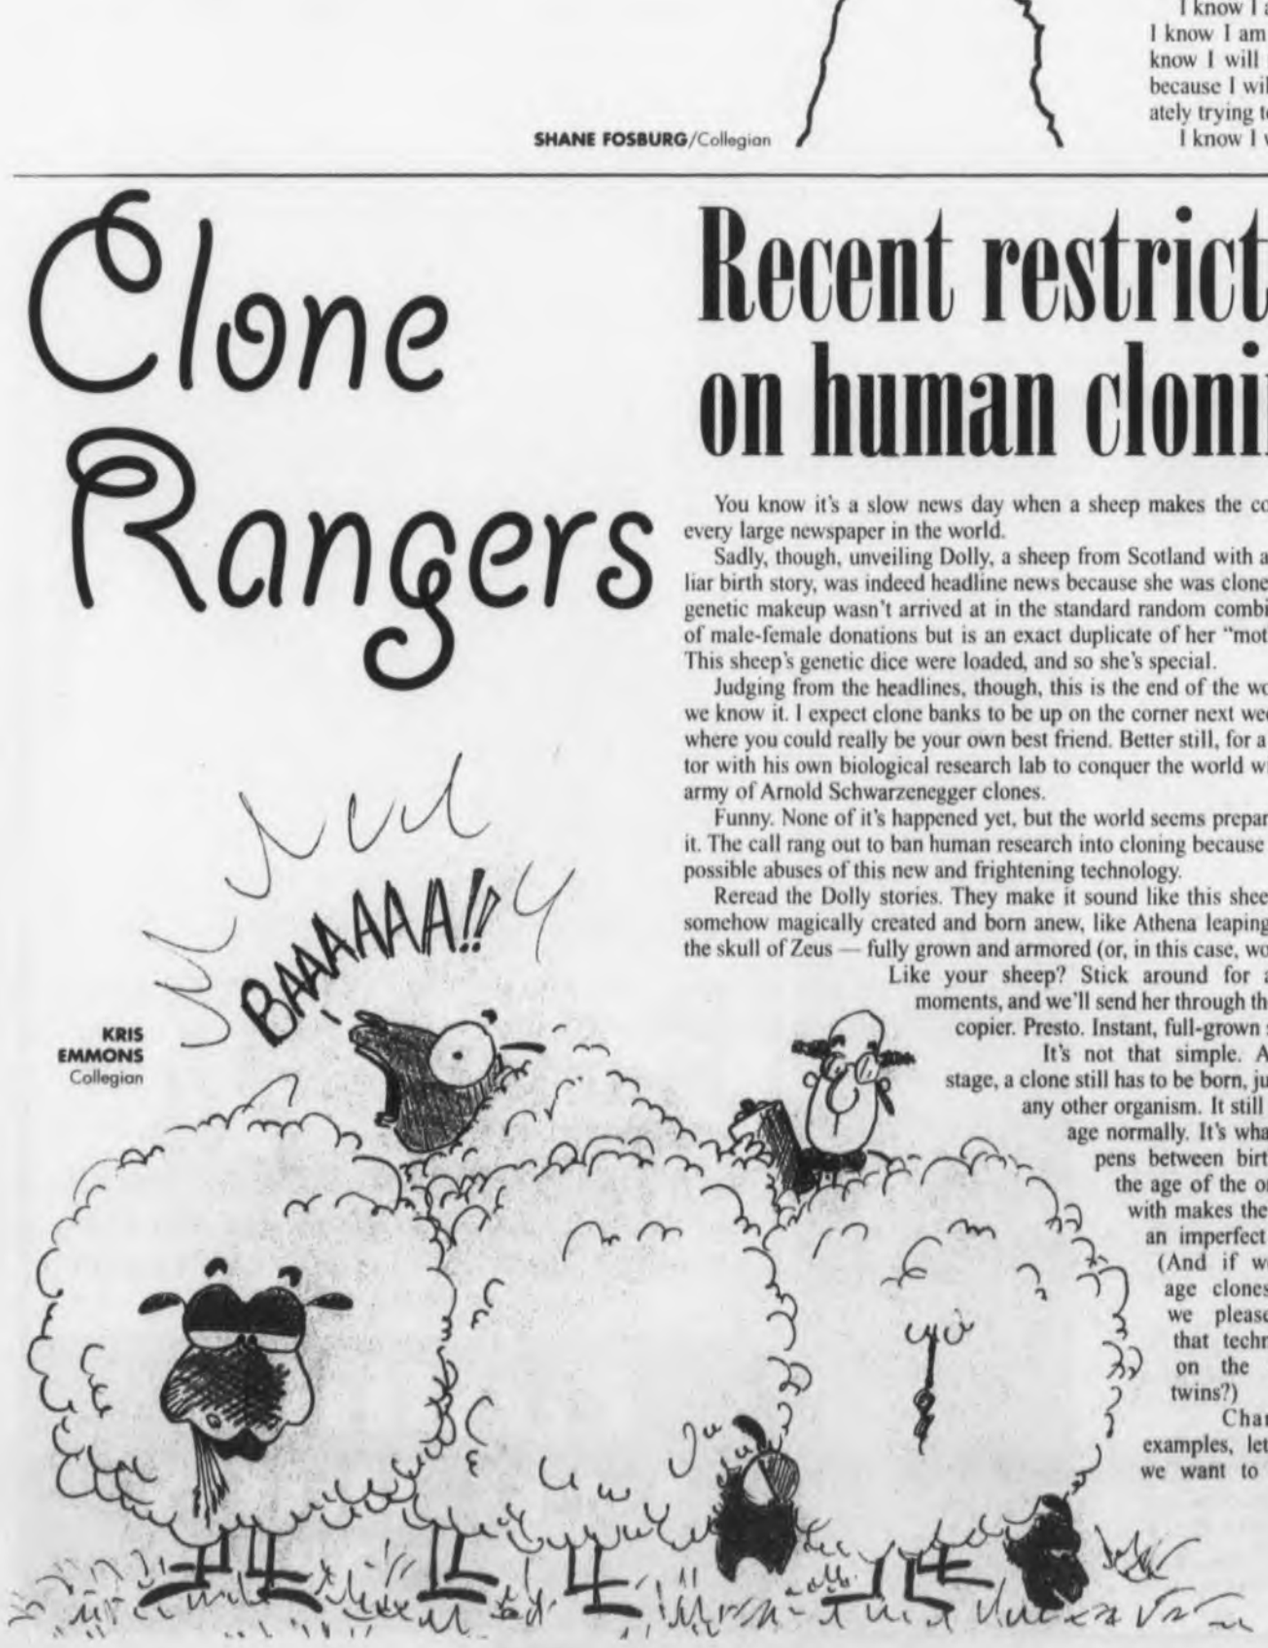
I know I will not want to snuggle on the couch with my boyfriend. I know I won't want to talk on the phone with a friend who might need a shoulder to cry on.

Worst of all, I know I will feel terrible for letting everyone down.

I know all this, and yet I keep doing it to myself. I'm not really sure why.

I wish I could say I think someday it will all be worth it. It would be wonderful to believe that living through these trials will bring me something positive. That after all of this, I will get the job of my dreams, and I will change the world. I'm just not convinced is going to happen. I am fairly sure that if I have to work like a dog and have no life to get the job of my dreams, I am having bad dreams.

George Carlin said, "Hard work is for people who are short on talent." I'd like to think I am a talented person, so why the hell am I working so hard?



I am working so hard, and maybe you are, too, because we haven't learned the secret of life. I have figured out the one life lesson we are all supposed to take from our college years, the one thing successful adults the world around have known for years.

We must all learn how to say no. For example: "No, I won't be able to work for you on Thursday night." "No, I don't think taking 21 hours a semester is a smart move." "No, another credit card payment is not a good thing." "No, I can't save the world single-handedly." "No, I can't bake 30-minute brownies in 20 minutes."

For now, I have to live up to my responsibilities. I must live with the repercussions of my obsession with saying yes. I have learned my lesson, I hope.

I owe it to every task I choose to take on to be able to give it 100 percent. But most of all, I owe it to myself.

Clone Rangers

KRIS EMMONS

Recent restrictions placed on human cloning are unnecessary

You know it's a slow news day when a sheep makes the cover of every large newspaper in the world.

Sadly, though, unveiling Dolly, a sheep from Scotland with a peculiar birth story, was indeed headline news because she was cloned. Her genetic makeup wasn't arrived at in the standard random combination of male-female donations but is an exact duplicate of her "mother's." This sheep's genetic dice were loaded, and so she's special.

Judging from the headlines, though, this is the end of the world as we know it. I expect clone banks to be up on the corner next weekend, where you could really be your own best friend. Better still, for a dictator with his own biological research lab to conquer the world with his army of Arnold Schwarzenegger clones.

Funny. None of it's happened yet, but the world seems prepared for it. The call rang out to ban human research into cloning because of the possible abuses of this new and frightening technology.

Reread the Dolly stories. They make it sound like this sheep was somehow magically created and born anew, like Athena leaping from the skull of Zeus — fully grown and armored (or, in this case, wooled).

Like your sheep? Stick around for a few moments, and we'll send her through the gene copier. Presto. Instant, full-grown sheep.

It's not that simple. At this stage, a clone still has to be born, just like any other organism. It still has to age normally. It's what happens between birth and the age of the original with makes the clone an imperfect copy. (And if we can age clones, can we please use that technology on the Olsen twins?)

Changing examples, let's say we want to clone Schwarzenegger and use a few thousand copies of him to invade Ohio. Great. In a few days we've got a ton of frozen Austrian embryos, and as soon as they pop out of some willing volunteers (or paid professionals — I don't see this being a Good Samaritan calling), we've got a horde of mewling, crying baby Schwarzeneggers.

VIEWPOINT

KEN WELLS

KEN WELLS is a senior in computer science. You can send e-mail to Ken at (sigma7@ksu.edu).

So we wait for three decades for these babies to grow up. Our goal is obvious — we want Arnold ad nauseam. Each of these critters is going to have to deal with a preestablished goal of being someone who already existed.

They're not going to be raised in Austria with the challenge of international bodybuilding. They're not going to have Arnold's parents or Arnold's friends supporting them in their efforts. They may not have his mindset. They'll have the genetic predisposition to his type of physique but not the training to hone it to its alarming rigidity. They could come out like Arnold or like Tom Arnold.

Well, still, even if they're not exactly like Arnold, surely a dictator could still use cloning to make an army from nothing. Well, they could, but traditional methods of reproduction are just as effective and a whole lot cheaper. Remember the Heaven's Gate lesson — there are more than enough lemmings in the world.

Bill Gates is not going to clone himself just in case he gets killed in a car crash. Even if he could copy his brain, the clone would not really be him, just someone who wakes up and suddenly thinks he's Bill Gates. We've got enough of those in the world, too.

There is nothing sacred or mystical in cloning technology. Creating life is something our government hasn't restricted yet — any idiot can legally, if sometimes not physically, conceive. You need a license for a dog or a gun, but sure, you can create human life. You can end it only how we say fit but make all the life you want.

And what are we losing with a ban on human research? A recent study shows that some forms of colon cancer could be caused by a specific gene. What about genetically inherited diseases? Are we prepared to let more people die, twisted in the spokes of the helix, while we sit on our hands and disallow research that might save their life, but we're too afraid that they'll just clone the guy sitting in front of us in class who has to scratch himself all the time?

This technology is too valuable to be delayed by superstition and irrational fear. Lift the ban. If we can sleep well with France having nuclear weapons, clones can't be that scary.

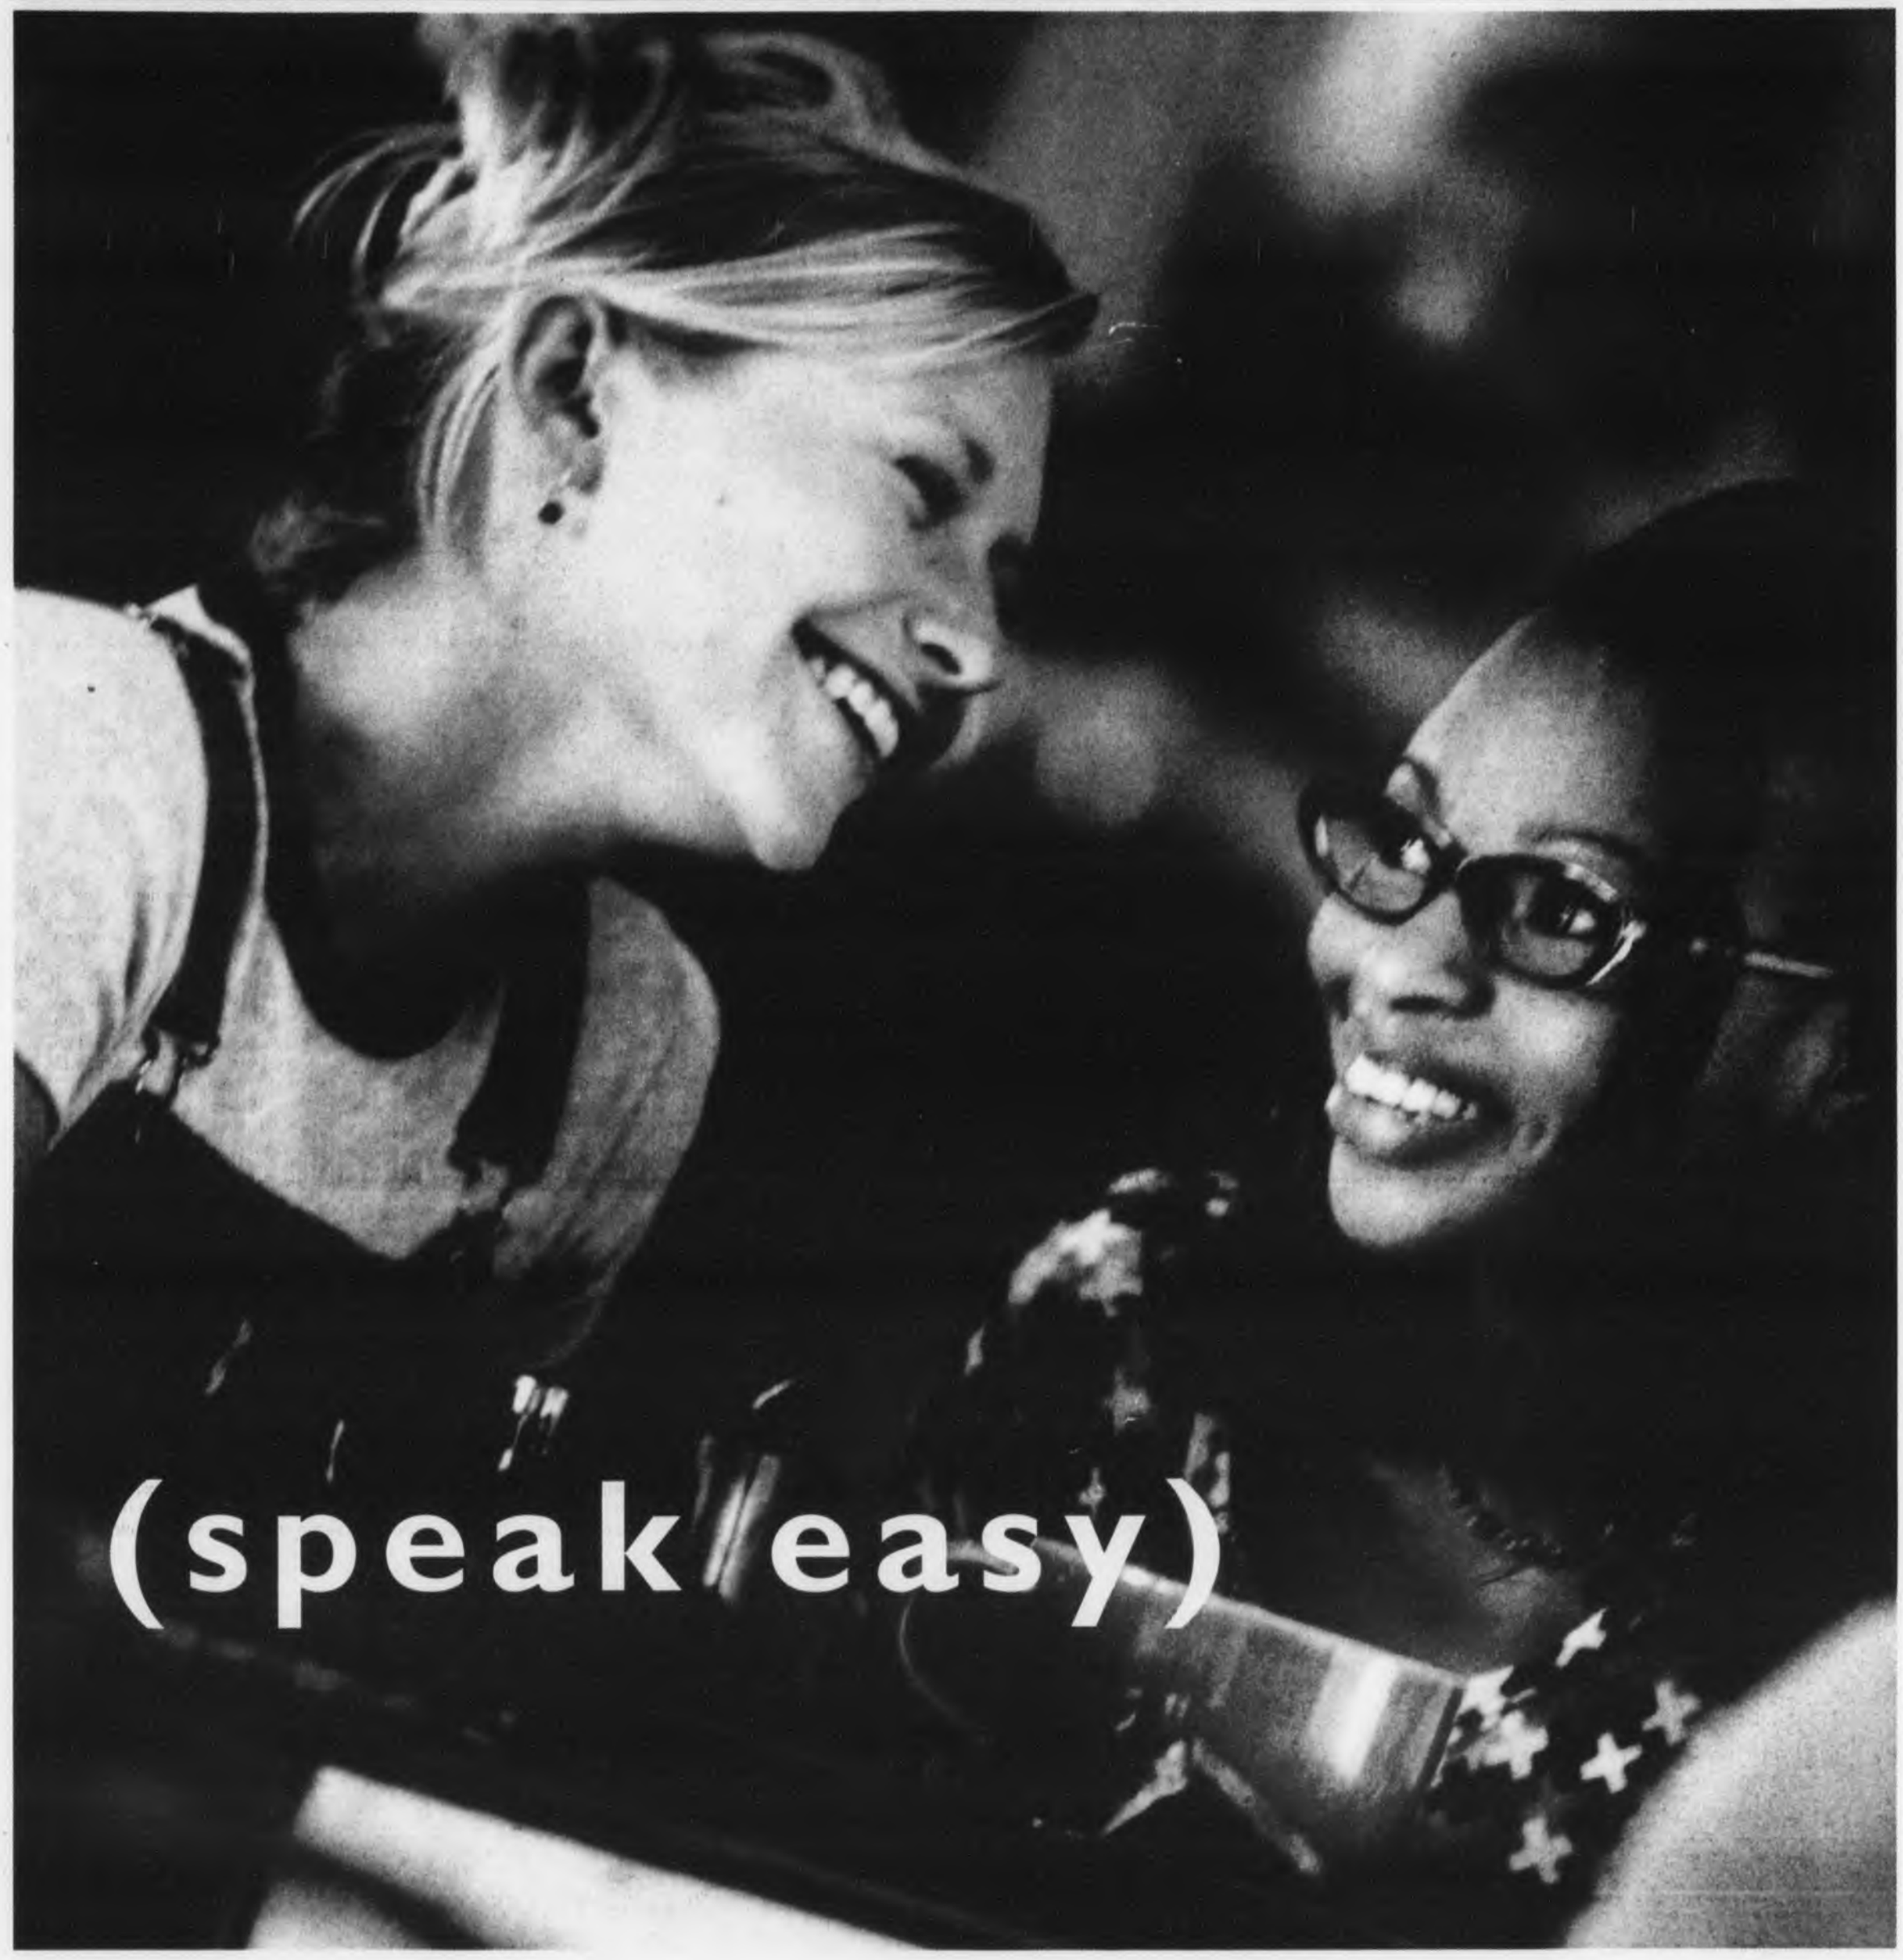
Christianity defined by New Testament

Editor,

I was interested to learn from Brandi Hertig's column, "The Christian who was almost a Christian," that she still considers herself a Christian but does not believe the Bible.



I know for myself that I would have a hard time defining what a Christian is and knowing whether I wanted to be called one without the Bible. Where could I go to find out what a Christian is? What is a Christian anyway? A nice person? A moral person? Someone who goes to church? An American?

Wouldn't it be nice to travel back in time and find out what the first Christians thought a Christian was and what being a Christian meant to them? The only way I know of to do this is to read the writings they left us. These writings are the New Testament.

The New Testament is the most accurate ancient writing in the history of the world because of the great number of old manuscripts we have and the small time period between when it was written and the earliest known copy.

If the New Testament is accurate, what does it say a Christian is? The New Testament says a Christian is one who has accepted Jesus' death on the cross as payment for their sins (Romans 3:22-24, Ephesians 2:8-9). This is what being a Christian meant to the first Christians and what it means to me today.

"YOU CAN'T STOP THIS SCENE. THIS SCENE ROCKS."
BILL MCSHANE, LEAD SINGER OF ULTIMATE FAKEBOOK

JEFF COOPER/Collegian

HEIDI PHILLIPS, right and Justine Volpe of Frogpond perform at the welcome back concert, Saturday in City Park. Frogpond headlined the concert following acts such as Ruskabank, Ultimate Fakebook, and T.V. Fifty.

Playground turned into hot spot

Bands exceed music lovers' expectations at DB92's annual concert

Manhattan is the kind of town that dares to surprise itself. Even with regular events expected by its citizens, like the Welcome Back Concert annually sponsored by KSDB-FM 91.9 and held in City Park, something keeps everyone from knowing exactly what will happen.

So it's possible to be excited in Manhattan. It's allowed.

And at Welcome Back, it's not just for the sake of music, although that's a big part of the excitement. Where else do all the freakish denizens of this fair city get together in such a congregation?

From the teen-agers using the indoor pavilion behind the stage to perform on skateboards to the shirtless guys with tattoos playing hacky sack in the shade, Welcome Back was Manhattan's version of Burning Man, a celebration of not being normal.

This year in particular, everyone there had to be excited. For roughly eight hours Saturday, the Arts in the Park stage was in direct sunlight. Fans continually staggered back and forth between the front of the stage and into the shade so they wouldn't overheat.

It wasn't until Frogpond, the concert headliners, took the stage that the sun finally set. There was barely any breeze for most of the day.

In a display of defiance towards the weather and good taste in general, the five members of Jiffy Boy, the first act, appeared dressed in garish, June Cleaver drag, each of their thrift-store dresses a different color.

Music Review

"Ever get that not-quite-fresh feeling?" said guitarist Jeremy Sturgell, who arguably wore the ugliest of the five dresses, a raunchy pink and blue affair.

It was all part of the vibe. Jiffy Boy's punkish "chicken core" was followed by Ruskabank's jazzy ska. Both bands were Manhattan natives, and both are play genres entirely foreign to the area.

But who expects eight guys to want to stay together for the sake of ska and improve on their craft the way Ruskabank has? Who expected Chris Balsiger of Jiffy Boy to screech out punk rock in a flat tenor?

It wasn't expected any more than the weather or the dresses. Nothing else mattered. It was all about having fun.

"It's hot," gasped David Spiker, guitarist for Ruskabank, looking like Angus Young in striped tube socks. And it was hot.

Beside the stage, Streetside Records gave away loads of posters, tapes and sampler compact discs. The art department of Varney's Book Store hung a huge canvas where patrons could pay a dollar and paint on it.

By the end of the day, most of the freebies were snatched up, and the canvas was covered with odd designs and words, including the rock ethic, "Music: Too Much Is Never Enough."

And mercifully, the sun started to drop from the sky by the time Ultimate Fakebook hit the stage. Bill McShane sang and played guitar, squinting at the sun, belting out catchy riffs with an obvious headache.

"If we pass out on stage, just pick us up so we can keep rocking," he said between songs.

McShane even came out for guest vocals during TV Fifty's set, standing next to bassist Rob O'Toole for "Better." Incidentally, O'Toole was using the bass belonging to Nick Colby, bassist for Fakebook, because his own bass broke a mere 10 minutes before the show.

TV Fifty was really hurting. The microphone for lead vocalist Byron Hannigan gave out, and there were long periods of awkward silence and even more awkward instrumentals. Thankfully, it all worked out so that the audience didn't lose interest.

Then the sun went down, and everyone came out from under the trees to rock with Frogpond.

The three-woman band set up its equipment on one corner of the stage, whereas all the other bands, even Ultimate Fakebook, another three-piece, were all over the stage. Justine Volpe, bassist, remarked that the amplifiers crowded around her made her feel like she was in the Melvins.

None of the three members of Frogpond are particularly large women, but Volpe was all over the small corner of the stage, throwing her bass around, and seemed much larger.

Heidi Phillips was shoegazing between her sleepy alto vocals, bent way over her guitar, swinging it like an ax. Megan Hamilton was almost invisible behind her drum kit but needed no reminder that she was there with her precise, hard-edged sound.

Volpe thanked DB92 for supporting the concert.

"Commercial radio stations are a dime a dozen," she told the crowd. "DB92 plays what no one else will."

"Not anymore," someone shouted back from the crowd.

But that's what happened. Manhattan is a place where music happens and people get excited.

"You can't stop this scene," McShane declared. "This scene rocks."

Guitarists abandon electricity to dazzle audience with musical stories

After attending the 8 p.m. concert at the Manhattan Center for the Arts and realizing that a simple news brief Thursday would have brought more people to see and hear what this crowd saw and heard, a little guilt does well up.

The performance was split down the middle by acoustic musicians and songwriters Don Conoscenti and Greg Greenway, first performing separately and then together for the conclusion.

Music Review

The theater for the concert set a good atmosphere. The stage border of white Christmas lights and the openly visible stage lights on the ceiling gave the entire area a sort of surreal attic or warehouse feeling, similar to the "House of Blues" stage.

Conoscenti began the first hour accompanied by his guitar to celebrate the release of his "My Brilliant Masterpiece" with 11 songs including the title number from "Masterpiece," as well as "The Sky Is Crying" from his earlier compact disc "Boxes of Bones."

Clean-shaven, bald and wearing three gold hoop earrings, Conoscenti looked at first glance like an unexpected cross between an Australian punk rocker and a court acrobat.

His style, however, was more reminiscent of Tracy Chapman meets Kenny Loggins with a touch of Jimmy Buffett thrown in.

Lyrics had a ballad-like quality, and each and every word in his howling, growling delivery could be heard. The guitar style was based in a laid-back, almost weary tempo.

During his solo act, Conoscenti also used the drums and had a particularly impressive song opening on the recorder with a mournful sound that would have surprised anyone who had dealt with the instrument during grade school.

Greenway then took to the stage with his guitar. He did not wait, as Conoscenti had, to get the crowd hyped for applause at the end of a song.

He stirred them into a frenzy during the whole number, getting them to clap and sing along as he bounced left to right wildly to keep his tempo.

Numbers allowed Greenway to vary his voice and guitar work to impressive extremes. "Don't Make Me Sing" (ironically a sing-along) was the most easygoing. "Singing For The Landlord" has a floating wide-space quality, and "Mussolini's Head" exhibited a prowling style with scattered smaller crescendos. Even "Archaeology," from his most recent CD of the same name, has a wistful manner like the swirling sands it describes.

Concluding his solo act, Greenway then invited Conoscenti to the stage to play his own number before they did one together. Each did his best to outdo the other, but the rivalry was light-hearted.

The pair then moved into its official duet, "Free At Last," mixing Greenway on guitar, Conoscenti on drums and voices of both without showing a seam.

Both artists then finished the evening with a soft, calm performance of "Stand By Me."

Though Conoscenti said he still does electric sessions, he has spent the past five to six years focusing on acoustic.

"I needed a quieter, more subtle approach," he said. "It's really about energy level. Rock bands appeal to people who need a lot of stimulation. They go out every night to hear bands. Acoustic music isn't about that energy."

Greenway not only shared a similar background with Conoscenti, but their philosophies also overlapped to a degree. Greenway played in rock and pop bands himself for about five years before deciding to move to acoustic.

"What it took to be a good rock front person, I didn't have or I just wasn't interested enough. We'd work our butts off and only get to play once a night," Greenway said.

The storytelling style of acoustic also drew Greenway in, he said.

"The really important thing to me is what I talk about," he said. "It's more who I am. It's more honest. I love rock music, but this is more me."

Fraternity joins effort to help save student's life

JENNI EVANS
staff reporter

Acacia fraternity members raised $500 for fellow K-State student Jason Christiensen Friday night.

Christiensen, who needs a double lung transplant, would have been a senior in kinesiology, but he was diagnosed with primary pulmonary hypertension in May. For the surgery, Christiensen needs to raise $234,000.

To help him raise the money, Acacia members sponsored a benefit concert in their parking lot from 9 to 11 p.m. Friday.

"I read about Jason in the paper, and our house is about human service. It's in our crest. I thought we could do a benefit concert," said Daniel Weber, junior in business and Acacia social chairman.

The concert featured the band Honeybee Groove, which played for a crowd of 150 guests. The Wichita-based band played a blend of jazz and funk.

"We were supposed to do the Kansas City Music Festival tonight, but we wanted to do this benefit concert for Jason," Rusty Morris, drummer for Honeybee Groove, said.

The six-member band said they could sympathize with Christiensen's situation.

"We're all students, and we know how it is. For someone in our age group to have a letdown like this, it's got to be tough," Morris said.

In preparation for the concert, Acacia hired Lucky BrewGrille for catering and bought non-alcoholic beverages and snacks, spending nearly $1,000 of its own money.

Acacia members visited six sorority houses Wednesday night, spreading the word about Friday's concert.

"We depended on word of mouth," Weber said.

A $2 donation was requested at the door to help raise money for Christiensen's surgery.

The concert raised $300 in donations from students. The 60-member fraternity raised $200 as a house for Jason Christiensen.

Christiensen was unable to attend the concert but will be sent a compact disc of the band's music signed by all the band members.

K-Staters, expert speakers mentor high school students with mock debate round

ANDREA COREY
senior staff writer

High school students from across the state attended this year's Ed Schiappa Fall Debate Workshop on the K-State campus Saturday.

At 950 students and coaches, attendance for this year's one-day workshop was higher than previous years, Susan Stanfield, K-State's director of debate, said.

With help from the Kansas Corporation Commission, this year's workshop boasted internationally-known authorities on the 1997-98 high-school debate topic, renewable energy.

The commission hired Donna Johnson, president of Pinnacle Technology in Lawrence, to organize speakers for the workshop.

Johnson said she helped with the workshop because if students are educated about renewable energy at an early age, there will be more of a positive attitude about researching and using renewable energy later.

"I really believe it has to start at an early age," she said.

Johnson contacted speakers for the conference with a specific goal in mind.

"We wanted to try to bring in three speakers in the morning to keynote who had international reputations and who could explain the general issues," she said.

And she did. Hunter Lovins, president of the Rocky Mountain Institute in Snowmass, Colo.; Mark D. Levine, division director of the environmental technologies division at Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory in California; and Michelle Robinson, senior advocate for the Union of Concerned Scientists from Cambridge, Mass., each gave keynote addresses and also spoke at smaller sessions in the afternoon during the workshop.

Both Lovins and Levine had specific reasons for traveling to the conference.

"I think the reason is Donna [Johnson] caught me at a very soft moment, and I have a very warm spot in my heart for debate," Levine said.

He added that he had been in debate while in high school in Ohio, but said he was never very good at it.

Lovins didn't mention having a soft spot in her heart for debate, but instead for Kansans.

"Every time we have spoken in Kansas, we have found the audience knowledgeable, thoughtful and much more involved than almost anywhere else in the country," she said. "They take the time to think, and they're more democratic."

But educating students about renewable energy via speakers wasn't the only purpose of the workshop. In the morning session, a demonstration debate was conducted by members and assistant coaches of the debate team.

Isaac West, junior in history, and Brent Siemers, a second-year graduate student in speech communication and assistant debate coach, argued the affirmative side of the case.

Sarah Glaser, junior in natural resources and environmental science, and Christina Sabee, a second-year graduate student in speech communication and assistant debate coach, argued the negative side.

The debate was conducted at a slower rate than usual, to allow students to hear the debate and recognize structural parts like transitions debaters use.

The students running the debate stopped at points telling the students how to construct a flow chart of the arguments they were making.

"The practice round is geared toward people who haven't debated before or haven't been in more than four or five rounds," Siemers said.

He added that students who put on the demonstration debate tried to leave out most of the jargon terms so that students would be able to better understand the debate.

Students said the demonstration debate and speakers at the workshop were valuable.

Dawn Terry, a third-year debater and junior at Manhattan High School, said she was looking forward to hearing lectures that were to be conducted later in the day about advanced topicality, and wanted to learn more about how to argue.

"I'm just looking for more theory," she said.

Aman Gill, a fourth-year debater and senior at Manhattan High said the workshop is helpful as a way to scope out how other schools may debate the topic this year.

West, a K-State debater who was part of the demonstration debate, said he considers the workshop a community service.

"This is our one thing considered to be our community service of the year," he said.

Sabee, said she agreed.

"The most valuable thing is giving back to the community," she said.

BROWN IS CHIEF CONCERN

OAKLAND, Calif. — The Oakland Raiders spent all preseason bragging about their balanced offense.

They spent their first game showing their attack still revolves around one man — wide receiver Tim Brown.

On Monday night, in one of football's bitterest rivalries, the Raiders (0-1) and Kansas City Chiefs (0-1) will be focusing that very player in this AFC West showdown.

"You look at the coverage to see who's open, but you always know where the great ones are," Raiders quarterback Jeff George said. "Tim is a great player, and he's going to come up with the big plays when we need them."

The Chiefs will start a pair of second-year safeties, Reggie Tongue and Jerome Woods, who know they'll spend plenty of time following Brown.

"I've seen him on TV for years running away from people, catching all kinds of passes," Tongue said. "He's going to test us. And why not? We're going to expect it."

BIG 12 ROUND-UP

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — On a day when all but two Big 12 teams were in action, a coach's comments make it plain who the only loser was.

"It's embarrassing for the players, the coaches and for the whole football team," Iowa State's Dan McCarney said. "Every phase was bad."

Losing four fumbles and two interceptions, the Cyclones (0-2) got hammered 56-10 by Wyoming.

Kansas (2-0) also lost four fumbles and came in for some harsh words by the head coach. But there was a huge difference.

The Jayhawks were playing Texas Christian University, and escaped with a 17-10 victory when backup quarterback Zac Wegner hit a wide-open Tremaine Fulton with a 60-yard scoring pass late in the fourth quarter.

Elsewhere in the Big 12's Northern Division, No. 8 Colorado got a halftime tongue-lashing not from a coach, but a player, and rallied to beat then-No. 24 Colorado State 31-21.

No. 20 K-State got an eye-popping debut from quarterback Michael Bishop, who threw four touchdown passes and ran for a fifth in a 47-7 rout of Northern Illinois; and Missouri scored on all five of its second-half possessions to beat Eastern Michigan 44-24.

In the South Division, Ricky Williams rushed for 155 yards and three touchdowns to lead No. 11 Texas past Rutgers 48-14.

Oklahoma got one of its all-time best rushing performances from De'Mond Parker and rallied to beat Syracuse 36-34 for its first home victory in — incredibly — almost two years.

Jerod Douglas rushed for 141 yards and two touchdowns to lead Baylor to a victory over Fresno State 37-35.

Oklahoma State turned five turnovers into 23 first-half points and beat Southwestern Louisiana 31-7, and Texas A&M swamped Sam Houston State 59-6 behind Sirr Parker's three touchdowns.

No. 6 Nebraska and Texas Tech were idle.

Bishop takes advantage of defense to decimate NIU Huskies

SUN DEE MILLS
sports editor

DEKALB, Ill. — The crowd at Northern Illinois' Huskie Stadium was one-third purple. Wildcat cheers abounded. And the Huskies were no match for the No. 21 Wildcats, who came away with their first win for 1997, 47-7.

It was deja vu for Coach Bill Snyder, who saw the same sights at KSU Stadium about 10 years ago.

"We were 1-10 at one time, too, but he's (Huskie coach Joe Novak) doing things the right way and not taking the short cut," Snyder said. "They understood how to play with enthusiasm, and it's because someone coached them to do that."

The Cats easily contained the Huskies' enthusiasm in the first half. At the half, the Cats' defense had held the Huskies to 90 yards in total offense.

"In the first half, I was pleased with our defense — they played well," Snyder said. "Ninety percent of the snaps we played aggressively."

Of the 90 yards, 54 were rushing, and 36 were passing. Shutting down the Huskie running game was crucial and a goal for the Cat defense, junior linebacker Travis Ochs said.

"We felt that if they can't get a running game going, then that's a good place to start," Ochs said. "They got a couple of big runs on us, which didn't make us very happy, but we knew what we had to do. We just weren't executing at times."

With 5:13 remaining in the first half, Huskie true freshman quarterback Frisman Jackson put the first and only score for NIU on the board with a 32-yard touchdown pass to Justin McCareins.

Many people were banking on the fact that the Cats wouldn't let the Huskies score the entire game, including Ochs.

"I was hoping we weren't," Ochs said. "We didn't really want to give it to them. That was one of our goals, to just stop them and get off the field and let our offense get out there and do some work."

This worked for a while. Before the Huskies' touchdown, Cat quarterback Michael Bishop and junior running back Marlon Charles had each run in a touchdown, and junior tight end Justin Swift had caught two passes in the end zone, the first touchdowns of Swift's career.

"I was real happy with our offense," Ochs said. "I thought they went out there and played real well. A lot of people had some doubts, but they came out there ready to play."

As the first half wound down, two more Bishop

BISHOP MAKES THE GRADE

Community college transfer successfully tackles first game as Wildcat

STORY BY SUN DEE MILLS • PHOTO BY IVAN KOZAR

DEKALB, Ill. — Michael Bishop said he was ready to tackle Division I play.

And just more than two minutes into the first quarter against Northern Illinois, he proved it.

Six plays and 74 yards later, Bishop ran 43 yards for the Wildcats' first touchdown of the season and Bishop's first as a Cat.

"It was a quarterback draw," Bishop said. "I dropped back two or three steps, and I saw a hole."

Once Bishop saw that hole, he attacked it. Wide receiver DeAndrea Robinson gave Bishop the room to move, and Bishop moved down the field into the end zone.

That early touchdown was the first of five touchdowns that Bishop had a hand in. On the other four, Bishop's hand sent the ball through the air to three different receivers.

Unfortunately, all that came in the first half. The second half left the new quarterback on the sidelines after the first series, except for his 37-yard punt in the last three minutes of the game.

"He did all right in the first half, but he made a lot of mistakes that will have to be corrected," Coach Bill Snyder said.

On paper, the mistakes are hard to see. Bishop's 43-yard touchdown run superseded the length of any rush last season. His 98 total rushing yards was a team high, and only on four previous occasions has a quarterback ever rushed for more than 100 yards.

Passing was another story. Bishop completed eight of 13 passes for 172 yards, four of which were for touchdowns. Once again, not a bad percentage, but Snyder focused on the inconsistency issue.

"He missed some passes in a stately way," Snyder said. "Part has to do with throwing the ball accurately, and part has to do with having a leadership role on the field and doing things to control the ball game."

And control the game Bishop did. Eight different times, when Huskie coverage down field was too tight and he was still holding the ball, Bishop took off running.

"I'm a newcomer to the team," Bishop said. "I felt like in order to make a play, I had to make something happen to give my teammates confidence in my abilities."

Snyder selected Bishop as the starter because of his athletic abilities, but he said the mistakes Bishop made must be corrected for him to keep the No. 1 slot.

"He has the ability to turn a bad play into a good play, but he also has the ability to make a good play a bad one, too," Snyder said. "He made some mistakes, but most are correctable ones."

Snyder's red pen was no doubt working furiously to jot down the things he would discuss with the new quarterback, but Bishop gave himself with a B minus.

"There's a lot of things that I missed, that I should have checked off on," Bishop said, "but overall I think I did a pretty good job."

Even though it was his first game in a stepped-up level of play and expectations of his performance were high, Bishop said the pregame pressure was limited.

"I felt a little bit (of pressure), but that's normal for a quarterback," Bishop said.

With one game down and 10 or more to go, Bishop said he learned things to help lead the Cats to his goal, a Big 12 Championship game.

"I've got to try to settle down and try to get into the game and don't try to rush it," Bishop said.

Women's golf wants higher rank

JESS C. LOUK
staff writer

The plaque signifying a No. 49 ranking, which hangs on the wall of K-State women's golf coach Kristi Knight, says it all.

The women's golf team isn't where it wants to be.

"At the end of next year, I want to take that one out and throw it away," Knight said. "There is no reason we can't be a top-25 or -30 team."

The Wildcat women's golf team will begin its quest to move up the rankings today when it tees up its season at the University of Nebraska's fourth-annual Chip-N-Club Invitational tournament.

The tournament will be played at Himark Golf Club in Lincoln, Neb. Nine teams will participate in the event.

None of the nine teams are ranked in the preseason women's collegiate golf rankings.

Last year, K-State climbed as high as No. 29 in the nation.

> The Big 12 is one of the best women's golf conferences in the country. I was pleased, and I was disappointed, but we are moving in the right direction.
> • Kristi Knight
> women's golf coach

In five fall tournaments, the Cats finished first once and second once. The Cats even managed to grab fourth at the Big 12 Preview Tournament. At that tournament, the team set a K-State scoring record, shattering the old mark by 15 shots. It was played in College Station, Texas.

"I don't even think K-State had ever even been ranked in the top 50," Knight said. "So, of course our spring season was very disappointing."

The Cats finished the inaugural Big 12 Tournament at Alvamar Country Club in 10th place after they shot a three-round score of 325-323-331 for a final score of 979, 115 strokes.

Knight attributed the decline in the spring to injuries, class scheduling and poor weather, which cut into the team's practice time.

"When you compare this to last fall, it's kind of deceiving," Knight said. "The Big 12 is one of the best women's golf conferences in the country. I was pleased, and I was also disappointed, but we are moving in the right direction."

This year, the women's team will prepare for its fall schedule by practicing at the Manhattan Country Club, Stagg Hill Golf Course, Custer Hill at Fort Riley and Rolling Meadows in Junction City.

The women's team will compete in five tournaments this fall. Knight said the largest challenges to the team will come at the Big 12 preview in Missouri this year and a tournament at New Mexico State.

Luckily, the team will not have as stiff a test when it tees off today against teams like Briar Cliff, North Texas and Texas-Pan American.

"I'm hoping we'll place pretty high," Jane Yi, junior golfer, said. "I think we'll be a strong team this year."

Yi led the team in scoring in four of the five tournaments last fall.

The first two rounds of the tournament will be played today. The final round is scheduled to be played Tuesday morning.

passes turned into touchdowns, one for 37 yards to redshirt freshman David Allen and one for 65 yards to newly healed senior running back Eric Hickson.

"The leg's fine," Hickson said. "It was a screen play, and the linemen did a good job. There's nothing wrong with catching the ball. I was just anxious to play, anxious to do something."

Besides the defense, Snyder mentioned the running game as something that was working.

"I'm pleased with a good portion of our running game on offense up front," he said.

Huskie enthusiasm kicked into overdrive in the second half. Two penalties in the first series, a pass interference call on Ochs and a roughing-the-kicker call gave the Huskies their fifth and sixth first downs of the game.

> I wasn't unhappy, but problems exist that aren't apparent in a game like this.
> • Bill Snyder
> head football coach

"They were doing the same stuff," Ochs said. "We were just having some breakdowns, some bad mistakes, mostly in penalties, too. Three penalties, and they were big penalties, too."

However, the Huskies never managed to turn any of their lucky breaks into points.

The Cats scored twice more. Junior place kicker Martin Gramatica put up a 37-yard field goal, and junior defensive tackle Andrae Rowe turned one of the six sacks of Jackson into a safety.

To end the game, the Cats added only 75 rushing yards to the first half's 211, and an even more dismal 34 passing yards to net 492 total.

The Cats dominated the game and covered the point spread, but Snyder said certain positions would get special attention this week in practice.

"I wasn't unhappy, but problems exist that aren't apparent in a game like this," Snyder said. "I wasn't disappointed with the game in the most part, but I am concerned about our running backs."

Most of the Cat roster appeared on the field, including backup quarterbacks Adam Helm and Casey Vidricksen. Some glaring absences included fullback Brian Goolsby and junior right tackle Ryan Young, who started every game last season.

"Ryan hasn't been able to practice with us for the last three or four days," Snyder said. "He'll be back on Monday."

Redshirt freshman Adrian Beard was injured early in the first series of the second half. No official report was available, but Snyder said Beard's prognosis didn't look good.

"In all likelihood, we're going to lose Adrian for a considerable amount of time," Snyder said.

No one expected perfection, least of all the players. Now, Ochs said the team has an idea of what to fix.

"We've just got to cut down on some mistakes and improve a little bit on some basic fundamentals," Ochs said. "It's the first game."

DIANA

the mourners within and without the ancient abbey.

As he stood near Diana's coffin in hallowed Westminster Abbey, he ripped into newspapers and photographers who had made her the most hunted person of the modern age.

"There is no doubt that she was looking for a new direction in her life at this time," Spencer said.

"She talked endlessly of getting away from England, mainly because of the treatment she received at the hands of the newspapers.

"I don't think she ever understood why her genuinely good intentions were sneered at by the media. My own, and only, explanation is that genuine goodness is threatening to those at the opposite end of the moral spectrum."

Diana might have tired of England, but the kingdom and the world had not tired of Diana, the devotion evident in the mounds of bouquets outside palaces, the long waits to write a word of sympathy, the sobs of many along the way.

At least a million people had pressed into the center of London to pay their respects, and hundreds of thousands more lined roads along the way to the burial site at the family estate in Northamptonshire.

The queen returned early to London, talked with mourners assembled at Buckingham Palace and agreed to fly the national flag there at half-staff on Saturday for the first time in history.

The monarch bowed her head as Diana's coffin passed the gates of Buckingham Palace on the way to the abbey.

Prince Andrew was one of the few other family members to take her cue and lower their heads.

land. He said that because no field of research can hope to examine every part of the prairie, the scientists have chosen specific parts they think will represent the whole.

For the past year, Robel and his team have been studying the birds. The area actually has three types of land: grassland, woody brakes and forests. Similarly, there are different types of birds that live in the different lands.

More than 40 different species of birds have been studied, Robel said, including forest birds such as tree sparrows, woodpeckers, woodland flickers and chickadees.

Also included are grassland birds like dickcissels, upland sandpipers, quail and meadowlarks, the state bird. Many of these can only survive in a grassland environment, Robel said.

"We're expecting to see a loss of most of the grassland birds," he said. "Those birds won't have a place to go, so they'll probably be dead."

Robel pointed out that the area now inhabited by residents of Manhattan was once home to prairie chickens. Now prairie chickens just aren't anywhere around, he said.

Indeed, Kansas was once a big patch of prairie, Thien said. Over time, the prairie has been replaced by farmland, cities and roads. Each one of those has had an effect on the prairie and has changed it significantly.

"What we're really interested in," he said, "is what the sustainability of our natural resources is and if changing the resources such that it will have a negative impact on the people who live here."

The prairie chosen for the Colbert Hills project is typical as far as prairie land goes, Thien said. His team of agronomists have dug pits to study the type of soils, and found a variation in depth and fertility, he said.

The project has actually brought many scientists to study an area of prairie they haven't been to before. Both Thien and Robel said their areas of research have been elsewhere, such as Fort Riley and the Konza Prairie.

But the scientists are just there to observe, and can't make recommendations to the architects or superintendents, he said.

"If we can show what the impact of that golf course will be on our natural ecosystem, then we would be in a position to make some recommendations," Thien said. "But we're not in position at this time because we don't know what the impact will be."

Robel said his teams are using two different methods of tracking the birds — line trends, where they walk 150 meters in a straight line, observing birds, and point counts, where they spend a shorter amount of time in one spot intensely looking for signs of bird life — and will be interested to find which method is better.

"We'll be able to compare the two methods and see which is better to use on golf course situation in the future," he said.

The entire process of studying the land will be a three- to five-year project, Thien said. Robel thinks it will be in the area of five to 10 years.

Thien pointed out that though a golf course project might seem unpleasant, it's likely to be less harmful by comparison to housing or blacktop parking lots.

"Golf courses turn out to be the major green areas in a lot of urban areas," he said.

"In that way, they have a lot of benefits, in terms of a sanctuary for birds and animals, conversion of carbon dioxide back to oxygen, for recreation and for water filtration.

When an area is covered with parking lots and roads, rainwater will have to drain off somehow, he said. On a golf course, vegetation will still be the cover.

Golf courses may be harmful, he said, but compared to what other harmful entities is the important question.

Colbert Hills will be a multi-use facility, Thien said, prime for environmental research and turf management research once the golf grasses are laid. There will also be a youth academy formed for the site's benefit, and of course, K-State golf teams will use it for practice and games, he said.

The golf industry has understood the environmental effect, and in recent years, has moved away from the pristine landscape seen on televised tournaments and tried to keep the natural landscape upon which it is built, Thien said.

Superintendents in charge of the course will be trained to maintain the course as a partner with the surrounding landscape, he said. The grasses used on the course will be selected to need the least water and chemicals to keep the healthy green color, and the superintendents will understand how it all works, he said.

"When you compare an urban homeowner, who has not had training, but is using some of the same chemicals that a golf course uses," Thien said, "which one would you want to have as your neighbor?"

Colbert Hills developers are planning to add housing as well. Robel said the plans he saw included an estimated total of 600 to 700 homes.

But for the golf course, architects will use as many native plants as they can. Robel added that there is even the chance that the habitats of grassland birds might even be enhanced.

"The only reason that area is a pasture is because the owners have burned it off every three or four years. If you don't burn it, it'll go to trees, he said."

Golf course managers would want to keep the grasses instead of letting it turn to forest, he said, so there is a chance the wildlife will still have a place to live. But, he isn't sure whether the managers will actually do this.

But the scientists will be there studying everything that does happen, and their findings will be available. Thien said that's the whole plan — to gain information for use in the future.

"We don't want to go back and say 'This is what you should have done,'" he said. "We want to know what you did do, so that in the future, we can make that reference."

Thien said he hopes everything will work out for the university, Manhattan all residents of that area.

reduce the amount of waste passing through the city. In addition, the committee would like to build category programs so that in the future the trash will be separated and disposed.

Although the thought of sorting through trash does not sound appealing, K-State students will have the opportunity to work on the study.

"We will hire a student coordinator and a team of other students," Wedel said. "It's nasty work, but the students will be paid very well."

Wedel said the proposal is in the mail and ready to go. They are just waiting for the approval from K-State.

The spirit of giving

JASON BECK, freshman in architecture and Ryan Johnson, sophomore in elementary education, perch on a pole in the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity pole-sit Monday afternoon. Members of the fraternity will be sitting on top of a 10-foot pole in a 105-hour marathon to raise awareness and support for their philanthropy, PUSH America, which helps people with disabilities.

PI KAPPA PHI FRATERNITY BEGINS WEEKLONG POLE-SITTING FOR PUSH AMERICA

SAM FELSENFELD
staff reporter

They've been out there, sitting on a tower on the lawn outside the north entrance to the K-State Student Union, keeping their eyes open and making sure they do their job.

But for the members of Pi Kappa Phi, it's not "one if by land and two if by sea." Instead, it's pole-sitting for PUSH America, their annual philanthropy.

Pi Kaps will pole-sit for 105 consecutive hours — they started at 8 a.m. yesterday, and will be there until 5 p.m. Friday.

"It's in the middle of campus, and it's a way to gain attention," said Pi Kap Jeff Bullok, fifth-year senior in mechanical engineering. "It's an attention getter."

The fraternity raises money by collecting donations from people walking by, and it also has a quarter-race competition for sororities to participate in.

> "Being in a fraternity is more than just living together and having a good time. It's about being a leader and learning to contribute."
> • Mike Holmes
> philanthropy chairman

Sorority members drop quarters in a tube corresponding to their organization, and at the end of the week, the Pi Kaps cook breakfast for the winner.

All proceeds go to PUSH America, a nonprofit organization serving people with disabilities. PUSH America is the national Pi Kap philanthropy — the only philanthropy founded by a fraternity. Last year the K-State chapter ranked eighth nationally, raising $4,000 throughout the year.

Since the philanthropy was founded by Pi Kaps in 1977, it has generated more than $2 million, which goes to help people with disabilities nationwide.

"We do the philanthropy because part of the belief system of the house is to give back to the community," said Pi Kap philanthropy chairman Mike Holmes, sophomore in mechanical engineering. "Being in a fraternity is more than just living together and having a good time. It's about being a leader and learning to contribute."

In addition to the funds generated by the pole-sit, Pi Kaps raise money by standing on the side of a toll road near Wichita holding signs, handing out brochures and taking donations.

Still, the members of the fraternity said they enjoy pole-sitting.

"It's hot, but I enjoy heights, so it's pretty cool for me," Pi Kap Brad Beach, freshman in computer science, said. "I just sit there and watch people go by."

However, putting on the philanthropy also causes small problems for the Pi Kaps.

"At night, people come by and do night raids," Bullok said. "People from our house and other people like to launch water balloons over Seaton and throw eggs at us. But it's all fun. The people who are up there at night know something's going to happen."

Investigators without leads in burglary

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

Riley County Police Department investigators have no leads in a burglary early Sunday morning at JCPenney Co. Inc.

A suspect or suspects stole approximately $120,000 worth of jewelry in the 1 a.m. incident.

RCPD Lieutenant Buddy Mays said officers took two minutes to respond to an alarm at the Manhattan Town Center store. In that time, burglars broke through an exterior door and broke several jewelry cases, he said.

RCPD Investigations Lt. Herb Crosby said detectives are investigating the case.

"We're still working from the ground level on it. It is obvious that whoever did it was professional from the manner in which they went in and did it," he said.

JCPenney Jewelry Manager Everett Piper said the loot accounted for approximately 10 percent of his inventory. The suspect or suspects stole mostly gold chains, gold earrings and other gold merchandise, he said.

The jewelry burglary is a first for JCPenney in its Manhattan Town Center location.

"I've been here since the mall opened," he said. "This is the first time anything like this has happened."

Now, Piper said, employees are working through the tedious task of inventory.

"That's what we're doing now is counting everything to see what is missing. Other than that, it's business as usual," he said.

"We are checking surrounding areas to see if they have had any similar incidents," Crosby said. "We are trying to do a canvas of the area. That is all we know at the present time."

The jewelry counter was open Monday, and Piper said he should receive a shipment of stock to replace the stolen merchandise by tonight.

Fraternity house on market; alumni purchases new facility

KERRY BOYDSTON
staff reporter

It is true. The Triangle fraternity house is for sale.

K-State chapter of Triangle Fraternity, formerly at 221 N. Delaware Ave., closed its doors over the summer and has moved to 1008 Ratone St.

"We have moved, and our old house is for sale," said Aaron Fish, junior in public relations and external vice president.

GREEK LIFE

Triangle alumni and members decided to move into a different house after an extensive look into the cost of basic upkeep for their former house.

The cost of maintaining the house, which was built in 1907, was too high for members. The dining room, kitchen and study rooms were in need of renovations.

Fish said they have 21 members, and half of them live out-of-house.

"It was going to be a lot more money than we thought for our size and the number of live-ins we have," Fish said.

To accommodate its members, Triangle alumni decided to buy a small house so they could keep their equity and not spend it on renting apartments.

"We now have six guys that live in a new house on Ratone," Fish said. "It's more of a residential-type house with two separate annexes behind the main house."

Buying a smaller house also allows Triangle to keep unity among its members.

"We still have a place where we can come together each week for meetings, and we can even have our date parties here," Fish said.

Members are still moving memorabilia and awards from their old house on Delaware.

"It is really tough going from a house with capacity of 40 to a house with capacity of 10," Fish said. "We are looking for places to hang our awards in the new house, and we've already thrown a lot of stuff away."

Carson Matile, sophomore in political science, said the move did not really bother him.

"I see it from a different level. I lived out-of-house last year, and it didn't affect me as much as the in-house guys," he said.

Triangle members are looking to the move as a way to help them increase their membership.

"We are in a transitional period now," Fish said. "This year, we have more pledges than expected and since we're almost all moved into our new house, we can focus on rushing more men."

The ultimate goal of Triangle fraternity is to build a membership totaling from 40 to 45 members in the next three to five years.

"I just want everyone to know we are still alive and kicking. We're not closed," Matile said.

Quality of Life exposition scheduled for Fort Riley soldiers, area residents

SARA BURDETTE
staff reporter

The Fort Riley Quality of Life exposition might not offer the meaning of life or answer deep questions about the future. But for Fort Riley soldiers and the surrounding area, it is a way to find out how to get more involved.

The expo is scheduled from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Thursday at Custer Hill Activity Center in Fort Riley. It is free and open to the public.

"The Quality of Life expo has over 70 booths of different agencies and organizations and the services they provide," Deb Skidmore, media relations officer, said. She also said the booths include activities, services and entertainment in the area.

"For people new to the area, it's one-stop shopping," Skidmore said.

This is the 10th year for the expo and every year it gets larger. Jenith Dunbar, project officer, said last year the event brought in more than 4,000 people.

"This year we hope for even more people. We have a lot of neat booths, prizes and entertainment this year," Dunbar said.

Information Ticket Registration, a service that provides soldiers and their families with discount tickets, tours for soldiers and their families and other entertainment services, has worked hard to provide a day filled with entertainment.

"This is a big program for us," Theresa Mayes, manager of ITR, said. "It's our way of advertising our services to the people."

Mayes also said they plan to have more entertainment this year than the past few years.

"Every 30 minutes there will be some form of entertainment," Mayes said. "Some of the groups involved are the Manhattan High School and Junction City Middle School choirs. The Historical Society is doing living stories where they dress up like characters in books and wander through the expo, and the YMCA is putting something together, also."

The expo will also have food vendors, outside exhibits, contests and door prizes.

Mayes said one of the contests is for the best booth. The organization that can best inform people about its service will win a prize.

Those who plan to attend the expo can also walk away as winners.

"Once the individual has walked through the whole expo, they are eligible to win an all-expense-paid trip for two to Los Angeles," Dunbar said. "They have to go through the whole exhibit in order to be eligible, though. That way they don't miss anything."

Dunbar said this event has been planned since March.

"A large variety of organizations and the surrounding community participate in the Quality of Life," Dunbar said. "We get a lot of community sponsors, but I also call each organization personally to see if they want to be a part of the expo."

Dunbar said she is ready for the big day. "We have worked really hard for this. Everything has come together really well. I hope it shows on the day of the expo."

▶ Want to get involved? The Fort Riley Quality of Life exposition is scheduled from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Thursday at Custer Hill Activity Center in Fort Riley.

City offering 'amnesty' to 28,000 with outstanding traffic tickets

WICHITA — Traffic and parking scofflaws in and around Wichita are about to get a break.

City officials plan to offer amnesty to 28,000 people with outstanding warrants for unpaid traffic and parking tickets in Municipal Court.

The city wants to clear its books of thousands of old traffic cases, while giving people named in the warrants a chance to clear their records and save money on warrant fees.

"The amnesty program not only waives the warrant fee, but it eliminates the threat of arrest," said city spokeswoman Kristen Peck.

Warrants are issued when a ticketed traffic offender fails to pay the fine on time. A warrant can add $10 to $15 to the cost of each old ticket.

To help spread the word about the program, the city is considering running an advertisement in The Wichita Eagle next month that would list more than 20,000 people with outstanding traffic warrants.

A ticketed person whose name is on the list would qualify for amnesty. Someone whose name isn't there would have to check with the city about what to do next.

City Council members are set to vote today on whether to go ahead with the plan to publish the names of those eligible for amnesty.

Doctors: eating squirrel brains may cause mad-cow disease

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Squirrel brains are a lip-smacking memory for Janet Norris Gates. They were the choicest morsels of the game her father once hunted in Tennessee.

"In our family, we saw it as a prized piece of meat, and if he shared it with you, you were pretty happy. Not that he was stingy," Gates, an oral historian in Frankfort, said, "but there's just not much of a squirrel brain."

Now, some people might want to think twice about eating squirrel brains, a backwoods Southern delicacy.

Two Kentucky doctors last month reported a possible link between eating squirrel brains and the rare and deadly human variety of mad-cow disease, Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, thought to strike one person in 1 million, produces holes in the brain. Symptoms include loss of muscle control and dementia. It might take years, even decades, for symptoms to appear.

Son charged after mom, 100, left in car during fair visit

BURTON, Ohio — Police arrested a man who left his 100-year-old mother reading in the car while he visited a fair — even though that's where she wanted to be.

Leonard Wohlander, 74, and his mother, Ada Foosha, said she enjoys taking a ride twice daily and routinely sits in the parked car reading while her son runs errands.

She did the same thing recently while her son, his wife and two daughters went to the Great Geauga County Fair.

Foosha spent the time reading Charles Dickens' "A Tale of Two Cities." She had been there about three hours when a parking attendant noticed her and called police.

Officers found Wohlander on the fairgrounds and arrested him on a misdemeanor charge of failing to support a dependent. He could face six months in jail and a $1,000 fine if convicted.

Police Chief Dennis Nichols said Foosha was in good condition, but he was shocked that she had been left in the car.

"She's got the window open. She's got food," Wohlander responded.

He said his mother won't let anyone be brought in to watch her.

"She's content in the car because she reads her books and her papers," he said.

Foosha said she was surprised by the fuss. "I always read. I don't mind sitting there," she said.

Series of lectures covers ins and outs of scholarship hunting

DAVE THOMPSON, chair of the Department of Educational Administration and Leadership, spoke Monday afternoon to faculty in attendance at the Little Theatre in the K-State Student Union. Thompson, one of six speakers, spoke about the legalities and funding of school systems.

Deans discuss scholarship in lecture series

COLE EHMKE
staff reporter

The deans of K-State's nine colleges will be speaking on how their colleges define scholarship during the 1997-98 Provost's Lecture Series.

The series, Visions of Scholarship, begins Monday with a presentation by Mike Holen, dean of the College of Education.

Provost James Coffman said this year the annual series describes what they mean by scholarship in the various disciplines represented in the deans' colleges.

"In past years the series was primarily about teaching trends and innovation," Coffman said.

During the fall and spring, each of the deans will speak about the meaning of scholarship and the standards of academic work. This is also the first year that the deans will be the primary speakers. The series comes as universities across the nation, including K-State, evaluate their effectiveness as learning and research institutions.

As universities face increasing financial and academic demands, through programs like the Kansas Board of Regents' Vision 2020, they must create a fluid and flexible curriculum and an individualized approach to the time and talent of the professors, Coffman said.

In essence, they must relate the university more to contemporary life and the individual professors' strengths to their work. For professors, that may mean their time is better spent working side by side with students rather than working solely on research.

University Teaching Scholar Chair Ann Stalheim-Smith said in the past there was a priority to research that has shifted in the past five to 10 years to putting general scholarship and teaching into the classroom.

"Scholarship is out there for teaching as well as for research," Stalheim-Smith said. "A lot of professors have not focused on the scholarship of teaching."

The lecture series is part of an ongoing look at the university's mission that started three years ago.

Stalheim-Smith is the third University Teaching scholar chair, and as part of her responsibilities she is planning a series of discussion groups for professors.

The discussion group would allow professors an opportunity to share teaching techniques that have worked for them in the classroom.

She is also evaluating the Principles of Biology class that has switched to a technology-based format as well as looking at ways to bring scholarship and teaching to campus.

The series is aimed at faculty and administrators but is open to everyone.

Political science professor discusses recent developments in Congo

LORI GUILFOYLE
staff reporter

A professor of political science described his recent 15-day trip to his home country, Democratic Republic of Congo, formerly Zaire, at the first Vernon Larson International Luncheon.

Kisangani Emizet discussed the home country where he once served as an adviser of political and economic affairs in his speech "From Mobutu to Kabila: Recent Political Developments in the New Congo." Monday's lecture was sponsored by the Office of International Programs.

To understand the current situation of Congo, Emizet provided a brief history of the country. Referring to what he called the "Colonial Legacy," he outlined the social and economic context of the political situation in Congo.

First, the colonial system created a centralized state in central Africa, putting ethnic groups together in defiance of any ethnic criteria. Second, urbanization occurred, forcing groups to create ethnic associations and eventually led to the formation of the first political parties. Third, Europeans did not educate Africans — a point which became critical in 1960 when Congo became independent and there were only seven college graduates in Congo, Emizet said.

"The first five years of independence highlight the fact that the colonial system was not designed for African self-rule," Emizet said.

Without the support of the colonial system, Congo began to experience crippled economic development. There were no hospitals, no running water, no schools and no clothes, Emizet said. He puts the blame on Congo's first president and his strategies of corruption and disgrace to members of the party.

"The colonial system was probably the best system in Africa," Emizet said. "Why? Because everything was there."

A new president was elected with the support of surrounding countries in May 1997, Emizet said. However, Emizet said he was skeptical of whether the new administration would survive. The government has a lack of political stability, which Emizet said remains a critical element.

"I am pessimistic, quite frankly, I don't see any light in the near future. It will take time, that is for sure," Emizet said.

Although he had recently visited his home country, Emizet said he remained pessimistic about some of those changes.

"His ideas were a little pessimistic. He hasn't seen change in a long time," Navin Najiah, K-State alumnus, said. "I'm more optimistic. Things will get better."

Dale Herspring, head of the Department of Political Science, said he respected the Emizet's research.

"In listening to him, you will be amazed at both the breadth of his knowledge and the understanding of the practical and the theoretical aspects of what is certainly at least one of the headlines on one of the key news stories of this year," Herspring said.

Provost's Lecture Series 1997 - 98

OPINION

NEXTissue

What are the news media attacking this week?
Themselves, of course. Russell Fortmeyer looks into the news media's sudden fascination with itself.

All students, not just greeks, should volunteer to help charities

Pop quiz, K-State: What do pole sitters, mud volleyball and beach bashes have in common?

The answer's easy. All three involve raising funds for local charities.

Granted, the activities that raise these funds tend to start in the greek community and tend to have a larger number of participants and stronger organization.

However, those independent of the greek community, answer this question: What's your excuse for not dropping a quarter in a can or volunteering some time at a local charity?

Sure, a number of independent students want to help out with charities or donate money to various causes.

For those who do volunteer, good job.

Remember the large, publicity-grabbing events grab attention. People donate time and money. The charity the events are for gets the benefits.

But you don't need to be greek to make a difference.

All organizations could do a little to help out.

For everyone, it's a civic duty, not just as a member of a certain organization, but rather as a part of the human race.

That's where the Collegian is putting some weight behind the gripe. Here's the solution.

Campus groups, greek houses and active volunteers send us e-mail, stop by the newsroom or call us. Let us know what events you have coming up that are for a good cause.

We'll get the word out.

Area charities in need of volunteers, K-State has more than 20,000 people walking around looking for ways to beef up a résumé or help agencies out of the kindness of their hearts. Let us know what's going on, and we'll get the word out.

In the near future, we'll compile a list of the activities and benefits, and our readers will be able to contact you on how to help you out.

And students should remember the Collegian's not just printing this list to take up space on a slow news day.

The Collegian staff seriously wants to see people helping each other out.

Go ahead, have some sin

It may not be nice, but this evil is necessary

VIEWPOINT

JON KURCHE

JON KURCHE is a freshman in physics. You can send e-mail to Jon at jsk6609@ksu.edu.

Since everyone else in the opinion section has written a column about sin, I think I should throw my hat into the ring. There is a deadline to meet, after all.

The problem with religion, though, is that it is consistently bound to make someone angry. Say the word "God" in a crowded street, and someone will attack you. This has been tested and proven by the equation

E=mc-(smack on the head for talking about religion in public).

Tragically, this complex equation also has another, deeper result — one which scholars and theologians have been denying for years:

Sin is good.

Sin is GOOD.

Now, before you get out the typewriter to berate my editor for allowing me to print this tripe, think about it. Without sin, there could be no delineation between bad and good, so there would be no good.

Without good, there would be no pleasantness. Without pleasantness, there would be no friends. Without friends, there would be no friends of the opposite sex, consequently no reproduction and the species would die off.

So there.

OK, Jon, you say. That's all nice, but what about reproducing asexually? No sin there — we could all just divide in two, squirm around a bit and then pop, instant twin! Messy, but effective.

Ha, say I! In Genesis 4:56-32 the big guy makes it pretty clear that asexual reproduction may be all right for paramecium but not people. Remember the story of the apostle Gus.

"And Gus, upon witnessing the noble eukaryotic life form in its environment, saw that it was one and then it was two. This pleased Gus, so he followed suit. Then he was two, too.

And the Lord God descended and saw two of Gus. Thinking it was the trip down, the Lord God said, "I must find a better way to descend from Heaven."

This process of materialization causes me to hallucinate. A deity shouldn't be treated like this. I am the Creator of the Universe, after all." And the Lord rubbed his eyes, and Gus did not resolve back into one person. The Lord God saw it wasn't good.

"Gus," the Lord said, "when I said 'Be fruitful and multiply,' I did not mean asexual reproduction. I reserved that form of propagation for the higher life forms." And the Lord God unleashed Wrath, who wasn't feeling wrathful that day, so it decided to play with the Guses, and they became friends. Then God went to have a sandwich. So it is written that thou shalt not reproduce asexually."

If we were really intended to be sin-free and perpetually right morally, we would have been created that way. As it stands now, the only way to be completely sin-free would be to sit in one place at all times and watch public broadcasting.

Fair enough, but it doesn't sound like much fun. Instead we choose to struggle with our day-to-day existence and dash in a little enjoyment on the side. The recreation is usually sinful, but it is a necessary evil. Virtue comes in knowing that you are not perfect but trying to achieve moral perfection anyway. We aren't all automatons.

The key is that you try your best with what you have. Be comfortable with yourself, which is the only truly noble pursuit.

As for God, I think he suffers from poor self-esteem. You would think he would have better things to do than watch our every move — I think it's paranoia ...

Since the Collegian is now online and thereby published all over the planet at collegian.ksu.edu, I know God is reading this column. That's good. I have a couple of bones to pick.

To begin with, who is God to tell me what to do? So he's the supreme being — big deal. I'll bet he's never used the bathroom in a fraternity house before. Besides, everyone knows that the creator of the universe was really computer mogul and super-nerd Bill Gates. He has more money than God, at least. (By the way Bill, this column was written on an Apple computer that was manufactured long before your acquisition of the company. Ha ha!)

Additionally, what's wrong with using God's name in vain? If someone used my name as a cuss word, I would be ecstatic. At least they would be acknowledging my existence.

'Jon dammit!' or 'Kurche on a crutch!' Is that not good enough for you, God? You're the supreme being, and you can't handle a few negative vibes? Can't handle a jibe at your supreme ego? Too sensitive, maybe? And you ask us to worship you? Ha! Show me something worth worshipping.

Well, don't smite me or anything, I was just kidding.

Maybe I've been a little harsh, but I'm sure God has a good sense of humor. How else could you explain the Golf Channel or the 1970s?

All right, so I'm going to hell. My only request is that I am furnished with a decent two-bedroom condo in the underworld. I want to be ready in case someone down under forces me to reproduce asexually. It is eternity, after all.

NAKED ROADS

Proper road markings can make life's journey a little smoother

The next year will see completion of the last road work authorized under the current Kansas Comprehensive Highway Program, which so far has spent several billion dollars improving state highways in Kansas, adding new roads at an average rate of 200 miles a year and replacing older bridges with modern designs capable of handling heavier traffic.

Gov. Bill Graves would like to renew this program, and there are still good arguments for more road-building even now that we've spent so much money upon it. But there is no one single project that looks as if it would be a good investment of state highway money.

The Kansas Department of Transportation has already finished a feasibility study for a new freeway following the present U.S. Highway 400. It has decided that it would not pay for itself if constructed as a toll road.

We desperately need more freeway lanes between Kansas City and Topeka. However, to avoid siphoning off revenues from the current turnpike, the Turnpike Authority will be asked to design, build and charge toll upon them. Neither KDOT nor state highway money will be involved.

Recent needs summaries for completely new roads between other large towns in Kansas have so far shown more wants than needs and widespread resistance to new taxes to finance their construction.

So road construction in Kansas would probably be modest under renewal of the highway program. However, doing so would provide a marvelous opportunity for some relatively cheap bread-and-butter improvements. This would make it easier for people to travel around the state and so increase tourism revenue.

Take the county roads. Kansas has the fourth largest mileage of public roads in the nation — behind only California, Texas and Illinois — but one of the smallest state road systems. Transportation law allows KDOT to designate as state road, in any given county, a mileage no greater than the sum of the east-west and north-south distances through that county. Several counties, notably Sedgwick and Johnson, have more miles of state road than this but only by specific legislative authorization.

This means that the state highway system is effectively limited to about 15,000 miles, whereas the total public road mileage in Kansas is closer to 130,000 miles. Except in relatively infrequent cases, as when a county road connects two state highways and the county receives money from the state to pave it to state standards, these roads do not have to be uniformly built or marked.

As part of a new highway program, the state could require all counties to adopt uniform route marking. An example is using the yellow-on-blue signs that Riley County already uses. Counties whose roads extrapolate a city street grid, as is the case in Johnson, Sedgwick and Shawnee, would be forced to get rid of their white-on-green city-style markings. They can't be read well enough at 55 mph to allow people to find the side streets they want. Such a change doesn't need to be painful. For example, West 21st Street North in Sedgwick County could become Route W21N.

Some counties are too poor to mark their roads but have interesting landforms or other attractions that can be accessed only by secondary routes. They could apply to the state for block grants to finance new signs. This would enable Gove County, for example, to put up better signs leading tourists to Castle Rock and the Chalk Pyramids.

County route numbers could also be put on the state highway map and so allow travelers to directly find these and other places instead of fumbling about with a Kansas gazetteer in the middle of the arid plains.

Other sign requirements would confer safety benefits. A second sign warning motorists of upcoming stop signs would help prevent the high-speed side crashes that are so common upon paved county section line roads. It would minimize the damaging effect of stop-sign thieves.

By imposing sign requirements upon the counties and being willing to help finance them, Kansas would achieve parity with other states that regulate their secondary road systems, including Minnesota (which has uniform marking), or Missouri and Virginia (which plan them at the state level), all of which have active tourism industries.

MARILYN MANSON ATTRACTS THE UNDERBELLY OF SOCIETY CREATING PEOPLE WHO STRIVE TO BE SOCIAL OUTCASTS AND FREAKS

KRIS EMMONS/Collegian

Have you ever observed somebody and wondered where freaks come from? Our society has a common, understood concept of what is normal, and some people voluntarily ignore the realm of the normal and venture into the land of the freaks.

A particular freak group showing an extreme effort of deviance is the Marilyn Manson band and its following. For those of you who do not know, Marilyn Manson is a hard alternative band that has won awards for Worst Band of the Year and Worst Excuse for a Record. It has an alternative Gothic following, which are people who dress and act like vampires.

If you have seen Marilyn Manson, then I am sorry you had to go through the trauma. The lead singer makes road kill look attractive, and the band's statements make you wish you were deaf.

Marilyn Manson said it would like to be remembered as "the (people) who brought an end to the age of Christianity." The lead singer has also said he "want(s) to be a positive and negative symbol."

Does this make any sense?

This might make sense if you were a freak, but these statements are complete gibberish to normal people.

However, I do understand why Marilyn Manson chooses to walk with the freaks — it gets paid lots of money for doing it. What I do not understand is why people worship Marilyn Manson. These people have voluntarily left the sane world to become complete weirdos.

These Gothic followers of Marilyn Manson roam around the night with fake, plastic vampire teeth. Their faces are painted white with make-up and they wear all black clothing, which really makes their all white face look even more freakish. They do not follow the normal Gothic lifestyle.

These people have very little intellect, because for them to become freaks they need to lose all rational thought. I went to the Marilyn Manson Must be Killed Web page at geocities.com/Athens/Acropolis/6749 and had a great laugh at these people's responses to this page.

Here is an unedited e-mail message sent to the creator of the Web page from a worshiper of Marilyn Manson: "You are most probably middle aged, lacking any sort of sex life, sadly christian, and most of all ... have a death wish. How dare you insult my second father. You insult the revrend, you insult me. I suppose its what you want, but i dont suppose you have considered the consequenses of your boring un-humor.you will die. when i find you ,and i will, your heart will be torn out thru your arsehole.how must your parents feel? Knowing their child has a world of anti-christ hate expelled to them.you are a loss. i will find you. dont think im joking."

That guy is a freak, and his e-mail response is one of the tamest posted on the Marilyn Manson Must be Killed Web page. I suggest checking the Web page out for a good laugh.

Of course there are plenty of freaks out there other than Marilyn Manson.

Elvis Presley fans can be freaks. Have you ever seen a woman dressed up as Elvis? It is a very sick sight. Religious cults can also be weird.

Remember a few months ago when that group committed suicide so that they could travel with a comet in order to become asexual beings?

Most of these freaks realize their abnormality. They do some very weird things. They still understand the concept of what is normal, but they choose to be weird.

I want to make a few clarifications on my attack on the weirdos that I described. One is that the Gothic lifestyle in general is normal. After all, all people are entitled to be free and choose their life-style.

VIEWPOINT

BOYD FERRIS

BOYD FERRIS is a senior in electrical engineering. You can send e-mail to Boyd at ferris@ksu.edu.

However, the problem I have with the Gothic crowd that worships Marilyn Manson is the fact that they strive to be abnormal. They purposely fight against normalcy.

That e-mail response to the Marilyn Manson Must be Killed Web page shows these people's mentality, and that message is not the only one. Most of these people's responses are unsuitable to be published in a newspaper.

There is no answer to why people purposely go against the flow of normal behavior to become freaks.

People should be made old-fashioned way

Editor,

Ken Wells brought up some interesting points in his Monday opinion column. While I am convinced that this particular column was constructed to draw negative feedback and attention, I find myself overtaken to respond to the ignorance portrayed within it.

He states that "we sit on our hands and disallow research that might save lives." Research is saving lives. We have discovered methods to extend the lives of even the most genetically troubled, and we have been able to do so without cloning any humans.

Is Wells proposing that we clone humans with the intent that they will have a genetic defect? I would consider it cruel to deliberately create a child who will suffer from sickle-cell anemia or cystic fibrosis. Or is Wells asserting that we should genetically engineer our clones not to have these diseases?

Sure, tomorrow's world will bring us the means to do this, but what about those of us who prefer to make our children the old-fashioned way? Once conception occurs in utero, the genetic stage is set for the offspring, and your precious clones can help you none.

Let's face it, humans have cognitive capabilities that sheep don't have. While Dolly probably doesn't know how she came to be conceived, a human would want to know. How would you like to know that a scientist cloned you from someone else for his disease research? Perhaps some wouldn't care, but I'm proud to be a genetically diverse organism. I am pleased to know that I was conceived through the emotional and physical processes of two other genetically diverse organisms.

As for science, nature has already provided a means to study genetically identical individuals. Twin studies and familial investigations have already proven the genetic natures of health defects. We don't need any clones to do it.

Wells is right about one thing. Societal factors contribute more to our lives than we probably think. Because we cannot ethically control a child's environment, we will never be able to resolve the hazy border between nature and nurture. So why should we try?

Faculty rep favors plus system

MATT KREPS

Phil Anderson has seen a lot of issues in the 10 years he has served as faculty representative to Student Senate.

Anderson, an instructor for the speech department, said he enjoys working with the student senators. He also likes the responsibility the senators have for allocating millions of dollars every year.

"That's a big chunk of change," he said. "The only thing we trade in is our ideas," Anderson said in reference to his position on Faculty Senate.

Anderson was appointed by the president of Faculty Senate to be the representative to Student Senate 10 years ago, and he never stopped serving in that position.

"As far as I know, there is no one that is dying to take over, so I just keep on doing it," Anderson said.

Anderson also teaches four courses in public speaking. Three are advanced public speaking classes, and one is a group discussion course.

"I teach with the idea that democracy is a contact sport," Anderson said. "We are a society that continues to evolve and develop. Change occurs, but for change to occur, someone has to go out and make it happen."

One of the most memorable acts during his tenure on Senate was the creation of the fine arts and athletic fees, Anderson said.

Both ideas had failed to be approved as bills, but still had a lot of votes. Anderson suggested putting both fees on the same bill so supporters would vote for both programs.

"The irony of that was the athletic department got the lion's share," Anderson said.

Two issues that Anderson thinks are important to K-State are parking and the plus system.

"I don't think we have a parking problem. We have a walking problem," he said.

Konza overlook to open southeast of Manhattan

▸ OVERLOOK TO EDUCATE visitors with 4 plaques describing area geology.

KRIS ROBL
staff reporter

The new Konza overlook, located three miles southeast of Manhattan, will be opening later this week.

The overlook was incorporated in the transformation of Kansas Highway 177 into a four-lane road.

The purpose of the site is twofold. It will be used to educate those who visit the site.

The site will feature four bronze plaques, which will be used to describe the geology of the Kansas River valley, the Konza Prairie and the tall grass area.

The overlook will also be used to view the beautiful scenery of the Konza Prairie.

The building on the site is made of concrete but layered with limestone on the outside. A sidewalk path, approximately one-fifth of a mile, was also added to connect it with the pre-existing trails.

"A handicap-accessible trail, leading into the Konza Prairie, will also be a feature of the overlook," Stan Whitley, Informational Specialist for the Kansas Department of Transportation, said.

The overlook will be more of a historical marker than a rest area, because there will be no lights or restrooms available at the site. There will be a parking lot, though, that can hold up to 15 vehicles.

The approximate cost of the overlook site will be $250,000.

"The overlook should open up sometime this week, depending on the weather," Whitley said.

Out with the old, in with the new

Willie the Wildcat 1997 edition

MISS THE OLD WILLIE?
With a few bucks, and a little luck, it could be yours.

JEFF PALMER
staff writer

The introduction of the new Willie the Wildcat might take some getting used to for many alumni and students.

Steve Kirkland, head cheerleading coach, said in the Aug. 26 edition of the Collegian that it was a group decision to change Willie's look.

However, people who want to hold on to the way Willie used to look will have that chance because of a raffle sponsored by the varsity and junior varsity cheerleading squads.

"We will be raffling off the Willie head that was used from 1978 to 1993," Chris Helvey, senior in finance and varsity cheerleader, said. "The Willie head from 1994 to 1997 will be used by the JV squad."

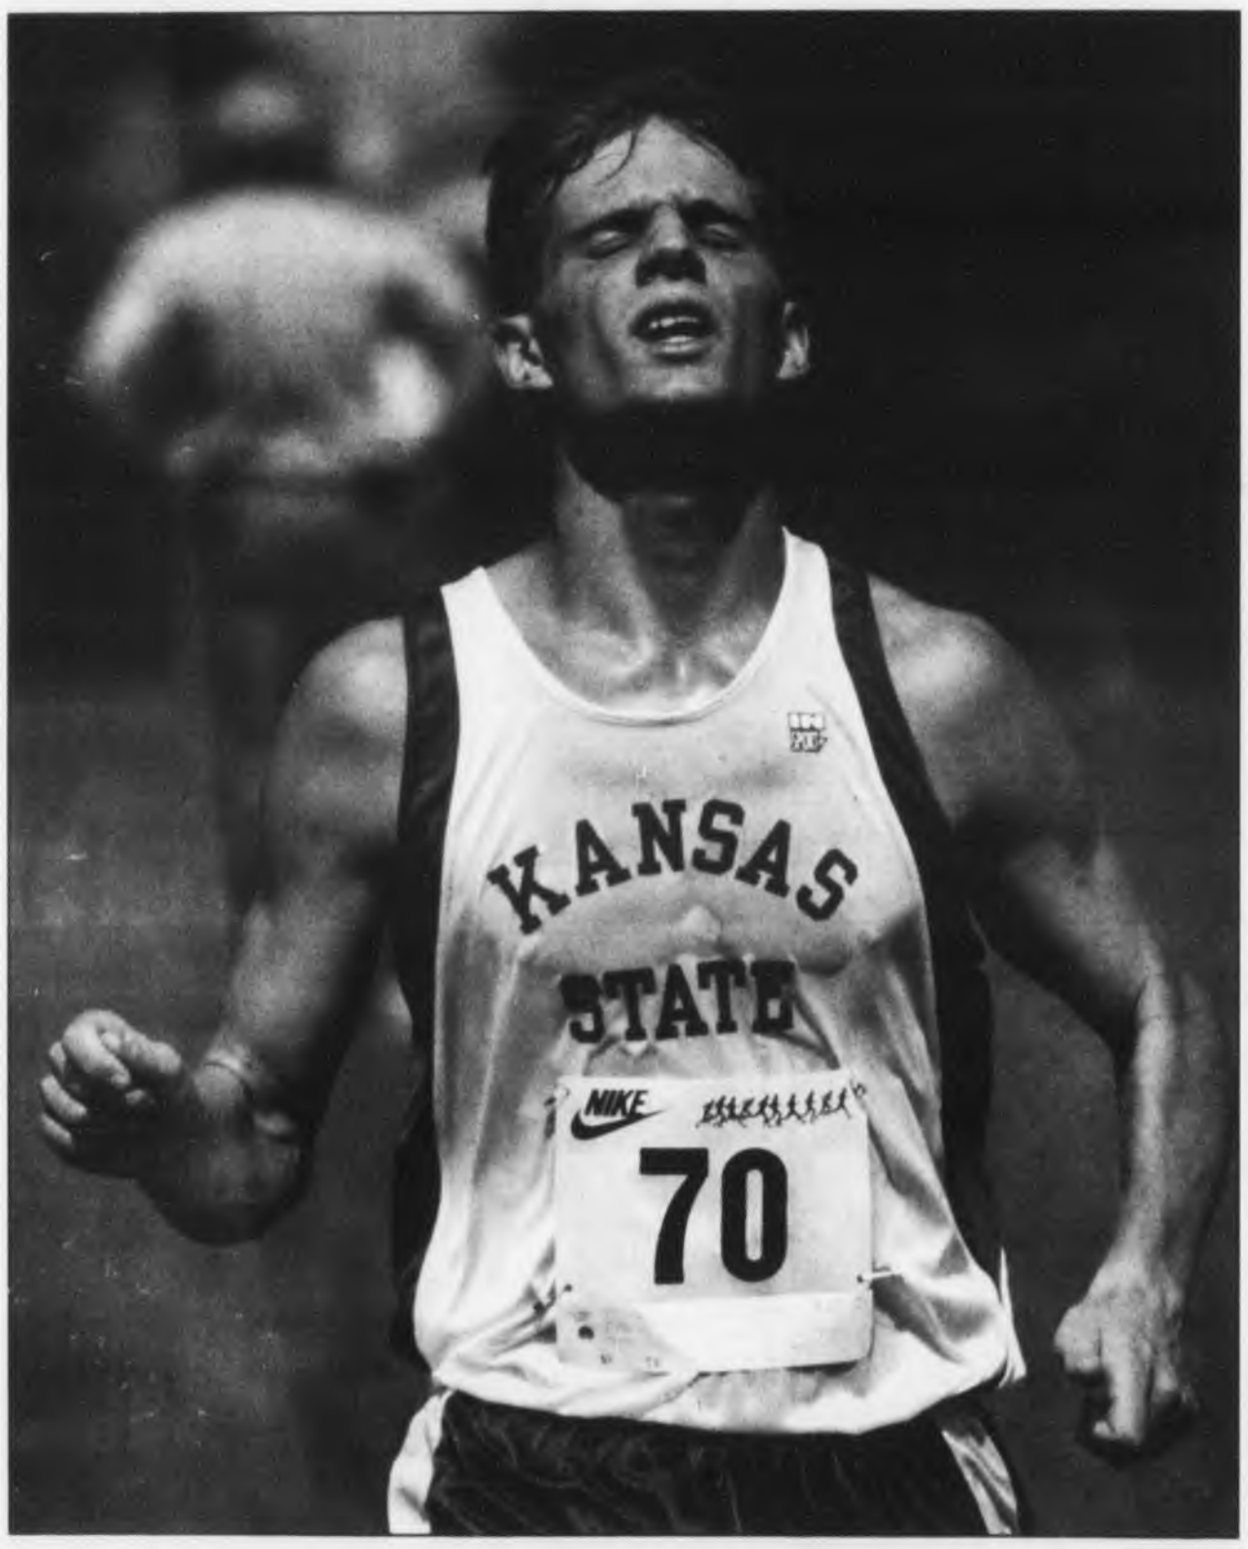
The raffle began at Fan Appreciation Day, and tickets will be sold at any event that cheerleaders are at and at all home football games.

Helvey also said tickets can be purchased by calling Kirkland at his office, and arrangements can be made to have tickets mailed.

Tickets for the raffle are one chance for $2, three for $5, seven for $10 and 20 for $20.

Money made from the raffle will benefit the cheerleading squad in a variety of ways.

"We will use the money for better equipment, new uniforms, scholarship money," Helvey said. "Basically wherever it is needed."



The drawing for the winner will be at the Colorado game on Nov. 15 at Wagner Field. The winner does not have to be present to win.

"It was basically a time to give Willie a facelift, and they wanted to have the shadowings of the Powercat on the mascot, so this was a proper time to do it," Helvey said. "However, the winner of the old Willie will be able to have a piece of K-State history for the rest of their lives."

The winner will receive the old head in a glass case with an engraving saying "Willie the Wildcat, 1978-1993."

Young runners shine, earn wins at 1st meet

▸ MEN AND WOMEN'S TEAMS COMBINE for 11 top-10 finishes at Kansas State Invitational.

ZACH VADER
staff reporter

The K-State men's and women's cross country teams opened up the season with a win Saturday afternoon over Fort Hays State and Nebraska at the Kansas State Invitational at Warner Park.

K-State produced a strong showing by placing five men and six women in the top 10.

First-year head coach Randy Cole said the race was very low key, and they wanted to gauge where they were after a long three weeks of training.

"The main things we were looking for were race preparation and who wanted to compete or had good race savvy," Cole said.

The K-State women were led by freshman Annie Wetterhaus, who ran the two-mile, hill-dominated course with a time of 12 minutes, 2.90 seconds.

"I don't think my time was that great," Wetterhaus said.

"I didn't know what to expect because it was my first collegiate meet."

Wetterhaus, a high school state champion from Illinois, said that her time, as well as her teammates' times, were slow because of the conditions of the race.

"It was very hot and there were a lot of hills on the course," Wetterhaus said.

The women that rounded out the top 10 were Kelly Andra (12:05.68); Alison Canny (12:29.74); Anita Hallauer (12:32.60); Ashlie Kinton (12:33.35) and Lindsay Moser (12:49.24).

The K-State women scored 21 points. Nebraska placed second with 51, and Fort Hays State came in a close third with 57.

Wildcat sophomore Justin Wrigley placed a team-high third with a time of 21:05.45. Nebraska's Jereon Broekzitter won the four-mile course with a time of 20:44.19.

The rest of the top-10 finishes were Zach Davies (21:08.35); Brent Stover (21:19.05); Brandon Jessop (21:24.35) and Joe Letourneau (21:24.64).

The men posted a score of 32, while Fort Hays State had 34 and Nebraska finished with 93.

Cole said the young team showed a lot of courage and heart toward the tail end of the course. He said this was why the Cats earned two victories.

"That was a sign," he said.

"Everyone showed strong enthusiasm and intent."

> "We will not have a mediocre mind set."
>
> • Randy Cole, cross country coach

K-State's next meet will be in Lawrence for the Jayhawk Invitational Sept. 13.

Cole said before the team goes to KU, much work needs to be done, and he does not want any of his runners to sell themselves short.

"I want everyone to elevate their sights," he said. "These young runners cannot afford to settle for being average."

Cole also said motivation needs to play a big part in future meets.

"The best motivator for an athlete who steps up to the start line is the knowledge that he or she has done everything possible in training," he said. "That no shortcuts were taken and it is time to test their fitness level."

Cole said this year's team must be excited about challenging the schools they compete with as well as themselves.

"We will not have a mediocre mind set," he said.

K-STATE CROSS COUNTRY runner Michael Thomas crosses the finish line at the Kansas State Invitational on Saturday at Warner Park. Thomas finished 14th with a time of 22:24.70.

On day of Diana's funeral, K-State football not most important thing

SUN DEE MILLS

SUN DEE MILLS is a senior in electronic journalism. You can send your e-mail comments to Sun Dee at sundee@ksu.edu.

CHICAGO — At O'Hare Airport in Chicago Sunday morning, I was compelled to buy a Chicago Tribune. Not to tear through the sports pages for the tiny story about the Wildcat rout of Northern Illinois, but to consume the immense coverage of Princess Diana's funeral.

The people I was with were amused by this, and they said, "Hopefully, this will be the end of it. I mean, it's not like she was the president or the king or anything."

As I tried to explain to them her importance to the British population, I asked myself why I was so disturbed by her death. It's not like I am British. I never met her.

I don't even consider myself an emotional "softie." I never cry at the movies that everyone else does. I didn't cry at "E.T." or "Jerry Maguire," or even "Rudy" (and the guy I was with sobbed openly).

She wasn't Michael Jordan, the greatest basketball player to ever grace a court. Can you imagine the funeral procession for the leader of the world champion Chicago Bulls, if he were untimely stopped from attempting his sixth trophy in the 1990s?

She wasn't Tiger Woods, a young man on his way to achieving icon status after winning the Masters in April. If Tiger were to die today, the golf world would be rocked by the tragic and much-too-early end of a would-be legend.

She wasn't Troy Aikman, cut short of leading America's team, the Dallas Cowboys, to yet another Super Bowl.

And she didn't have anything to do with Wildcat sports, which I have been living and breathing for the past year and a half.

Would my friends have understood if it had been one of those athletes?

And would I have been as moved by the tragedy?

Was it because her death at the young age of 36 makes my life seem that much shorter?

Was it because all of the suffering people she touched and all the causes she relentlessly devoted herself to make my job as a sports journalist seem so insignificant?

Was it the stupid men/Mars, women/Venus thing, and the Cinderella story Diana lived that didn't have the Walt Disney ending that I craved? Or was the sports fan in me upset because my "team" didn't win?

Or was it because her accomplishments of marriage, motherhood, public service, divorce and single motherhood — as the world's eye watched — made my goal of a professional sports journalist seem much more attainable?

Whatever the reason, I still set my alarm for 4:30 a.m. Saturday to see her laid to rest on live television, even though I had gone without sleep for the previous 48 hours on the trip to DeKalb, Ill.

As the sports editor, I was pleased with the coverage of the events in Illinois our trip enabled us to provide to Collegian readers.

As a Cat fan, I was happy to see Michael Bishop have a good first half. I've been more than ready for football to begin, and I was relieved that the first game went as expected. I also felt a lot of pride in our fan base when I saw purple sprinkled throughout Chicago and DeKalb.

But on this particular September Saturday, a Wildcat victory wasn't the most prominent thing on my mind.

"WAS IT BECAUSE HER DEATH AT THE YOUNG AGE OF 36 MAKES MY LIFE SEEM THAT MUCH SHORTER?"

Rain and shine didn't stop around 15,000 avid fans from attending the third-annual Jayhawk Music Festival on Sunday at Clinton Lake State Park in Lawrence.

"Every year it gets more popular. Word of mouth is a good thing," Seth Lamborn, senior sales specialist at Manhattan's Streetside Records, said.

Music Review

This year's eight-hour concert festival featured Frogpond, Local H, Helmet, Freddy Jones Band, Matchbox 20, Cake and Cracker. Some of the bands that performed last year were Violent Femmes, The Urge, Jackopierce and Poe.

The festival got under way later than scheduled because of early morning showers. The first band to perform was local band Frogpond, which headlined the night before in Manhattan for the Welcome Back Concert.

Local H was one of the earlier bands to play. The band formed in Zion, Ill., where the members went to high school together. They have been playing together for almost 10 years.

Scott Lucas, guitarist and vocalist for Local H, said the group almost didn't make the show that day because its bus had broken down. He said they almost didn't have a ride, but everything ended up working out.

Local H is doing a week's worth of shows with Fig Dish and Triple Fast Action.

"We're all friends from Chicago, so we decided to go on tour together," Gabe Rodriguez, tour manager for Local H, said.

Helmet and Freddy Jones Band took the stage next.

Matchbox 20 performed around 4 p.m.

"I stuck around just to see Matchbox 20 perform their song, 'Push,'" said Lindsay Jones, junior in family studies at K-State.

Cake and Cracker were the last bands to perform.

KLZR-FM 105.9, a Lawrence radio station, was mainly in charge of the promotional work for the concert. Jeff Petersen, assistant music director for the Lazer, said it was the station's job to let everyone know about it.

"The Lazer is really happy to be a part of a welcome back concert for all the area's colleges and high schools, and to be able to give all the proceeds back to the community," Petersen said.

The proceeds from this year's festival went to area charities such as Women's Transitional Care Services, Boys and Girls Club and Ballard Community Center.

Jacki Becker, a spokeswoman for Pipeline Productions, said these charities help eliminate poverty for children in Lawrence.

Jody Wakefield, senior sales specialist at Manhattan's Streetside Records, said Streetside had sold about 200 or 300 tickets to the festival, but that it was hard telling how many tickets they would have sold because they quit dealing with Ticket Master last Friday.

About 15,000 tickets had been sold by late afternoon the day of the concert.

"I really liked this year's music festival because there were a lot of bands I had never seen before there," Jones said.

GILROY, Calif. — Never mind that one of the star attractions is a frozen concoction of milk, sugar and granulated garlic.

Forget that traffic on the only freeway through town is backed up for miles or that it's so hot — 95 degrees and rising — that the endless clouds of dust are starting to stick.

This is the Gilroy Garlic Festival.

And Marilyn Novara, an employee of Gilroy Foods, one of the country's leading garlic processors, knows exactly why she's cooped up in a sauna-like tent serving garlic ice cream to the masses.

"Garlic," she says, "is gold."

The festival, which started in 1979, has earned Gilroy the title of Garlic Capital of the World. The Garlic Festival has brought in more than $5 million for charities since it began and millions more for local business. It's been so lucrative that surrounding towns are attempting to get a piece of the action.

Nearby Castroville now celebrates the artichoke. Stockton has the asparagus, Watsonville focuses on strawberries and Morgan Hill is host to the Mushroom Mardi Gras.

IFC brings bonfire back to Homecoming

▶ Sneak Preview. IFC will announce the top five Homecoming placements at the bonfire, before announcing the overall winners at halftime of the football game.

COLE EHMKE
staff reporter

Interfraternity Council will bring back the bonfire to this year's Homecoming celebration.

At an IFC meeting Monday, Chris Hansen, IFC vice president of external affairs, said several changes have been made to improve the Homecoming festivities. The main change is the addition of a bonfire at Memorial Stadium.

At the event, IFC will announce the top five Homecoming placements but will not announce the overall winner until halftime of the football game against Texas A&M. "It will be up in the air until we actually get to the game," Hansen said.

The timing of the event has also been moved from late in the evening to dusk so more people can attend.

The Classy Cats, cheer squad and band will also be on hand as well as staff from the football team.

Other Homecoming events include body building, float, spirit banner, Pant the Chant and parade competitions, and Paint It Purple, a community service project.

Eliminated from Homecoming was the Yard Art competition which was dying anyway, Hansen said.

Also at the meeting Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser, mentioned Phi Gamma Delta's intent to be substance-free by the year 2000.

Robel gave several reasons for a national trend to alcohol- and substance-free fraternities. Among them were spiraling insurance costs, a decline in membership and high expenses relating to house upkeep from damage done at open parties. Insurance for fraternities averages $75 per member. Sororities, which do not allow alcohol in their houses, average $12 per member, Robel said.

Also announced at the meeting was intent of the magazine K-Stater to write a feature article on the effect of litigation on the social life of fraternities. The article would promote what the greek houses are doing to manage risk as compared with fraternity life a generation ago.

AOL strikes agreement with CompuServe

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — America Online has struck a deal to acquire CompuServe's 2.6 million users, creating a cyber-behemoth that would be the Internet on-ramp for 60 percent of Americans logging on from home.

If approved by government regulators, the deal will allow America Online to swallow its closest competitor and add to its base of nearly 9 million subscribers, already the biggest in the industry.

Under the complex, three-way deal announced Monday, WorldCom, the nation's fourth-largest long-distance telephone company, will buy money-losing CompuServe for $1.2 billion and then sell its online business to AOL.

For its part, WorldCom will become a giant in its corner of the Internet, getting the AOL division that provides Internet access mainly for large businesses.

AOL will operate CompuServe as a separate business, and online subscribers might notice little difference, at least initially.

AOL, which features more entertainment services, such as games and chat lines, than CompuServe, said it doesn't plan to change CompuServe's online format, which is geared more toward business professionals.

Pricing will also stay separate, with AOL still charging $19.95 for unlimited access and CompuServe's fees ranging as high as $27.95 a month.

More immediately, some AOL users might have an easier time getting online. AOL will get access to an additional 100,000 modems from WorldCom, helping it avoid the bottlenecks that frustrated subscribers with busy signals earlier this year.

Wall Street embraced the news. AOL stock was up $6.75 per share at $76.68 in afternoon trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

On the Nasdaq, WorldCom was up $2.31 1/4 to $33.91 1/4, while CompuServe was down 37 1/2 cents to $13.12 1/2.

The agreement enables H&R Block, which owns 80 percent of CompuServe, to get out of a market that has caused frustrations for more than a year.

Former cadets sue Citadel for hazing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Former Citadel cadet Jeanie Mentavlos, one of two women who dropped out of the state military school claiming hazing and harassment, is suing the college for what her lawyer said Monday was a hostile sexual environment.

Mentavlos of Charlotte, N.C., and Kim Messer of Clover quit in January. Among their allegations was that male cadets set their clothes afire with fingernail polish remover.

"She just wanted to take advantage of the educational experience," Mentavlos' lawyer Richard Harpootlian said. "The Citadel created an atmosphere where it made it impossible for her to get an education."

The lawyer said Mentavlos would seek monetary damages in the federal lawsuit, but he would not say how much. "We think she lost a year of her life. What's that worth?" Harpootlian said.

A Citadel spokesman declined to make an immediate comment.

Mentavlos and Messer were two of four women who enrolled at the Charleston college last year. Neither Nancy Mace nor Petra Lovetinska, a Czech national from Washington, D.C., complained of hazing last year.

"A 50-percent failure rate, I think, would indicate that there was a significant hostile environment," Harpootlian said.

Federal authorities have investigated possible civil rights violations but have not announced their conclusions pending a meeting with the women's families.

The Citadel disciplined 14 male cadets as a result of the women's accusations, but prosecutor David Schwacke said there were too many discrepancies in evidence and witnesses' accounts to prosecute.

State Attorney General Charlie Condon then said he would review the allegations, but would not make an announcement until after the Justice Department says what it will do.

ANDERSON

Anderson said people who live close to campus should walk if they want to avoid congestion. They could also ride a bike. Either way, they get exercise and avoid having to search for parking, he said.

"I call it the non-workout workout."

Anderson also believes a plus system would help students be more competitive.

"Certainly in my classes, the class grade point average would go up," he said.

Anderson attributes his time to be involved with Senate to his instructor position. Because he is not on a tenure track requiring research, he has more time to devote to other causes.

"I will probably leave this place as the world's oldest living instructor," he said.

Anderson said he enjoys his work because of his contact with students and what they teach him.

"One of the reasons I enjoy teaching so much is because I learn far more from my students than they will ever learn from me. They just don't realize it," he said. "I teach the kind of course that since the world evolves, the course evolves, too."

Privilege Fee Committee to obtain input

▸ COMMITTEE TO VISIT campus dining centers to try to communicate with students.

SARA BURDETTE
staff reporter

The Privilege Fee Committee met Monday night to discuss a tentative schedule for upcoming events to help get the student body more involved.

Some of the activities will include a Committee of Campus, which will be in the K-State Student Union and will be open to the public to discuss concerns and suggestions.

A panel of committee members will also be at the dining halls around campus during dinner, and a Student Service Directors Forum will meet in the Union Courtyard to discuss the privilege fees of student services that will be reviewed this year.

Committee members will also speak at the Panhellenic Council and Interfraternity Council meetings.

The committee hopes to let the students know they will listen and welcome input.

"They may or may not come and talk to us, but at least they will see that we are making an effort, and that we care," Kim Peschka, Privilege Fee Committee secretary, said.

The committee also wrote a bill that will be introduced to Student Senate that creates two accounts consisting of the extra money from student fees.

The Campus Fee Adjustment account is for enrollment-related drops in the budget. The account should be 2.5 percent of $8.3 million, the 1997-98 student activities budget.

"That's basically our piggy bank account," Aaron Otto, chairman of the committee, said.

The second fee, the Campus Fee Reserves account, is a one-time adjustment fee that allows money to be allotted for unexpected equipment failure or equipment replacements. The adjustment account must be reach the 2.5-percent plateau before any money can go into the reserves account.

Otto said the reserves account is a cushion for next year's Senate.

"We're just setting up a plan for future generations to use," he said.

State funeral seen as high honor for Mother Teresa

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CALCUTTA, India — Mother Teresa might have preferred simple rites to the pomp of the state funeral being planned, but a friend and Roman Catholic Church officials said Monday she deserves India's highest honor.

"Mother was such a simple person. But if the government wants to do this, she would not have refused," said Sunita Kumar, a longtime friend of the Nobel Peace Prize laureate.

Prime Minister I.K. Gujral, who compared Mother Teresa to Mohandas Gandhi, one of India's most revered figures, ordered the state funeral this weekend, after the 87-year-old nun died of a heart attack Friday.

For the funeral on Saturday, her flag-draped body will be carried, on a gun carriage from St. Thomas Church to the Netaji Indoor Stadium, where a funeral Mass will be celebrated.

Rodricks said Lourde Swami, an Indian cardinal who has been designated the papal delegate, will lead the funeral Mass. He said Archbishop D'Souza may join the cardinal.

More than 20 cardinals and bishops from all over the world will join in the service. Indian President K.R. Narayanan and other dignitaries will also speak at the 1 1/2-hour-long Mass.

There was no immediate word on which foreign heads of state would attend the funeral. But the burial at Missionaries of Charity will not be open to outsiders.

About 10,000 mourners lined up this afternoon to pay their respects, to Mother Teresa at St. Thomas Church, according to police.

Halogen lamps declared a hazard

AT A GLANCE

The Consumer Product Safety Commission declared the 40 million halogen lamps in use in the United States a hazard. The group has blamed the lamps for 189 fires and 11 deaths since 1992.

JOHN HENDERSON
senior staff writer

That nifty floor lamp you got last year might be a fire hazard.

Halogen torchiere lamps were declared a hazard by the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission last week. The commission has launched a cooperative effort with the halogen lamp industry to provide materials for lamp owners to make them safer.

Spokeswoman Jane Francis said the commissionis aware of at least 189 fires and 11 deaths since 1992 that involved halogen lamps.

The lamps first became available in the United States around 1983 and have steadily risen in popularity. The group believes about 40 million lamps are now in use in the United States.

The lamps feature a shallow, bowl-shaped fixture on top of a 6-foot pole and use a tube-shaped halogen bulb that gives off intensely bright light at higher temperatures than normal bulbs, Francis said.

"The light they give off resembles daylight, which is why they're so popular," she said. "You can buy them for $20 to $30."

To correct the problem, the commission is offering free kits for the lamps. They feature a wire mesh guard that owners can place over the fixture which the commission hopes will keep flammable materials away from the bulb.

Lamp owners can obtain a kit by calling the commission at (800) 985-2220. It takes two to three weeks for a kit to arrive through the mail.

A list of retail stores that are giving away the kits is also available at the number. The businesses in Manhattan include Kmart and Wal-Mart. Representatives from both stores said anyone can come to the customer service desks at either store and receive a free kit.

Lamp owners shouldn't drape clothes over the top of the lamps or keep them near open windows because curtains can blow over them, she said.

Paul Schimming, junior in music, said his halogen floor lamp had a glass shield over the bulb, and it had never given him any trouble.

Francis warned that lamps bought before Feb. 5, don't have a second guard fitted above the fixture and are still dangerous.

"If the lamp doesn't have one of these second guards, whether it be wire or glass, you need to get one," she said.

Recycling needs support to work

CATHY BACH
staff reporter

K-State makes no money off recycling, but Steve Galitzer, director of the Department of Environmental Health and Safety, still searches for different ways to recycle.

The recycling efforts on campus divert around 50 tons of usable waste from the Manhattan landfill each year, John Ott, director of facilities services, said.

"The benefits are tremendous compared to what we put into it," Ott said. "We view the money as an investment."

Galitzer has started recycling transparencies, floppy disks, compact discs.

His department was already recycling many other items including paper, batteries, chemicals and aluminum.

He said his department's main responsibility is chemical disposal and recycling on campus, and he is always looking for new and better ways to recycle.

"It just seemed natural. We do medical disposal and chemical disposal, it just seemed fairly easy to do," Galitzer said. "It is a moral responsibility to recycle. We encourage departments to do what we're doing as long as they will to help out."

Galitzer said that he contacted 3M about transparency recycling and they are providing the labels to send them the transparencies. He said people interested in recycling transparencies can send them to him, and he will send them to 3M.

Galitzer also contacted Tyvek about disposing of their lightweight suits because Tyvek has a garment reprocessing system and

"THE BOTTOM LINE IS THAT EVERYONE CAN IMPROVE THEIR GRADES NO MATTER WHAT."

BSU conducts seminar to improve study habits

STORY BY JACOB JANSONIUS • PHOTO BY CLIF PALMBERG

Sometimes talking to an instructor or raising your hand in class to answer a question is intimidating. Black Student Union is emphasizing a program to help take some of that fear out of college life.

A program called "Where There's a Will, There's an A" was presented Tuesday night in the Union Little Theatre during the "Strategy for Making Good Grades" workshop. It is designed to help students stay in school and make improvements in their study habits. Colette McLemore, BSU president, said the key is pinpointing what studying strategies work for different people.

"Sometimes you have to experiment with different things. We are hoping to teach students the best strategy for them," McLemore said.

Stella Houston, senior in computer science, gave a presentation about strategies to improve study habits and homework skills.

Houston won the Scholastic Achievement Award from the black faculty and staff in fall 1996. The award is given to the black student with the highest grade point average in a semester at K-State.

"The key for many students is being interactive with your teacher. It is important to get to know your teachers, so you know how they think and feel," Houston said. "I want people to realize that they don't need to be intimidated by teachers. Professors are really personable."

Other helpful ideas that were given were tips such as setting aside a specific time to do homework every night, rewarding yourself with occasional breaks and tips on remembering new material.

James Woods, freshman in computer engineering, was just one of the students who attended the seminar and found it beneficial.

"The whole thing was pretty informative," Woods said. "I had trouble focusing on the wrong things when I studied before. I'm definitely going to try the memory thing I saw tonight."

Anyone who wants more information on academic assistance can visit the Educational Support Services office in Holton 201. They offer tutors and tips on improving your study habits.

"The bottom line is that everyone can improve their grades no matter what. There is always room for improvement," Houston said.

New phone systems will help with financial-aid questions

CATHY BACH
staff reporter

A new phone system at the Office of Student Financial Assistance might ease student frustration and the constant busy signal.

The financial aid office will receive the new phone system in the near future.

The system, purchased from Lucent Technologies, will give students a recording that will supply office hours, financial aid deadlines and codes.

Fred Damkroger, director of Telecommunications, said the recording will answer almost half of the questions that normally go to the financial aid office.

The second level of the service will tell students how many calls are on hold before theirs so the student can decide whether to wait on the line or call back later. The service will also update the call order as other callers are helped or hang up.

Larry Moeder, director of the finanical aid office, said the problem was not the number of phone lines.

"It is not uncommon at any financial aid office in the country to be busy at certain times of the year," Moeder said.

The financial aid office has as many as 12 lines open during its peak calling times during the spring and mid-summer.

"We monitor the calls, and if there are too many calls, we put more staff on," Moeder said.

The new phone system will answer many of the questions students have before they talk to an

Wildcat decals sell despite illegality

DO YOU HAVE A POWERCAT STICKER ON YOUR LICENSE PLATE?

If so, you could possibly face up to a $500 fine for defacing a license plate. Kansas Highway Patrol has begun ticketing for the show of spirit.

LESLE NACHTRAB
staff reporter

Showing K-State spirit is illegal — if purple pride means placing a Powercat decal between the letters and numbers of a license plate.

A common trend of K-State supporters, placing Powercat stickers on their license plates is considered an unclassified misdemeanor.

"It's essentially defacing a license plate. You're not supposed to put anything on there but the registration sticker you receive from year to year. Any other foreign object is illegal," said Capt. Allen Raynor of the Riley County Police Department.

In Riley County, the chances of being pulled over for defacing a license plate are slim, Raynor said.

"We haven't really had a problem with it, so we're not worried about it. I'm not saying that we're not enforcing it. We're just not concerned about it right now," Raynor said.

However, the Kansas Highway Patrol is taking a different approach.

Over the summer, the issue received media attention when several people were stopped by the Highway Patrol for having the stickers.

Wesley Wheeler, highway patrol officer, said despite the attention the Powercat logo received this summer, the violation has always been there.

"It's being enforced. It's always been enforced. The right individual was stopped, and everything came to a head. But it's always been there," Wheeler said.

Drivers caught with stickers on their plates can be subject to a fine of up to $500 and are asked to remove the sticker. The amount of the fine is determined by the court in that jurisdiction, not the officer making the stop. First-time violators are usually just given a warning.

"A lot of people don't know it's a violation. That's the first reaction when you stop them. There's usually just anxiety, which is usually the case any time someone is stopped by an officer. Most people are receptive to the idea, though," Wheeler said.

The stickers, which can be found at Varney's Book Store and the K-State Union Bookstore, appeal to students despite the possible consequences.

Ted Vanzante, senior in marketing, said he knows putting the sticker on his license plate is illegal, but he is taking his chances anyway.

"I haven't had any problems with the police because it's on there. It decorates my license plate and shows school spirit."

Wheeler said the Highway Patrol doesn't just focus on K-State supporters.

"They're everywhere. All state universities have things like this. It's not just picking on Wildcats by any means."

Student killed Tuesday in motorcycle accident

KRISTIN BOYD
staff reporter

K-State student Mike K. Newcomb, senior in pre-medicine, died Tuesday morning in a collision with a car while he was riding a motorcycle.

According to a Riley County Police Department press release, Newcomb was pronounced dead at 9:55 a.m. by attending physicians.

An article in The Manhattan Mercury on Tuesday said Newcomb died from severe head and facial trauma.

The driver of the car was Jane Clark, who suffered no injuries.

The article said Clark was at a stop sign attempting to make a left turn onto College Avenue from Vaughn Drive when Newcomb, traveling south on College Avenue, tried to avoid the collision by hitting the brakes and laying his bike on its side.

Newcomb's head hit the left front bumper of Clark's car, and the motorcycle continued moving for 40 to 50 feet.

The preliminary investigation indicates Clark didn't see Newcomb. Newcomb was not wearing a helmet at the time of the accident.

Newcomb was a 1994 graduate of Hays High School.

Lt. G. R. Grubbs, RCPD traffic commander, was unavailable for comment.

7 Up to rework soft drink's recipe to challenge Sprite

DALLAS — The maker of 7 Up is changing its flavor to make it crisper and less sweet — that is, more like market leader Sprite.

Marketed in the late 1960s as the Uncola, 7 Up rocketed in sales. But in the past decade, 7 Up has been losing market share to Coca-Cola Co.-owned Sprite and now has only 40 percent of the lemon-lime drink category.

Dr Pepper/Seven-Up will announce the flavor change Monday at a meeting of its bottlers in San Antonio, a source close to the company said Tuesday. The plans were first reported by The Wall Street Journal on Tuesday.

Seven-Up has been around for nearly 70 years, starting out in 1929 in St. Louis as the Bib-Label Lithiated Lemon-Lime Soda. Its maker, the Howdy Corp., soon shortened the name to 7UP Lithiated Lemon Soda.

American Indian mascots banished at Los Angeles schools

LOS ANGELES — The Braves and the Warriors must come up with new identities, now that the school board has ordered teams to rid themselves of American Indian-themed mascots.

"There's a time for everything to change, and this is the right time I think," University High School head football coach Marshall Jones said after Monday's vote. "It doesn't matter whether we're Warriors or Trojans or Buckeyes or what. The kids are going to play hard and do well."

American Indian groups say school teams called the Birmingham Braves, Gardena Mohicans and University Warriors are demeaning and promote racism. But some parents and students were upset that their long-time mascots were being retired.

At University High School, where the Warrior has been the school mascot more than 70 years, football player Heath Hamaguchi didn't like the change.

The Los Angeles Unified School District Board of Education voted 6-0, with one abstention, to require three high schools and one junior high school to drop Indian-themed names and mascots effective this school year.

A group of American Indians had a celebratory drumming ceremony after the vote. Activists first proposed dropping the names in 1980.

Interior Deptartment OKs oil drilling in national monument

WASHINGTON, D.C. — An oil company has won permission to drill an exploratory well in the nation's newest national monument.

Conoco, the oil unit of DuPont Co., owns drilling leases in the newly designated Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument in Utah and was granted a permit for a single exploratory well in the Kaiparowits Plateau.

Stephanie Hanna, an Interior Department spokeswoman, said Monday the application was approved after officials reviewed hundreds of public comments.

"It went through the normal process, complying with the national environmental policy acts," she said. "When President Clinton created the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument, it was with the understanding that valid existing rights would be considered."

Cooks turn out for Spam cook-off at Kansas State Fair

HUTCHINSON, Kan. — Spam is an inexpensive luncheon meat that — even its makers admit — gets no respect.

But the judges had no difficulty Monday in finding some tasty Spam dishes at the Kansas State Fair.

Linda Gronewaller, of rural Hutchinson, won first prize with her Savory Spam Torte — but admitted she hasn't tried it herself.

"We're not real big Spam fans," she said. "The only time we eat Spam is when we go camping."

Gronewaller said she got the idea for the torte, layered with cheese, spinach and red peppers, from chef Julia Child, and made it with Spam instead of ham.

She won $100, and her recipe will be entered in the national Spam cook-off. The winner of that event will get a $2,500 shopping spree at the Mall of America in Minnesota and the chance to be remembered as the king or queen of Spam.

Tour of West Africa will focus on exploring natural resources

JACOB JANSONIUS
staff reporter

Instead of sitting and watching party-goers at Times Square, blowing party horns, or wearing funny paper hats, students can welcome the New Year with villagers in the remote African village of Kiyi.

Ted Cable, professor of horticulture, is organizing the 16-day tour of two West African countries, Cote d'Ivoire and Ghana.

"The tour will focus on exploring the natural and cultural resources of West Africa.

"It will be a wonderful opportunity for the students to see a very unique part of the world," Cable said.

Cable said tour participants will track forest elephants and visit the world's largest cathedral and coastal forts from the slave trade period.

The trip to Africa will also be a trip of extremes. Participants will visit humid coastal forests, sunny beaches and dark equatorial forests.

"People will see stunningly beautiful scenes and startling tragic ones. This region is one of the most ethnically diverse in the world. Participants on this trip will be some of the very few Americans to ever set foot in many of these areas," Cable said.

This trip will not be the first time Cable has been to Africa.

In 1993, Cable spent a year studying and exploring West Africa.

Jerri Romano, coordinator for Group Study Abroad, said K-State could not have found anyone better to lead this expedition.

"Ted Cable was recommended to us. He is a very qualified person to lead this trip," Romano said. "He and the Group Study Abroad program have been working on this trip for almost a year, so it should go great."

Cable's leadership in the field also earned him the Master of Interpretation Award from the National Association of Interpreters in 1996.

"I like to say, 'You can't bring a horse to water, and you can't make it drink, but you can make it thirsty.' My job is to make people thirsty for nature," Cable said.

The trip begins Dec. 28 when students depart Kansas City International Airport and ends Jan. 14. Anyone interested in participating in the trip should contact Cable for more information. The cost of the trip is $3,975.

"The drumming and dancing at this New Year's celebration will top anything you'll see on 'Dick Clark's Rockin' New Year's Eve,'" Cable said.

"Experience an unforgettable New Years Eve, a world away from Times Square. You'll never forget it."

Women's studies class to tour Europe during winter break

Interested in the trip?
Stop by the Office of International Programs at Fairchild 304, or call Romano at 532-5990.

LORI GUILFOYLE
staff reporter

The streets and sites of London and Paris will be the classroom for a women's studies tour during winter break.

Enrollment in the tour includes three hours of credit and is not limited to students enrolled in women's studies classes.

Torry Dickinson, assistant professor of women's studies, is organizing the class and said even nonstudents can enroll for the tour.

"Three students are bringing their moms," she said.

Dickinson said the idea to study abroad came from a class period when students asked about opportunities to travel. When enough students showed interest, Dickinson decided to organize the tour.

The group will depart between Dec. 27 and 31 and return between Jan. 4 and 8. The exact dates will be determined before enrolled students leave for winter break.

The trip includes tuition; round-trip airfare; seven nights; daily breakfast and dinner; a full-time tour director; transfers and intercity transportation; and, four guided sightseeing tours of London, Hampton Court, Paris and Versailles.

Also included are visits to Trafalgar Square, Chinatown, Buckingham Palace, the Eiffel Tower, Notre Dame, and the Louvre, a walking tour of the heart of London and Paris, a theater performance in London, Bateaux-mouches cruise on the Seine and a trip across the English Channel.

In addition to sightseeing, participants will also visit women's organizations and social service programs in London and Paris.

The opportunity to be a tourist exists, but the emphasis of the trip is on different perspectives of women and their solutions for economic stress, Dickinson said.

"It is important to visit other places and see what people are doing," Dickinson said.

Participants are also assigned to read Maria Mies' "Patriarchy and Accumulation on World's Scale." The book examines how history and the relationships between women and their effort to become self-sufficient are important to the changing world.

Completion of the trip and an assigned paper about the study abroad experience will concur three hours of undergraduate or graduate credit in women's studies.

"Women all over the world are developing ways to deal with economic stress," Dickinson said. "Women can really learn from these models."

Dickinson said she hopes this will become an annual trip. She would like the chance to take students to Third World countries, possibly Costa Rica or Mexico, in the future.

Jerri Romano, coordinator of Group Study Abroad, said there are still openings available. The deadline has been extended to Sept. 20.

Applications are available in the Office of International Programs, Fairchild 304. For more information about the tour or others available, contact Romano at 532-5990.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN
OPINION
WEDNESDAY, SEPTERMBER 10, 1997

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other staff members. Our View is the Collegian's official opinion.

All K-State sports deserve K-State students' brand of support

Did you know K-State had a school record three teams that went into postseason play in 1996?

The first team to reach the NCAA Tournament last season, the Wildcat volleyball team, plays at 7 tonight in Ahearn Field House.

Are you going to watch it?

No, it's not a football game. And the fan support for Wildcat football surpasses anything most people have seen at a Division I school.

Coach Bill Snyder and the Cats are always appreciative of the fan base for their team. Of the 26,873 people at the Northern Illinois football game last Saturday, a third of them were sporting purple pride.

What about throwing a little support to the other teams on this campus?

Our volleyball team set a single-match attendance record at the Nov. 15 game vs. national volleyball power Nebraska last season. Yes, those Huskers are good at other sports besides football.

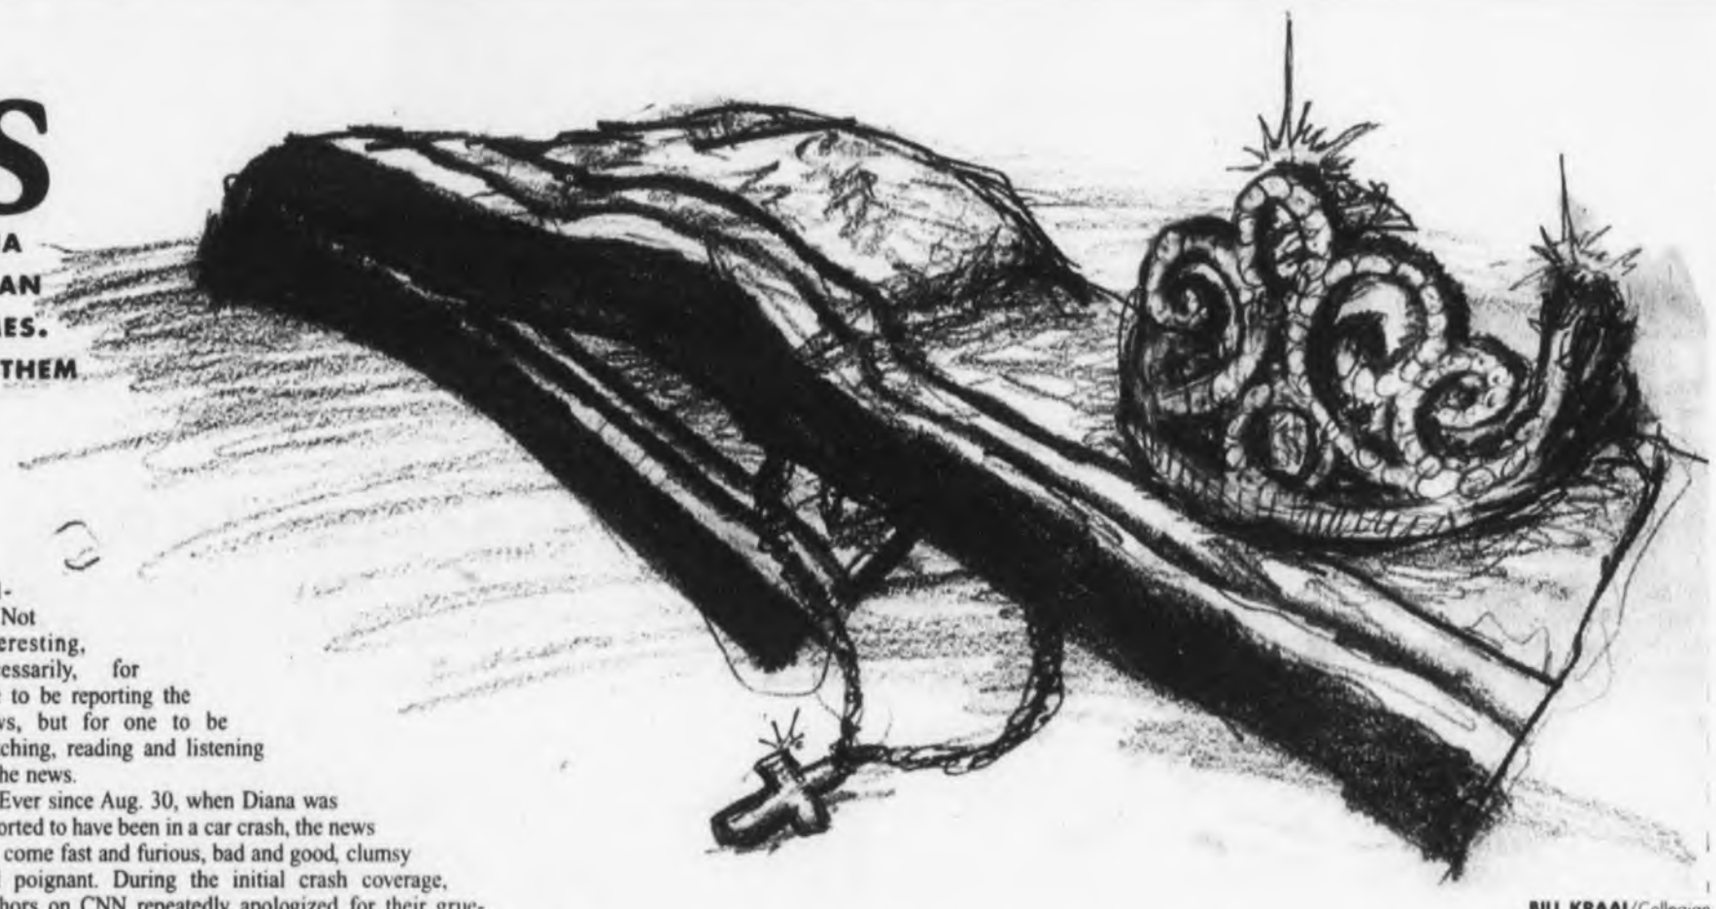
And their fans support those other sports. The Husker-backers in red were numerous and boisterous, and they'll be back for more this year.

Why not get a head start? The game tonight puts the Cats up against intrastate opponent Wichita State University. Not a national power, but important nonetheless.

The Cats only have one more home match before No. 22 University of Colorado and No. 5 University of Nebraska come to town Sept. 26 and 27.

The tennis team will be playing host to its first tournament, the Travelers Express Tournament, Sept. 20 and 21. This is the only tournament in Manhattan this semester, so check it out.

And if you missed the Olympics, the women's rowing team will play host to two races in November, which will be covered later in the Collegian.



But for now, check out the volleyball game tonight. It's a high energy, fast-paced game, and it's not too hard to get a ticket.

MOTHER TERESA AND PRINCESS DIANA BOTH MADE SIGNIFICANT HUMANITARIAN CONTRIBUTIONS DURING THEIR LIFETIMES. HOWEVER, ATTEMPTING TO COMPARE THEM TO EACH OTHER IS INAPPROPRIATE.

BILL KRAAI/Collegian

VIEWPOINT

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

RUSSELL FORTMEYER is a senior in architectural engineering. You can send e-mail to Russell at rmf@ksu.edu.

Last Friday, I switched on National Public Radio's "All Things Considered" to hear Christopher Hitchens verbally railing Mother Teresa, who had only just died.

He described the Catholic nun as a woman as much at home around the wealthy elite as she was around the wretched poor, as a woman who kept people poor instead of giving them the skills to reach a comfortable living.

I suppose Hitchens considers himself an authority. Having written a critical 1995 book, "The Missionary Position: Mother Teresa in Theory and Practice," that condemns her embrace of the rich and her exploitation of the poor. Hitchens obviously has credible credentials, being a columnist for Vanity Fair — that publication being a clear bastion of goodwill and humanitarianism.

Just 20 minutes later the NPR program featured a "thoughtful" who shared with listeners how much Mother Teresa and Princess Diana were alike. The commentator also subtly criticized Diana's wealth while saluting the fact Teresa died owning little more than her clothes and a rosary.

I'm sure I won't be the only one to suggest this argument to be completely outrageous. How one can consider the two as remotely similar just escapes me — one born into poverty who receives Holy Orders to become a nun and the other born into English nobility only to marry the future king of England. Sure, both women were kind, generous and respected for their humanitarian concerns. But that is really where the line is drawn.

The past week has been a fascinating time to be a journalist. Not interesting, necessarily, for one to be reporting the news, but for one to be watching, reading and listening to the news.

Ever since Aug. 30, when Diana was reported to have been in a car crash, the news has come fast and furious, bad and good, clumsy and poignant. During the initial crash coverage, anchors on CNN repeatedly apologized for their gruesome questions to eyewitnesses, but never stopped asking.

On Aug. 31, Barbara Walters spoke about how she considered Diana a good friend and that it was nearly, but not quite, too painful to discuss the tragedy. "60 Minutes" dedicated its entire Aug. 31 broadcast to Diana with an angry, tearful Liz Taylor condemning the media similar to Tom Cruise's night-before phone chat with CNN's Linden Soles.

And then the game commenced. Diana's brother lashed out against the paparazzi. Immediately, the media turned inward — my favorite circus act — the media covering the media.

Every editorial board, columnist and news agency worth its weight printed or produced introspective reports on the media's obsession with celebrity. Or the public's obsession with knowing intimate details about celebrities. Or celebrities' obsession with celebrity. If we kept passing the buck, we'd never get out of here.

Although the past tabloid coverage of Princess Diana's life is unforgivable, who wasn't glued to the set watching her death and funeral unfold? Much of what was on television was stirring, well-produced and timely.

Last Sunday in The New York Times, Caryn James was both praiseful and critical of the media's handling of the tragedy. James, writing on people's need to watch the coverage, wrote, "People who are known through public images are also mourned through public images."

An event like an international celebrity's funeral is understandably intriguing to watch. We can't be at the funeral, and we can't ever know her, but we have to say goodbye the same way we said hello — through the media. But must one be as enamored with a celebrity's weekend jaunt to Monaco?

The difference between coverage of Mother Teresa and of Princess Diana owes to the vast difference in sex appeal between the women, not to mention a nun's vow of celibacy. Even the mainstream press, like Newsweek and Time, ran pictures and blurbs about Diana's romances and vacations. Imagine if they had languished similar coverage to every time Teresa opened a new hospital or AIDS home.

It's unfortunate that there are so many media outlets in the world now with so many minutes to fill that each and every hack with a comment is invited to the table. People like Hitchens and Walters are opportunists.

Hitchens filling the need for relieving elitist guilt over Teresa's death and Walters selling out her integrity discussing her "friendship" with Diana.

The media can still fascinate. It can still respond to tragedies with thoughtfulness. To think it can adequately summarize and analyze in one week the contributions of two incomparable women is still a bit too much to ask.

No one forced Diana or Teresa to charitably contribute to society. If the coverage proved anything about the two women, it proved you make what you want of your life, good and bad. And that might be the best lesson one can learn.

THE MILL IS UP AND RUNNING . . . RUMOR MILL THAT IS

K-State continues the tradition of spreading rumors and attempting to ruin other's lives

VIEWPOINT

NAKIA Y. WALLER

NAKIA Y. WALLER is a senior in public relations. You can send e-mail to Nakia at kobey@ksu.edu.

Let me break it down so it will forever be broken. The rumor mill at K-State has started. Mill workers are busy creating events to harm the image or reputation of others.

Why these mill workers don't have lives of their own, I don't know. I do know that their efforts to harm others come from their own insecurities. I've always seen the mill workers and their assistants as the jealous insecure individuals they are.

Why, just the other day I thought I saw the smoke from the mill pouring out the doors of the K-State Student Union. Having only been in class two weeks, I didn't anticipate the mill's productivity to be so high, but it was.

A student made it her job to create and spread a rumor about an undeserving individual at a social function this weekend. I watched the person in disbelief as she moved from table to table, person to person, giving and receiving information like a bee pollinating flowers.

I know what you're thinking — why didn't I do something to stop this? Well, my grandpa told me a long time ago never to try to chase down a lie.

Taking this advice to heart when the mill president approached me, I smiled an inquisitive grin and asked, "Why are you doing this?" The person, knowing full well she had more to gain from a person with a more willing ear and a looser tongue than myself, quickly moved her conversation to a safer topic.

Keep in mind mill members know the people to go to when they want to get the word out. Not participating in rumor-generating activities helps keep you from being the next victim.

There is no real way to stop rumors or the people who start them, because of the jealousy and insecurity you will always have. You can deter a rumor from being spread by not listening, not repeating and not encouraging the habit.

People who work for the mill also like an audience. Just as people in a large group wait for someone else to make the first move, mill administrators count on people not to challenge the information they offer.

Take the initiative to expose the mill messenger for who he or she is. You could miss out on a friendship by listening to the lies of others. Make your own decisions and don't let the opinions of another person dictate how or if you will interact with someone.

If you do, you'll soon find yourself working for the mill and a bona fide member of a clique. Cliques are for people who aren't strong enough to stand alone. People will say things to you they wouldn't dare say if they were alone with you.

In the case that a person does approach you with negative words based on false information about you, keep your cool.

Smile and say, "OK." That person knows what they've said is false and so do you. By not getting into a truth battle with that person, you detour confrontation. That person will go back to their miserable life disappointed that they couldn't get you to act out and prove them right.

It's impossible to right every wrong anyone has said about you. Sometimes you have to ignore the smoke of the mill. All people are concerned with their image and don't want nasty things to be said about them.

Those who know when someone is trying to blow smoke where it ought not blow will recognize a lie. These are the people you want to be your friends.

Not offering too much information to people you don't know well or doubt if you can trust is a way to detour rumors. If you have to start a sentence, "Don't say anything, but ... ," chances are you shouldn't be saying anything at all.

Any relationship takes time to develop. A person who demonstrates trust and respect possesses the qualities to look for in a friend and are what mill workers lack. It's good to have a firefighter-type on your side when the mill's fires are burning high.

That will be the someone who can lend an objective voice and is willing to help you through the smoke the mill has created.

Fan disagrees with view regarding Marilyn Manson

Editor,

I am writing in response to Boyd Ferris' column (Sept. 9) regarding Marilyn Manson freaks. Ferris is dead wrong with his ignorant prejudices.

I have plain brown hair. I don't wear any makeup. I wear blue jeans and boring T-shirts. I don't paint my nails black. I don't wear plastic fangs or suck blood.

I am not a Satanist. I listen to Mozart, Beethoven, Bach, Billy Joel and the Beatles. I volunteered every Saturday night this past summer.

I have passed Calculus I, II, III, Differential Equations, Engineering Physics I and II and Organic Chemistry. I read more than 20 books by acclaimed authors this summer.

Get ready, Ferris.

I like Marilyn Manson.

I want Ferris to know that, regardless of my musical tastes, I am not an unintelligent freak. I am not abnormal or "Gothic." I lead a normal lifestyle.

I go to class, study, read, dance and go to parties where "normal" people can be found.

Ferris fails to point out that there are other much more dangerous freaks floating around. There are child molesters, rapists, stalkers, murderers, abusers and people who distribute drugs to children.

These people are the ones who are the real freaks, and they are much more dangerous than most of Ferris' "Manson's freaks."

I would like to know how many of these Gothic freaks Ferris has bothered to talk to and get to know. Let him meet them and then make his judgment.

Senator supports student education on privilege fees

Editor,

As you may know, Student Senate will soon begin reviewing more than $4 million in campus privilege fee allocations. As a student senator, I would encourage you to educate yourselves on the fees you pay and communicate your opinions about and recommendations on the six line-items being considered this year.

The six fees up for review this year and their current annual budgets are as follows:

1. Student Health $2,928,183
2. Athletics $600,989
3. Fine Arts Council $296,959
4. Student Publications Operations $278,220
5. Union Program Council $69,992
6. Bramlage Repair and Maintenance $34,634

The Senate Privilege Fee Committee will meet with the respective directors of these entities and subsequently make budget recommendations for Senate approval. Budgets can be maintained at the present funding level, increased or decreased.

The Privilege Fee Committee is committed to making budget changes that are consistent with the wishes of the student body. To be most effective, the committee needs your input.

To learn more about privilege fees or to voice your opinion, I urge you to attend our regular committee meetings at 8 p.m. Mondays in the Office of Student Activities and Services on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union or call the office at 532-6541.

Joe Camel lawsuit results in $10 million settlement

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN FRANCISCO — R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. has agreed to pay $10 million to settle a lawsuit about its now-retired Joe Camel campaign, which was widely accused of aiming at children.

The settlement, finalized Monday, promises $10 million to Californians in 13 cities and counties that joined the suit, said Janet Mangini, an attorney who filed the lawsuit in 1991.

"I am extremely excited and pleased by the settlement," Mangini said. She said $9 million would go toward anti-smoking education aimed at young people, and the rest would pay attorneys' fees for the cities and counties.

AT A GLANCE
R.J. Reynolds has reached a $10 million settlement in California. $9 million will go toward anti-smoking campaigns.

R.J. Reynolds has repeatedly denied Joe Camel was aimed at minors. But in July, the company said it would drop the cartoon character for a more lifelike illustration of a camel, used on cigarette packs for generations.

The decision came after a settlement this summer between the tobacco industry and 40 state attorneys general that includes a ban on the use of cartoon or human figures in cigarette ads. That settlement has yet to be ratified by Congress.

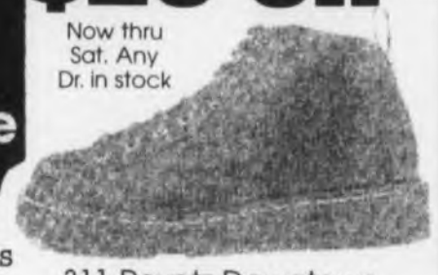
In addition, the Federal Trade Commission moved to ban Joe Camel in May.

As a condition of the settlement in California, R.J. Reynolds admitted no wrongdoing but agreed to release internal marketing documents about the advertising campaign.

"This in no way should be construed as a concession on the merits of any of the claims in this case," Charles A. Blixt, RJR's general counsel, said Tuesday. "The Joe Camel campaign was directed and highly successful with adults in their 20s who choose to smoke. The agreement we are announcing today simply brings practical closure to this case."

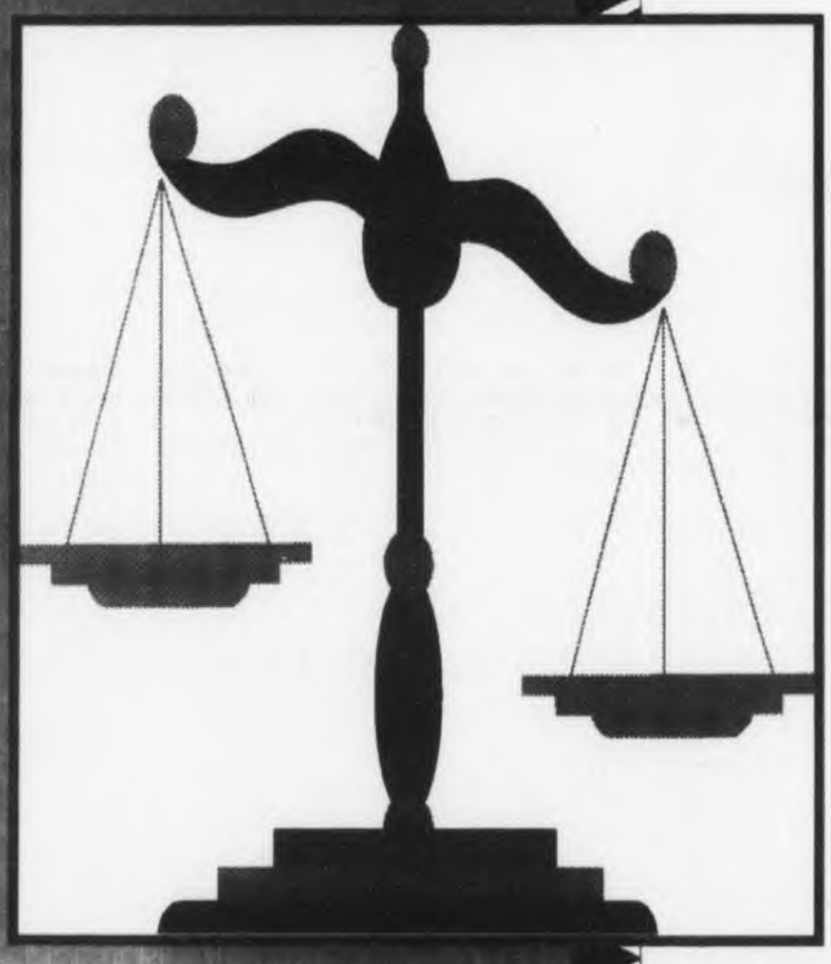
Mangini had claimed Reynolds violated a California law against deceptive advertising by focusing on minors, who cannot legally buy cigarettes. The suit said sales of Camels to teen-agers rose from $6 million in 1988, when the campaign started, to $476 million in 1992.

She sought to outlaw the use of Joe Camel in California, strip Reynolds of illicit profits and require that the money be used for research or other public purposes.



In March, 13 cities and counties joined the lawsuit, seeking additional damages: $2,500 for each sale of Camel cigarettes to a minor, for each distribution of a promotional cap, T-shirt or jacket, and for each advertising display within their borders.

The lawsuit was dismissed by a San Francisco Superior Court judge, who said the state could not regulate tobacco advertising. But it was reinstated by an appeals court and upheld by the state Supreme Court in 1994.



It was set to go to trial in December.

Cats prepare for volleyball against Wichita State

More info?
Catch the K-State volleyball team in action at 7 tonight in Ahearn Field House. Can't make the game? KSDB-FM 91.9 will broadcast the game live.

STORY BY SAM FELSENFELD

At this time two weeks ago, the K-State volleyball team was dying to play its first game of the season in Hawaii.

And after playing that first game and finishing the tournament in Hawaii, the Wildcats were dying to come home last Tuesday and play their first home game of the year the next day.

But after playing that game against the University of Texas-Arlington, the Cats were just dying.

Lucky for the Cats, schedule-makers gave them a week off after the UTA match.

"It definitely helped us physically. We were dragging," Coach Jim McLaughlin said. "And I think it also helped us a little bit emotionally and mentally."

Now, after resting their knees and catching up on their time zones, the Cats play again at 7 tonight in Ahearn Field House against Wichita State University.

While the Cats look to continue their winning ways — they've won four of their five matches this season — they're focusing more on their half of the court than the rival Shockers.

"Wichita State is a little bit better than Texas-Arlington. I don't know in any way, shape or form how they're better, but they beat Texas-Arlington. That's what we know about them," McLaughlin said.

"Still, our focus at this point in time is to take care of our side of the net, which we're beginning to do. We're stabilizing in different areas — one is passing, and the other one is making the opponent earn points, which means hitting the court, attacking the court better and eliminating unforced errors. That's going to be a focus — we want to be a little bit better in those areas."

McLaughlin said the team is working on its discipline to play better in his system. He said the Cats have potential to be a great team if they stay within the system, but they'll fail if they don't.

"We're putting a lot of emphasis on our offense, and learning how to run our offense in different areas of the court, and I think when all the pieces come together, we're going to be a really good team in November," he said.

"This team will be a better team than last year's team if we're in system. But if we're out of system, we're not going to be as strong."

Since the beginning of practice in August, McLaughlin has said one of the main team goals is to make a strong run in the NCAA Tournament, as did last year's team, which advanced to the second round.

Coming into camp, he said the team was not as good as it could be, but that is standard at the collegiate level — for teams to peak at the end of the season. However, he's happy with the strides the Cats have taken to reach the top of their game.

"What I've noticed is that we're staying in system a lot more than we were a week ago, two weeks ago," he said. "We're running more plays that we want to run, so that tells me we're getting better."

Right now, K-State is focusing on its offensive game, specifically its discipline and passing.

He said both aspects are improving. The team's discipline is reflected as it stays in the system and runs the designed plays.

Passing is rated on a three-point scale. Each initial hit is rated based on its accuracy — if the setter has three options, it's a three-point pass. If the setter has two options, it's worth two. With only one option, it's one point, and aces are zero.

The Cats started the season passing between 1.9 and 2.1, and have improved to 2.27. Last year's team passed at 2.2, and McLaughlin's goal for K-State this season is 2.4.

"I believe if we pass a 2.4 or above, we'll win most of our matches, because if we pass a 2.4, we'll be in our system a lot more, and that allows us to run our motion offense at a higher level," he said.

Rison hero in Chiefs' thrilling win Monday

VIEWPOINT

JESS C. LOUK

JESS C .LOUK is a junior in mass communications. You can send your e-mail to Jess at jess31@ksu.edu.

Two things were evident after Monday night's Raiders-Chiefs match-up.

One, the Raiders need to change their team motto to "Just Choke, Baby."

Two, the Chiefs' gamble on Andre Rison is looking good for now.

Yes, the Chiefs knew when they signed their journeyman receiver Rison, a.k.a. "Bad Moon Rison," they were essentially taking a trip down to the Kansas City riverboats.

Let's face it, the man is a straight-up gamble.

Historically, with Rison, your team either gets one of the decade's best receivers, or you get a guy who will break your heart. Make no mistake about it, Rison is professional football's version of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

Rison is the type of guy who will leave you standing deep in the New York projects, holding a full 40-ouncer in your right hand, a heavy bag of crack taped to your back and a bag of diamonds in your left hand. Essentially, you get the danger while he skates out scot-free.

But sometimes when you need him the most, Andre "Bad Moon" is Rison. Like in last year's Super Bowl, when Rison was the Packers' dream come true. He caught a 54-yard touchdown pass, the first of the game, sparking the Pack to a 35-21 Super Bowl victory.

Yes, Rison can be clutch. In his first four seasons, Rison became the first player to catch more than 300 passes. No one in NFL history has ever done that, not even football's greatest player ever, Jerry Rice (who, by the way, was catching balls from Joe Montana, so he should have easily caught that many). In those four seasons, Rison went to four straight Pro Bowls from 1990 to 1993. In 1993, Rison was even named the Pro Bowl most valuable player.

With all these stats, you almost have to shake your head and wonder why Rison has managed to wear out his welcome everywhere he has gone. After his rookie season, Rison was traded from the Colts to the Falcons. In Atlanta, he threw temper tantrums, wearing out his welcome in the process. Rison next walked out of Atlanta to go to Cleveland.

In Cleveland, Rison stunk it up. During the entire 1995 season, he only caught three touchdown passes. It doesn't take a genius to figure out that if you're not producing, you pout, and if you're being paid millions of dollars, things are not going to work out with your employer.

So the Bad Moon continued to rotate across the NFL sky. In 1996 Rison signed with Jacksonville. While there, Rison was a canker sore. He only caught two touchdown passes. Jacksonville, figuring they were better without Rison, released him Nov. 18. One day later, Rison was again with the Cheeseheads in Packerland.

So the merry-go-round keeps turning, and Rison has played with six NFL teams since he entered the league in 1989. The man has become the first player to catch a touchdown pass for six different teams.

So why isn't Rison mentioned in the same breath with Michael Irvin or Jerry Rice? It's easy, really. Bad attitudes do not win accolades.

Enter Mr. Hyde and the problems that stick to him. While in Atlanta, Rison's rapper girlfriend decided it would be prudent to torch his house. How's that for a distraction?

I can just imagine what old "Bad Moon" had to say after that one. "Coach, I'd like to suit up today, but I had to sleep in my locker last night, and I'm kinda sore." Maybe Rison just rented a room. Wherever he slept, I hope he was insured.

Even with all of Rison's attitude swings, one thing you can never strip the man of is his heart. That, more than anything else, keeps the "Bad Moon" hanging in the sky. Although Rison may be of a malcontent, if you produce, you can always find a home in sports today.

"Dangerous boys come to dangerous places and take the prize," Rison said.

These days, things are just swinging for Rison. The man absolutely went off in front of the whole world Monday night. Rison caught eight balls for 162 yards and a game-winning touchdown.

After the game, an ecstatic Rison said, "The king is alive, and "Bad Moon" is still steppin'."

That's right, Andre, you keep your head and let your feet do most of the work. If you don't, I can see a seventh team in the very near future.

I'm sure you don't want to play for the Saints. The combination of you and Southern cities seems to be combustible.

Smatterings from around the K-State world

"I didn't know Michael Bishop was a punter until I looked up one day and he was booming the ball from one end of the field to the other, and I thought, 'Wow, this is all right.'"

• Bill Snyder, head coach

ROWE EARNS STARTING SPOT

Junior defensive tackle Andrae Rowe has moved up the Wildcat depth chart. Rowe will start at his position against Ohio on Saturday, edging out senior Jerome Evans.

"He plays hard, he plays low, and he competes snap after snap," Snyder said. "I'm pleased with the progress he's made."

BLACK REPLACES INJURED BEARD

Redshirt freshman cornerback Adrian Beard's knee injury, suffered during the Northern Illinois game Saturday, will keep him sidelined this season, Coach Bill Snyder said. Taking his place will be junior corner Keith Black, with true freshman Gerald Neasman switching sides of the field to back up Black. Junior fullback Brian Goolsby will not play against Ohio this Saturday. Snyder said Goolsby is questionable for Bowling Green on Sept. 27. Junior right tackle Ryan Young is slated to start this Saturday.

BISHOP TO BACK UP GARCIA

Junior quarterback Michael Bishop's 37-yard punt in the fourth quarter was no fluke and might be repeated, Snyder said. Since punter Chad Romano finished his eligibility last season, junior James Garcia is kicking solo.

"We put him there because he's a pretty good punter," Snyder said. "If for some reason we lost James, we have to have a punter. Just like any other position, you like to have a backup, and the punter is an important position."

Snyder was as surprised as anyone when he discovered Bishop's other talent.

"I didn't know Michael Bishop was a punter until I looked up one day, and he was booming the ball from one end of the field to the other, and I thought, 'Wow, this is all right,'" Snyder said.

SMITH DELIVERS BEST HIT

Former K-State safety Mario Smith's helmet-removing tackle of Brigham Young's Kaipo McGuire in the 1997 Cotton Bowl won the Best Hit category of the 1996 College Football Plays of the Year.

Texas' "roll left" play on fourth-and-inches in the Longhorn victory over Nebraska in the Big 12 Championship game earned the College Football Play of the Year honor. Smith's hit was the seventh-best play overall.

CAT TOWN USA

Reservations are being accepted to secure private space for friends and families to better enjoy Wildcat football pregame festivities.

Cat Town USA reservations entitle K-State fans reserved pregame space, live entertainment, a special mention of the group during games on the JumboTron and an appearance by the K-State Marching Band, cheerleaders and Willie the Wildcat. Space reservations are available for $100 to $250 per game.

For more information, contact the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics at 532-6910.

WOMEN'S GOLF RESULTS

The women's golf team placed third at the Chip-N-Clip Invitational in Lincoln, Neb. Freshman Edie Murdoch tied for 11th place to lead the Cats. Murdoch shot a 76, 13-over-par, for a three-round total 232.

After keeping the lead at one-under after the first day of play, junior Jane Yi finished tied for 13th. Ann Slater (T-16th), Mitzi Taylor (T-23rd) and Carrie Chambers (T-23rd) rounded out the scoring.

RECRUIT TO REHAB AFTER SURGERY

Wildcat junior forward Charles Dinkins (6-5, 190) will spend the next six weeks on crutches after undergoing surgery on his right knee Aug. 26 in San Diego.

Dinkins, one of three recruited players to join the Cats for the 1997 men's basketball season, had surgery to repair the lateral meniscus in his right knee following the injury he sustained this summer.

Coach Tom Asbury said Dinkins could be ready to begin preparation for the upcoming season on or around the first day of practice Oct. 15.

"Charles will rehab with our training staff and do the things necessary to get back in shape as soon as possible," he said.

Manhattan Parks and Recreation searching for soccer coaches, help

AT A GLANCE

MANHATTAN PARKS AND RECREATION IS LOOKING FOR STUDENTS TO COACH YOUTH SOCCER LEAGUES. FOR MORE INFORMATION CALL 587-2757

LESLIE NACHTRAB
staff reporter

More than 700 Manhattan youngsters are taking part this fall in a youth soccer league sponsored by the Manhattan Department of Parks and Recreation, along with the help of a few K-State students.

The league, which is offered for second- through eighth-graders, relies on K-State students to volunteer as coaches.

Jana Reichenberger, sophomore in accounting, is one of several student volunteers. Reichenberger decided to contact parks and recreation after a co-worker told her about the opportunity. Now Reichenberger will be coaching sixth- through eighth-grade girls.

"I hope to learn more about soccer. I played when I was kid, but I still don't know everything about it. It also seemed like a good community service thing to do," Reichenberger said.

Parks and recreation lets each coach schedule the times and locations of each practice for the team. The best time to practice usually ends up being weekday evenings.

"Since we get to set practices on our own, I've been calling around trying to find someplace. We're looking at Northview School right now, but it's a first-come, first-serve sort of thing," Reichenberger said.

All games are played at Anneberg Park. They are usually scheduled for the evenings or Sunday afternoons, recreation supervisor Karen Perry said.

The league is designed to help players develop skills while learning the rules and good sportsmanship.

"Our philosophy is that every child plays. We promote sportsmanship, and there's no favoritism whatsoever. We encourage them to learn different positions and just have fun," Perry said.

The season runs through the end of October. Parks and recreation tries to place the children on teams according to the school they attend.

"It's just easier that way. It's easier to organize and better for the children, I think, because they may know each other," Perry said.

In addition to student coaches, parks and recreation often finds parents willing to offer assistance, Perry said.

"Even though soccer is a relatively new sport to a lot of the parents, many of them will take on head coach or assistant coach of the team their child plays for. They feel responsible for their kids and just want to help out," Perry said.

The recreational league is ready to begin practices, and Perry said she foresees no problems, except that a few more volunteers are needed to coach.

Mike Buchanan, who is also a recreation supervisor for parks and recreation, said he urges students to volunteer with the soccer program or any other sport that parks and recreation offers, including volleyball and flag football.

"There's certain things we're looking for in a coach. Obviously, we want someone who has a knowledge of the sport. We also want someone who enjoys working with kids and is committed to doing the job well," Buchanan said.

Those interested in coaching should contact the Manhattan Department of Parks and Recreation's main office at 587-2757 and ask for Karen Perry.

Mix-up at funeral has family members in shock

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. LOUIS — Willie Taylor's family listened to the minister give the eulogy, then prepared to file past his coffin to pay their final respects.

But the body lying inside was not Taylor's.

"It was a terrible shock to everybody," said the Rev. Thomas Jones, who conducted the funeral Saturday at Greater Leonard Missionary Baptist Church. "The ladies were weeping. There was some talk of going on to the cemetery, but a young nephew finally stepped in and said, 'We're calling the police.'"

Taylor, 62, a retired metal finisher for an auto-bumper company, died of cancer Aug. 31. Delores Rogers, a sister-in-law who lives in Las Vegas, said she and others who attended the wake Friday night at Eddie Randle & Sons Funeral Home wondered about the features of the body in the coffin but did not suspect it wasn't that of Taylor. She said Taylor's widow, Margaret Taylor, was too upset to look closely.

The coffin was closed during the hour-long service Saturday, then opened in the church for final viewing. Two of Taylor's brothers who hadn't attended the wake immediately suspected a mistake. Then a nephew pulled back the shroud that covered Taylor's hands.

"Willie had lost two fingers when he was 10," Rogers said. "That isn't what we found. What happened then is something that nobody should have to go through.

"My sister is a very strong woman," she added. "But this completely floored her. It floored everybody."

By Tuesday, the mix-up was being put right. Taylor's body was exhumed from Calvary Cemetery where he had been buried by mistake last week in Frederick Ware's plot. The body of Ware, the man in his 80s who had been lying in Taylor's casket, was buried where his family intended, with his wife in Calvary Cemetery.

But Monsignor Robert McCarthy, director of cemeteries for the Archdiocese of St. Louis, which operates Calvary, was still shaking his head in wonder.

"I've been here 39 years, and I've never heard of such a thing happening," he said.

Lyell Champagne, an attorney representing Taylor's family, said the funeral home had accepted responsibility for the mistake, but so far had not discussed restitution for the family.

"We're not sure what we're going to work out in terms of the funeral that really did not occur," Champagne said. "They just want him in the ground in his proper burial site, and from there we'll talk to the funeral home and see what they're willing to do for this family."

Student who nearly died after drinking binge sues university

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BATON ROUGE, La. — A Louisiana State University student who nearly died after a night of drinking that killed a fellow fraternity pledge filed a negligence suit Tuesday against the school, the fraternity and the bar where they drank.

Donald Hunt, 20, was hospitalized for nearly a week after the Aug. 25 binge that ended with the death of his friend and roommate, Benjamin Wynne, also 20.

Hunt's lawsuit, which seeks unspecified damages, alleges that he and other pledges were forced by members of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity to consume pitchers of drinks, and that the fraternity did not do enough to help nearly two dozen drunk pledges.

Paramedics said Hunt was not breathing and was near death when they arrived at the fraternity house.

Authorities said Wynne's blood-alcohol level was 0.588 percent — nearly six times the minimum required for proof of intoxication. Louisiana's legal drinking age is 21.

Hunt alleges that Murphy's Bar was negligent because its employees, one of whom was SAE's president, should have stopped the drinking at the private party.

The suit claims the university allegedly failed to regulate or discourage bid night, when pledges are formally accepted into fraternities.

LSU Chancellor William Jenkins referred all calls to the university's attorneys.

"While the university regrets any misfortune suffered by any student, the university has no legal liability and plans to defend the suit fully," said LSU attorney Shelby McKenzie.

A man who answered the phone Tuesday at the SAE fraternity said "no comment" and hung up without giving his name. After Wynne's death, signs were posted at all campus fraternity houses saying reporters were not welcome.

Representatives of the bar owners did not immediately return calls for comment Tuesday.

Murphy's Bar has gone out of business, something its owners said they had planned to do even before Wynne's death.

Football season tickets still remain

LORI GUILFOYLE

No tickets? You still have the chance to buy football tickets, if you hurry.

Tickets will go on sale at 8 a.m. Thursday at the Bramlage Coliseum ticket office. There are about 150 student tickets still available for general admission and reserved seating. Tickets are $60 and can be purchased on a first-come, first-served basis.

"It is hard to know what to expect," Carol Adolph, athletic ticket manager, said. "Tickets could sell out before noon."

To ensure fairness to all students, Bramlage is limiting the purchase to one ticket per student, Adolph said. A current K-State ID must be shown upon purchasing.

This will not affect the students who have already purchased their tickets and have not picked them up, Adolph said. The deadline has been extended until Friday to allow students an additional week to pick up their tickets.

The remaining tickets had been reserved by students who did not return to K-State this fall.

POW cites post-traumatic syndrome as defense for killing son-in-law

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONG BEACH, Calif. — Richard Keech shot his son-in-law once, then chased him down the street and finished him off with four bullets in the back as he lay face-down on a neighbor's lawn.

Two of his neighbors saw it happen, and Keech isn't denying he did it.

Instead, he claims he snapped and went for his gun after flashing back more than 50 years to the Philippines, where he was a Marine in brutal Japanese POW camps and saw hundreds die.

During pretrial proceedings this week, his lawyers sought to introduce evidence that the 77-year-old Keech suffers from post-traumatic stress disorder, or PTSD.

Prosecutors say PTSD is a lame excuse in this case.

"It is a way to attempt to excuse responsibility for this deadly and extreme act," Deputy District Attorney Ronald Geltz said.

Keech is accused of first-degree murder in the May 21, 1996, shooting of Nicholas Candy, 47, estranged husband of his daughter Nancy, 38. The couple were in the middle of a bitter divorce and custody battle.

Candy was gunned down when he arrived at Keech's Long Beach home to pick up his 14-month-old son Martin.

The shooting occurred after what Keech and his lawyers described as months of threatening family confrontations with Candy, a rugby-playing Englishman who worked as a contract manager at Universal Studios.

Before a gag order was issued in the case Monday, Keech told The New York Times: "I snapped. I was afraid for my life. I thought I was back in the prison camp and I was about to be beaten to death," he said.

Keech said he doesn't know whether he has had any previous episodes of post-traumatic stress stemming from his 3-1/2 years in prison camps. He said the horrors he experienced flared the day he killed Candy because he feared for his daughter's life.

Some experts said it's unlikely Keech could have kept his PTSD dormant for so long without showing any symptoms. But they said anything is possible.

"We have World War II veterans who have not had any symptoms previously because they held two jobs or were doing other things to occupy their minds," said Robert Nicholson, psychology professor at the University of Tulsa in Oklahoma. "But when they retired and had more time on their hands, they began experiencing symptoms."

Keech was a purchasing agent at Rockwell until he retired about 15 years ago.

Post-traumatic stress disorder became an official diagnosis by the American Psychiatric Association in 1980. It has generally been associated with Vietnam War veterans, but there have been cases involving Korean War and World War II veterans.

PTSD can also affect victims of rape or natural disaster, or those who believe their lives are in danger, said Terri Weaver, a clinical psychologist at the Center for Trauma Recovery at the University of Missouri, St. Louis.

Symptoms include flashbacks, a numbing of the senses, angry outbursts, and sleep and concentration problems, she said.

When used as a trial defense, it generally works hand-in-hand with an insanity plea. But Keech is not claiming insanity.

A PTSD defense is seldom successful, experts say, but it did work in 1981 when a jury in Shreveport, La., found Charles Heads, a Vietnam veteran, innocent by reason of insanity.

Candy's sister doesn't believe Keech suffers from PTSD.

"If that's the case, then why hasn't he said he's sorry?" Jocelyne Candy Bunyan asked. "Who's going to be next? The mailman?"

Pediatric researcher concludes SIDS possibly not cause of death of infants

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — A pediatric researcher who studied sudden infant death syndrome concluded that some children may have been killed by their parents, The Boston Globe reported Tuesday.

Dr. Thomas Truman drew his conclusions after studying 156 near-deaths attributed to SIDS at Massachusetts General Hospital, a new book said.

"It's so hard for most people to conceive of these heinous abuses being acted out by murderous mothers that that's why a lot of people haven't considered it in the past," Truman said.

He warned against witch hunts against parents whose children have died, and said that doctors who have not considered parental abuse did not do so maliciously.

Health officials have no clear cause for SIDS, which kills nearly 5,000 American babies a year. Efforts in recent years to convince mothers to put babies to sleep on their backs instead of their stomachs have reduced deaths.

Truman's conclusion, presented last year at a hospital meeting while he was a research fellow at the hospital, was rejected by hospital officials who believe the deaths are caused by a breathing problem that runs in families, the Globe reported.

Much of the information was made public Monday in "The Death of Innocents," a book about SIDS by journalists Richard Firstman and Jamie Talan.

Truman found that 56 of 156 cases where infants nearly died of asphyxiation may be linked to parental abuse, the newspaper reported.

Dr. Daniel C. Shannon, who is in charge of the hospital's sudden infant death program, said Truman's findings were misleading, the book said.

Researchers at the hospital pursued the theory that SIDS was hereditary, producing studies in 1986 and 1987 that detailed a series of deaths and near-deaths among the children of 28 families.

Truman, now practicing in Tallahassee, Fla., and Dr. Catherine C. Ayoub, a psychologist at Massachusetts General, are preparing a scientific paper on their information, which they plan to submit to the journal Pediatrics.

"SIDS is a terrible, tragic disease that can occur once in a family. But if it occurs twice, it should be investigated," Lucey said.

Jones' judge lets lawyers leave, case must continue

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — A federal judge Tuesday let Paula Jones' lawyers withdraw from her sexual harassment lawsuit against President Clinton but ordered that the case stay on course for a trial next May.

"All deadlines shall remain in place," U.S. District Judge Susan Webber Wright said in a one-page order that let Joseph Cammarata and Gilbert Davis quit as Jones' lawyers.

New attorneys for Jones have yet to emerge.

The two lawyers said in papers filed Monday that they had fundamental differences of opinion with Jones about how the case should proceed.

The lawyers' request to leave the case came after Jones rejected settlement terms that her spokeswoman said the lawyers had pushed — $700,000 and a vague statement of regret from the president for any damage to Jones' reputation.

Jones' spokeswoman Susan Carpenter McMillan said the proposed deal lacked the strong apology that Jones wants. McMillan also complained that the lawyers were hellbent on settling.

"Paula has always said that even if she got the 700 ($700,000), free and clear, every dime to her, the language is what this is about. It always has been, and the language was not acceptable at all," McMillan told CNN.

Jones claims Clinton propositioned her at a Little Rock hotel in 1991 when he was governor and she was a state employee.

Art Review

REVIEW AND PROFILE BY RUSSELL FORTMEYER

The work of two young artists, painter Debra Edgerton and glassblower Paul Lewarchick, make up a fine show at the Strecker Gallery.

The show, which ends Oct. 4, is the first for both Flagstaff-based Edgerton and Zeandale-based Lewarchick. It opened with a reception Friday evening.

If in Edgerton's work you're struck with a resemblance to Dean Mitchell's watercolors, consider yourself to have a good eye — Edgerton worked with Mitchell as an artist while at Hallmark Cards Inc. in Kansas City, Mo.

Edgerton follows Mitchell's interest in somber portraits or quiet studies of residences colored in muted tones and near-precise lines. Edgerton's watercolors, however, are softer than Mitchell's; her portraits are less exact and more interpretative allowing more of an individual response to their meaning.

The showpiece is Edgerton's "Variations of Tan and Gray," a more detailed Hopperesque, near-deserted street scene punctuated with a lone figure, back turned to the viewer, walking toward a pole. Your eye dances from the yellow paper sacks in the figure's hands, the rough-textured background wall and then to a street sign with a few symbols of Chinese.

Where is this scene? What exactly is going on? The isolation and ambiguity of "Variations" recalls Mitchell's street scene oil paintings without his sometimes premeditated determination for pointmaking.

Edgerton describes "Variations" as her favorite painting in the show. "It's another one of those unnoticed moments I enjoy," she said.

She especially points out the jagged pattern in the background wall as having been inspired from musical structure. "Even though it's not a beautiful wall, it had a lyrical quality to me."

"Variations," like many other of her watercolors, were painted from Edgerton's experiences in China a few years ago. "Renaissance #2," a figure portrait of a girl taken from Kansas City's annual festival, is clearly a Mitchell-inspired piece.

For sheer artistic ability, Edgerton's watercolors stack up to Mitchell's at a substantially lower cost, which I would wager is what everyone at Friday's opening was thinking anyway.

Although Lewarchick's glass pieces don't surprise you with many formal distinctions to match the spectrum of color he uses, the addition of a glass artist to the local gallery scene is most welcome.

In this show, the Zeandale artist's first outing in town, he has selected an array of goblets, vases and a few experimental pieces which attest to an interest in much wilder forms.

"Judy's Piece," which pulses with blues, yellows and reds, is a free-form interpretation of a classic epergne with white, phallic vases supporting a central one of varying color. Its playful spontaneity, however, seems lost in "Tendrilly Bowl," a colorful yet clumsy bowl ringed by mutated antennae.

These two gifted young artists have proven they're accomplished technicians in their respective media, but this show isn't anything more than expected.

JULIE STRECKER is the owner of Strecker Gallery in downtown Manhattan. Strecker has turned local artists into stars, such as Judy Love, Jim Munce and Yoshi Ikeda. Currently on display are works by local artists Debra Edgerton and Paul Lewarchick.

Gallery owner promotes local artists

Perhaps it sounds too East Coast to call Julie Strecker a provocateur of style and design in Manhattan.

Strecker is, after all, a bit wary to admit to having influence over local tastes and artistic interests.

As the proprietor of the Strecker Gallery and Strecker Design Studio, both at 332 Poyntz Ave., and the newly opened Geometrics, an interiors store at 407 Poyntz Ave., Strecker is a one-woman design dynasty, Manhattan's own queen of the contemporary.

"Everyone has a passion for something, and mine is good design," Strecker said, sitting in her Gallery office in downtown Manhattan.

In the nearly 20-year history of Strecker Gallery, she has built young artists into local celebrities and maintained one of the most vibrant, real galleries between the Mississippi and Santa Fe. She has attracted a legion of supporters who flock to her shows, some even scurry to the gallery before opening receptions to get first grabs at a painting.

And while Strecker, a local since 1972, has busied herself with her mini-empire, the arts community in Manhattan has slowly matured into what can only be termed thriving — at least for Kansas.

Since Strecker began a small interior design shop in Aggieville in 1976, the Manhattan Center for the Arts has sprung up, the art department's Willard Gallery has reached full force, the Columbian Theatre and Gallery in Wamego opened to raves and the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art has brought a level of scholarship to the local scene.

Although Strecker began as an interior designer, that aspect of her life has taken a secondary role to her gallery career.

"When I started getting into the art, that's what I really loved," Strecker said. "The art gallery supports itself. I don't go looking for new design business."

Design books still blanket one wall of her office. She has a few long-time clients who call her up every now and then looking to redecorate. Her most recent project is the Leadership Lodge for the Rock Springs 4-H Center.

Wednesday afternoon was the first show of the season. Watercolors by Debra Edgerton and glass by Paul Lewarchick, opened Friday.

"I do see my role as still a teacher — exposing people to art and design," she said, "but it does have some limits because I still need to sell. I hope all of my shows will have some appeal so we have sales from them, but I don't want to underestimate my audience's tastes."

Her audience's tastes might be termed conservative, compared to the hot galleries of a large art center like New York or Los Angeles. Of course, Strecker's shows generally reflect her own tastes and, by nature, those of her patrons.

"I have a lot of confidence in my ability to choose art, and my clients depend on that," Strecker said. "I don't worry about the names on it."

Strecker doesn't do well with abstract art, and you won't see much of it among her specialties: prints and landscapes.

"People collect art in the Midwest for the right reason, because they like it, not because of the signature on it," Strecker said. "I especially like selling people their first work of art. I think I'm a non-threatening gallery owner. City owners are much more threatening than they need to be.

"I'm selling a product no different than any other. There is no elitism to it."

Strecker's stars are local artists Judy Love, Jim Munce and Yoshi Ikeda. However, the biggest sell is Overland Park artist Dean Mitchell, who in 1996 was given a show at the Beach art museum.

The day a new Mitchell show opens, Manhattan art collectors are akin to parents lining up outside a toy store to buy the hot Christmas toy. Voracious. Excited. Nervous. Who will make it to the gallery in time to nab the best watercolor?

It has gotten so bad that Strecker has imposed a no early sales policy on Mitchell work. It is common for a drawing to be held between two or three parties in order to fairly settle who buys a work.

Along with increased demand comes increased prices. Mitchell's more accomplished watercolors sell upwards of $7,000, while a large oil could go for more than $30,000.

"Dean's show at the museum was a high point of my career. I can't deny that," Strecker said. "It's very positive reinforcement that I really have made a difference in someone's career. The collectors that collected him helped make that show possible."

It is the collectors who make a gallery. In a college town like Manhattan, there is a captive population of interesting, educated people such as professors, students, artists and retirees.

"People here travel," she said. "In my case, people come back from the trendy things to this, and they really like this stuff. There's a trend toward realism — away from pop art."

Lawrence's gallery scene is languishing because of the heavy draw of the Kansas City galleries, while Wichita's major galleries are gone, Strecker said.

Although other Kansas galleries may close, Strecker is expanding. Geometrics opened last spring to offer home furnishings and decorative objects. The bottom line of the store's collection is good design at reasonable prices.

"I have realistic expectations," she said. "I don't expect it to turn a profit this year. It's very hard to get the news out that we are there."

Running three businesses, incorporated into Design Inc., is a hectic schedule for anyone, especially a recent grandmother.

With four dependable employees, Strecker found time to spend five weeks in the early summer in the Provence region of France and 10 days in Belize. She is already planning a trip to Italy during winter break.

When she travels, she constantly keeps an eye open for art and decorative elements for her clients, but Strecker herself could be considered her favorite client.

Her own collection shows her wide interests. Chuck Close, M.C. Escher, Salvador Dali and Thomas Hart Benton are all represented.

"My house is full," Strecker said. "Real collectors don't hang it. They just pile it up."

For Strecker, the respect and allegiances that come with two decades of local stylemaking are also piling up.

Clinton outlines new agenda priorities

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — With the turbulent budget battle out of the way, President Clinton is presenting a long but less glamorous list of priorities for the next three months, from trade and tobacco to education and racial harmony.

Pointing to the nation's booming economy, Clinton said Tuesday, "In the face of good news the easiest thing to do is to rest, to take a vacation, to believe our work is done and to be satisfied that our challenges are met."

"But complacency is not an option," he asserted.

Clinton outlined his fall agenda before an enthusiastic audience made up mostly of students at American University. There were no surprises or blockbuster proposals, nor any attempt to rank his priorities.

Rather than presenting a grand vision, Clinton took more of a nuts-and-bolts approach. Some of the promises he offered — to get tough on opponents of campaign finance reform, for example — were toned down later by his spokesman.

"If his goal is to loom large in history, he's going to have to do a lot better than that agenda," University of Virginia political scientist Larry Sabato said. "Most of what he talked about is not going to happen or, if it does, is going to occur in a diminished way."

Even as he complained about excessive spending on campaigns, the president later was the star attraction at two dinners expected to raise more than a half million dollars for the debt-ridden Democratic Party. Clinton said he would make sure that opponents of campaign finance reform would be exposed in the public light. But his spokesman said that would occur in the natural course of business of the Senate.

Clinton expressed satisfaction with the economy, saying, "The news today is good."

"In this new economy there still will be ups and downs; there will be recessions and crisis, they'll demand action," the president said. "But the economy has fundamentally changed."

He suggested that Washington was at a turning point.

Pointing to the balanced budget agreement, he said, "After years in which the two parties seemed often as tired and trapped as punch-drunk fighters in a ring getting smaller and smaller, finally we found a way for Democrats and Republicans to work together for the national interest."

But there is no shortage of political divisions that face the president and Congress as lawmakers work through a stack of spending bills and tackle some of the issues he outlined.

House Republican leaders, for instance, strenuously oppose Clinton's call for national education tests, arguing they are a waste of money.

"We are the only major nation in the world that does not have high, clear, uniform academic standards of excellence in basic courses in public education," Clinton said.

But it's the Democrats who lead the opposition to Clinton's call for legislation strengthening his power to negotiate foreign trade agreements. The president will launch his trade campaign on Wednesday with a speech in the East Room.

"We do not need to be afraid to trade with the rest of the world," the president said.

Next week, Clinton is expected to announce the changes he'll seek in the tobacco agreement between states and cigarette makers.

He dealt with that issue in two sentences on Tuesday, saying the priority must be to pass sweeping legislation that focuses on reducing smoking among young people.

Clinton also prodded the Senate to at least hold a hearing on the nomination of Massachusetts Gov. William Weld, a Republican, to be ambassador to Mexico. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, has blocked the nomination, saying Weld's positions on drugs is too liberal.

Clinton spoke about his campaign for racial harmony, and said that within just a few decades the entire country would have no majority race.

He said he hoped to bring Americans of different backgrounds together to face one another honestly across the lines that divide.

State Board of Education backs away from plan

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The State Board of Education Tuesday abandoned its traditional position on spending for public schools, one that has led it to make budget-busting requests for more money in the past.

The board approved a proposal that does not ask legislators to increase spending for elementary, junior high and high schools to $4,000 for each student. The current figure is $3,670.

Instead, the board is asking legislators to increase the figure by only $75, to $3,745.

The proposed increase would require legislators to appropriate an additional $42 million for public schools. If the board had remained at the $4,000-per-student mark, it would have requested an additional $183 million.

"I think we are being realistic," said board Chairman Kevin Gilmore, an Olathe Republican.

The board's budget proposal, approved on a voice vote, is for the state's 1999 fiscal year, which begins July 1, 1998.

The recommendations will be forwarded to Gov. Bill Graves' staff, which is drafting his proposed budget. Graves' proposals are to be announced to legislators at the beginning of their 1998 session.

"There's reason to believe the governor and the Legislature will seriously view a more incremental approach," said Budget Director Gloria Timmer. "When you ask for a couple hundred million dollars, the credibility of the request is often the topic, rather than the needs."

The board's action is significant because the Department of Education accounts for half of all spending from the state general fund. The general fund is the single largest source of money for government programs and where the state deposits most of its tax revenues.

In past years, the board's requests for increased spending have been so large that governors and legislators have not paid much attention to them.

For the past 10 years, the average proposed increase in spending from the board has been $251 million. The average percentage increase sought has been 18.5 percent, and the figure has sometimes been more than 30 percent.

"I'm glad to see they have at least become more reasonable and considerate of the taxpayers," House Speaker Tim Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs, said of the board's members.

The only board member to voice opposition was Bill Wagnon, a Topeka Democrat. He said the board is falling behind on its record of fighting for more resources for public schools.

In the past, board members have defended their support for $4,000 per student as advocating what was right for public schools.

But skeptics said the board — and supporters such as the state's largest teachers' union and school board association — could never justify an increase of hundreds of dollars per student.

Officials elected for new city-county government

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — Turnout was brisk Tuesday as voters chose officers for the newly consolidated government of Kansas City, Kan., and Wyandotte County.

Voters were electing a mayor/chief executive as well as the 10 part-time members of the new Unified Board of Commissioners, taking office Oct. 1.

State Rep. David Haley was challenging incumbent Kansas City, Kan., Mayor Carol Marinovich in the nonpartisan voting.

The Unified Board of Commissioners will take the place of the existing seven-member Kansas City, Kan., City Council and the three-member Wyandotte County Commission.

Voters in April gave 2-to-1 approval to the city-county government consolidation, touted by its backers as key to efficiency and tax restraint.

County Election Commissioner Pat Rahija predicted about 50 percent of the county's 72,500 registered voters would vote Tuesday.

At the Kansas National Guard Armory in downtown Kansas City, Kan., poll workers counted about 200 voters in two hours Tuesday morning. A polling place at the Piper School District headquarters in western Wyandotte County drew about 140 voters by 9:30 a.m.

RECYCLE

Tyvek has a garment reprocessing system and will take any suit used in clean room operations to recycle.

Lab department users can pick up labels from the department or contact it to ship items for recycling.

David Margolies, professor of entomology, contacted Galitzer about recycling computer disks when he was switching computer equipment.

Margolies said he thinks it is a good idea to recycle old floppy disks, and it would make sense to recycle old technology across the campus. He believes the cost involved stops most people from recycling.

Students are welcome to drop off items to recycle at the front desk in Edwards Hall.

"Grass roots work is the way to get it done," Galitzer said. "There's not enough funds to do recycling as a whole," he said.

Galitzer said any student group interested in helping out should contact him for information on developing a program.

employee. The majority of questions deal with when to apply and school codes, Moeder said.

Moeder is excited about the new system and said it was better than the alternatives.

Moeder said the recordings will help, but he wants students to be able to talk to a person whenever possible.

Damkroger said whenever the university has a problem, Telecommun-ications works with it to provide answers and the technology to improve the situation.

"We try to give them the technology to solve their problems," Damkroger said.

Damkroger said students don't understand that while there is one phone number there are several phone lines, and students are just calling during a peak calling time.

If the financial aid office hired enough people to cover these periods of time, those employees would probably be idle most of the rest of the time, he said.

In addition to the new phone service, the financial aid office will start working with the Office of Admissions to better help students contacting that office, Moeder said.

"We want to make it a one-stop shop, especially for incoming students," Moeder said.

Moeder said students should contact the Federal Hot line at (800) 4FED-AID with any questions regarding loan processing.

RUNNING FOR A CURE

STEPHANIE BARTEL, senior in elementary education, and Chris Wiebe, sophomore in architectural engineering, practice five to six times a week to prepare for the Chicago Marathon. They run three to eight miles on weekdays, and 15 to 20 miles on the weekends.

4 K-State students to run in Marathons to support Leukemia

STORY BY JEREMY KELLEY • PHOTO BY CLIF PALMBERG

Helping those in need: It's a maxim most people live their lives by. But for four K-State students, that just isn't enough.

On Oct. 19, three K-State students will run in the Chicago Marathon for Leukemia Society's Team in Training. Through the Leukemia Society each member is given a suggested training routine and nutritional advice.

The three students, Chris Wiebe, sophomore in pre-professional architectural engineering, Stephanie Bartel, senior in elementary education and Mary Phillips, senior in accounting, must raise $1,800 for the Kansas Chapter of Leukemia. In return, the chapter sponsors the students to run in the marathon and also assigns them a Leukemia patient to run in honor of.

Wiebe, who is running in honor of a 25-year-old Wichita man who is in desperate need of a bone marrow transplant, said he received a letter last spring about a marathon in Chicago to benefit Leukemia patients. The answer for Wiebe was simple.

"I always wanted to run in a marathon," Wiebe said. "Now I get a chance to help those in need and raise money for leukemia patients, so I am really accomplishing two goals at once."

All three runners have worked hard to raise the funds to be allowed to run in the marathon.

Bartel, whose passion for running began after she competed in the St. Pat's Day Run, said she has had a garage sale, sponsored a fun run in Yoder, Kan., wrote letters to family and friends asking for donations, planned a Team in Training auction Oct. 10, and is working on sponsoring another fun run. But she feels she is not quite there.

"I still have a little way to go," she said. "Right now, I'm a little over halfway."

Besides having to make time for raising the money, each member must endure a grueling training schedule. The suggested routine is for each runner to run three to six miles during the week and 16 or more on the weekends.

"Mary and I usually train together and that makes it much easier when you have someone pushing you along," Bartel said.

Bartel, who usually trains with Phillips, said her program was a little more intense.

"On Wednesdays we run half of a long run and then Saturdays we have our long run," Bartel said. "Our long run started at nine miles and this week it will be up to 22. Before the marathon rolls around we will have been up to 26 or 28 on our long-run days."

Another K-State student will be running in her first marathon in New York on Nov. 4. Tanya Werner, junior in pre-law and member of the Gamma Phi Beta Sorority, is training for the 26.2-mile New York City Marathon.

"Two years ago, I got a letter in the mail and I didn't have any interest in it then," Werner said. "Last spring they sent me another letter, and I decided to do it."

Werner must raise $3,500 for her opportunity to run in the race, as opposed to the $1,800 needed for Chicago. Werner has also been assigned a patient to run for: Joshua Burger, a 6-year-old from her hometown of Sabetha, Kan., who was recently diagnosed with leukemia.

"I've known his dad for quite a while," she said. "It was an easy decision then. That motivated me to run in the marathon."

Werner has developed a passion for running dating back to the days of her high school when she ran in cross country and track. Werner said she is looking forward to her first opportunity to run in a marathon.

"I have always ran," she said. "I just enjoy it so much."

Werner said she has asked members of the greek system to assist her in her desire to run in the marathon. She has started to write letters to each fraternity and sorority asking for any donations, and the results have been overwhelming.

"The greek system has been very generous," Werner said. "On average I get about $100 from each house. They usually are very open about things like this and some houses even set aside money especially for things like this."

Werner will also be participating in the Team in Training auction on Oct. 10 and said she planned to get two autographed K-State footballs to be auctioned off.

K-State police to work with Fort Riley in case

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

A criminal report filed Wednesday by the K-State Police could be the first step in sending an unidentified Fort Riley soldier to court on charges of sexual exploitation of a child.

The report, which lists one charge of sexual exploitation, is reportedly the result of a joint investigation between campus police and special agents in the Fort Riley Criminal Investigations Detachment. The suspect in the case was downloading child pornography files in university computer labs, said Capt. Robert Mellgren, assistant director of campus police.

"All I know is that the individual was getting this off of a UNIX account," Mellgren said.

Fort Riley investigators might know more, but they aren't talking. Maj. John Stauter, public affairs officer, said an investigation was under way, but he couldn't release any details.

"I cannot confirm or deny any reports (about a joint investigation). We have an investigation in progress on a subject about a similar case involving computer-related improprieties. No one has been charged or apprehended at this point in relation to the current investigation," Stauter said.

Mellgren said there will be a joint investigation.

"It will involve another agency. I think Fort Riley will be working with us," he said Wednesday. "As a matter of fact, we haven't even questioned him yet."

Law enforcement officials might not be giving details, but interim Computing and Network Services Director Ken Conrow said a cooperative effort between the two departments is already under way. Their goal, he said, is to catch the soldier and K-State student who, according to the police report, might have downloaded the pornographic files as early as April of this year.

Conrow also said the officers started the investigation. CNS didn't know about the illegal activity before that.

"Some law officers came to us and asked us to cooperate in an investigation," Conrow said. "That's the point at which our administration became involved."

Conrow's colleague, UNIX and Networking Manager Harvard Townsend, said the Fort Riley investigators were first on the case.

"Apparently, the Fort Riley police were the ones who were first notified about it. They contacted the K-State Police," he said.

Townsend said the suspect used public computer terminals in CNS labs to download the material. Then he stored copies of the files in two places.

"As best we can tell, he used our system to download stuff onto floppy disks and he took all of the disks out to Fort Riley. He left the files on his UNIX account here, as well," Townsend said.

A tip to the Fort Riley department apparently started the inquiry.

"Special Agent Wesley said someone found it on a disk out there at Fort Riley. Apparently, they were able to identify the soldier as being the owner (of the disk)," he said.

Mellgren corroborated that part of the story.

"Somebody found it by accident. (The suspect) left some materials behind," he said.

Officers then obtained access to the suspect's UNIX file, Conrow said.

"They've gone through the legal process to get access to his records. We had to cooperate with them, but we're glad to cooperate with them. Because of privacy issues, we had to have the legal support before we looked into the content of

Nontraditional students comprise 29 percent of student population, adjust to academic life

▶ ADULT STUDENT SERVICES helps students adjust to campus life.

LAURA POPE
staff reporter

Students who are married, 25 years or older, parents or have been out of school for a few years might naturally feel out of the loop.

Student who meet any of the above criteria are considered to be nontraditional.

In spring 1997, 29 percent of the student population qualified.

"A real main focus for nontraditional students is confidence," said Philip Kuehn, former assistant director of Adult Student Services. "They're unsure if they can compete academically. On one hand, the life experience will serve them well and on the other we have support services available to help them."

Adult Student Services is in Holton 101, and is designed to help adult nontraditional students make the transition to academic life. Two part-time staff members are available to help students from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

"Someone is always here to assist the students and we are even open during the lunch hour," Nina Tarner, graduate student and assistant director of Adult Student Services, said.

Students are not always aware that they qualify for the services. Adult Student Services must make students aware of the office and the services available, Kuehn said.

"A lot of the time universities are set up to cater to the traditional students, and don't have someone to tell the nontraditionals what services are offered to them," Kuehn said.

K-State had 1,820 undergraduate and 2,075 graduate students who qualified as nontraditional in spring 1997. The curriculum offered at alternative times — nights and weekends — is oriented toward nontraditional students. There are plans to have entire curriculum sequences set up specifically for this group at K-State, Kuehn said.

In making the decision to come back to school, scholarships, work, child care and other family needs are all considered, Tarner said. Adult Student Services offers a variety of support to nontraditional students. Students can get information ranging from public school information to how to enroll. The service also offers students an emergency locator system, commuter networking and scholarship and alternative credit opportunities.

"When one member makes the decision to go back to school, it will affect the whole family," Kuehn said. "It's not just mom or dad is going back to school, the family is going back to school. Many changes have to be made."

Adult Student Services encourages the students and their families to get involved by taking their family on a tour of campus and visiting the classrooms. Nontraditional students are also urged to take an active role in campus organizations, student government or major-related groups.

"We encourage them to get involved with activities, maybe just one, but to get involved," Tarner said. "This shows a potential employer that the student can not only handle work, family or classes, but they were involved on campus. They can balance it all and it works."

Although many students find it difficult to balance daily activities once they return to school, Adult Student Services offers a course that focuses on topics ranging from time management to wellness and fitness.

The course, Enhanced University Experience, also helps students to become familiar with the campus by taking them on tours of Farrell Library, Career and Employment Services and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Adult Student Services also has brown bag lunches from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Tuesdays and Wednesdays in the Union Stateroom. This allows students to meet with a representative from Adult Student Services and other nontraditional students on campus.

Two of the biggest concerns for nontraditional students remain to be finding child care and financial aid, Kuehn said. Student services helps to find options for affordable, quality child care for nontraditional students.

The Dorothy Thompson Memorial Scholarship is just one of many available for nontraditional students, Tarner said.

The Educational Opportunity Fund and Adult Student Services also offer several annual scholarships.

"A lot of resources are out there," Kuehn said. "The person in the best position is the one who starts early."

Many people who got married or started working right out of high school are now finding themselves going back to college, Tarner said.

"They are needing to retool themselves in one or more areas," Kuehn said.

"A lot of students just want to explore something that interests them."

Wefald views Cohen's lecture as testimony to Landon Series

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

When President Jon Wefald finishes his introduction of Secretary of Defense William Cohen, he won't leave McCain Auditorium.

He'll be hanging on Cohen's every word during Friday's Landon Lecture.

Wefald said he hopes students and faculty will turn out for the lecture by Cohen, a senior cabinet official in the Clinton administration. It's an honor that Cohen chose to make a presentation for the lecture series, he said.

"He is someone who could be speaking 365 days a year if he wanted to. To have him pick Kansas State is a testimony to both the university and the Landon Lecture Series. To say we're pleased to have him is an understatement," Wefald said.

The three-term senator from Maine was sworn in as defense secretary in January. Wefald said the selection of Cohen for the post is a testimony to his success on Capitol Hill.

"He was appointed by Clinton to replace Perry. What made that interesting is that he's appointed as a Republican to a Democratic administration. That should show you the kind of stature he had on both sides of the aisle," he said.

Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture Series, said Cohen's cabinet position makes him a perfect addition to the long list of historic Landon speakers.

"In the Landon Lecture Series we have the people who are in positions of power and influence. He's one of the top cabinet members in our government. This is an opportunity for students and faculty to hear directly from someone with power and influence," Reagan said.

Cohen's name will be added to a list of numerous world leaders who have spoken in the Landon Lecture Series. Wefald said that list is one that K-State can be proud of.

"There's probably no state university in the country that's had a more impressive list of presidents, vice presidents, cabinet members, public policy makers and foreign presidents than we've had," he said. "We've been very fortunate."

Cohen has not set a topic for his speech, Reagan said. He will take questions from audience members as part of the address, which begins at 2 p.m.

The secretary of state will speak at 2 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium for the Landon Lecture Series.

News Rewind collects the top campus, local, state, national and world news from the past 48 hours. Briefs are collected from wire and staff reports.

New York Woman charged with killing 3-year-old grandson

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — A woman was charged with bludgeoning her 3-year-old grandson to death with an old cutting board, then leaving his body in her home for more than a day before calling for an ambulance.

Barbara Briggs reported in a 911 call Monday that the boy had injured himself in a fall, but suspicions were immediately raised because his lifeless body bore bruises and cigarette burns as well as severe head injuries.

Briggs pleaded innocent to second-degree murder Tuesday and was jailed without bail.

The boy, Keith Sims, had been struck several times in the head with an old cutting board that has a metal handle, said police Lt. Frank Frey.

Briggs, 41, allegedly told police she beat the boy because he had sneaked into the kitchen to make a sugar sandwich. She also admitted burning him with a cigarette to warn him of the danger of fire, police said.

Because the boy's mother was ill, he had moved in about four months ago with his grandmother and her three children, ages 6, 10 and 12, Frey said. The boy's mother, Michelle Sims, had surrendered custody of the child to Briggs.

Court asked to overturn award to man attacked by girlfriend

TOPEKA — Louis Jackson Jr. was arrested for assaulting his girlfriend. While he sat on a street curb, handcuffed, his girlfriend came up behind him, pulled his head back and slashed his throat from ear to ear with a box cutter.

Jackson spent only a few hours in the hospital. Later, he sued the city of Kansas City, Kan., where he lives.

A jury in Wyandotte County decided the city should pay Jackson $158,500. It concluded police officers were negligent in handling the September 1994 incident.

The city is hoping the state Supreme Court will overturn the jury's verdict, and the justices heard oral arguments Wednesday. The court expects to issue a ruling Oct. 31.

Wesley Griffin, an assistant city attorney, said one officer was checking to see whether any outstanding warrants applied to Jackson. A second, standing in front of Jackson, was writing down information from Jackson's driver's license.

He said they did not put Jackson in a police car because they did not want to stain its seat. When they arrived, Jackson's girlfriend, Leigh Ann Davis, had blood on her clothing and cuts on her body. Jackson, too, had blood on his clothes, but no injuries.

Russia approves construction of floating nuclear power plant

MOSCOW — The Russian government reportedly has approved construction of a floating nuclear power plant designed to supply cheap energy to a remote arctic region.

The plant will be built in Pevek, nine time zones east of Moscow, and will use a reactor from a nuclear submarine, ITAR-Tass reported Wednesday. The energy it provides will go to the Chukotka region in the Far East.

It is to consist of two pressurized-water reactors mounted on a barge floating in the East Siberian Sea, on the Arctic circle.

Russia's nuclear power industry has aroused safety concerns in the United States and other countries. But last year, when word of the project first surfaced, Russian officials said the plant meets all safety requirements.

Used fuel is to be stored on the barge, and every 13 years of its projected 40-year lifetime the plant would be towed to the port of Murmansk — about a 2,500-mile one-way trip — for repair and fuel reloading.

Nuclear power plant construction in the former Soviet Union came to a standstill following the Chernobyl nuclear accident in 1986, but Russian officials are again considering new plants in areas with serious energy shortages.

Shortage could increase birth control pill prices

JACOB JANSONIUS
staff reporter

Before long, Lafene Health Center might be forced to make an important decision. The decision might cost some students a lot of cash.

The Student Health Advisory Committee was informed there is a shortage of Ortho-Novum 1/35 — a certain type of birth control pills.

Pam Spaulding, head pharmacist at Lafene, said it is a supply and demand problem. Lafene has been ordering the pills, but they have been back ordered several times.

"Normally it only takes the company 15 days to deliver them, so there isn't much we can do," Spaulding said.

One of the possible solutions is that Lafene can borrow the birth control pills from the health department.

The only problem with that solution is that there is only one distributor of these certain pills, which means other health institutions will probably be suffering from the same shortage.

"Even places like KU could be facing a shortage," Spaulding said. "Since one company is the only maker, they have no pressure."

The other solution is having people switch to similar types of birth control. There are 21 different types of birth control pills available to students at Lafene.

Stefanie Huff, senior in biology and pre-medicine and SHAC committee member, said she thinks it won't be that big of a deal.

"There are so many different kinds that are similar to each other, most people won't even care," she said.

The price of birth control pills at Lafene is about $7. If Lafene has to order the Ortho-Novum 1/35 from off campus, the price could rise to $27.

Julie Tarara, chairwoman for SHAC, said she also believes there is no need for students to worry.

"If students know ahead of time, they'll know the best alternative for them," Tarara said. "It's not Lafene's fault."

Spaulding also said the shortage is nothing for people to get excited about.

"It's pretty much out of our control right now. All we can do is see if our shipment will come in," Spaulding said.

Student gains valuable experience at beef research barn

DAVID LOTT
staff writer

Gaining practical experience and enhancing undergraduate studies are benefits Brian Malm gains at the K-State Beef Unit.

Malm, senior in animal science and industry, has been working in the unit for three years. He said the experience there has helped him apply the skills he has been taught in the classroom.

Some of the jobs students at the unit do include feeding, moving, daily care of the facilities and processing the cattle, Malm said.

Processing the cattle includes giving eartags, growth implants and weighing cattle as they enter the unit, he said. Students also help work with sick cattle.

"There's no main job title there," he said in reference to the different work the students perform at the unit. Many students are needed to meet the demand of work at the unit.

"There's 25 on hand right now," he said.

The time needed to finish different jobs exceeds the amount of time students can give to work.

He said there are more than 1,000 cattle at the unit right now. They are facilitated in varying-sized pens. Some cattle are in individual stalls for small individual studies.

Malm works from 7 to 10 a.m. feeding cattle before he goes to classes. He has also worked afternoons removing manure and doing other general maintenance like mending fences.

Experience from working at the unit has given Malm tangible examples to work with while taking classes. Malm said animal nutrition doesn't work on paper in the classroom like it does in real life.

Environment and climate are important factors that affect the health and well being of animals at the unit. Pens need to be kept clean not only for sanitary reasons, but also for the animal's health.

Many different experiments have been tried at the unit, Malm said.

"They've done a lot of different trials," he said.

One study involved feeding onion pellets to the cattle to see if they would gain weight from them.

The trial was finished in summer 1996 while he was away, though Malm said the cattle were gaining weight while he was working at the unit before school was out that spring.

James Drouillard, associate professor of animal science, is the director of the unit. Drouillard said he tries to make the unit an out-of-the-classroom class.

"He wants to make it a learning environment, because it is," Malm said.

Malm said he has helped to take blood samples, give implants and take fecal samples from cattle, when cattle are processed. Facilities have also changed since Malm started working there.

New equipment for measuring molasses and tallow for feed have helped make feeding the cattle more precise and cleaner, Malm said. A steam flaker has also been added to flake corn and grain.

"It's a long, dirty job," Malm said. Malm works full days on Saturdays and until feeding is completed on Sundays.

In the end, Malm would like to graduate with a bachelor's degree and go into veterinary school. He said he would like to become a nutrition consultant as a veterinarian. If he isn't accepted into veterinary school, he is going to apply for graduate school and study ruminant nutrition.

The hands-on work at the unit has helped Malm's education. "It's valuable experience," he said.

Professors decide whether to cancel class for Landon Lecture

LESLEY BAKER
staff reporter

If you're in class at 2 p.m., chances are you'll miss Friday's Landon Lecture. Some professors will not cancel their afternoon classes for the speech to be given by Secretary of Defense William Cohen.

"I think it should be left up to the individual faculty member," said James Nechols, professor of entomology.

"Sometimes there isn't that much flexibility on scheduled days and sometimes the lectures are moved unexpectedly. If it's an exam, the student's locked into that class. But the student can make their own decision to cut class to attend the Landon Lecture."

The Landon Lecture Series has been in existence since 1966. Gov. Alf Landon gave the first lecture in the series, "New Challenges in International Relations," on Dec. 13, 1966. Landon was the Republican Party nominee for president in 1936, three years after being sworn in as governor of Kansas.

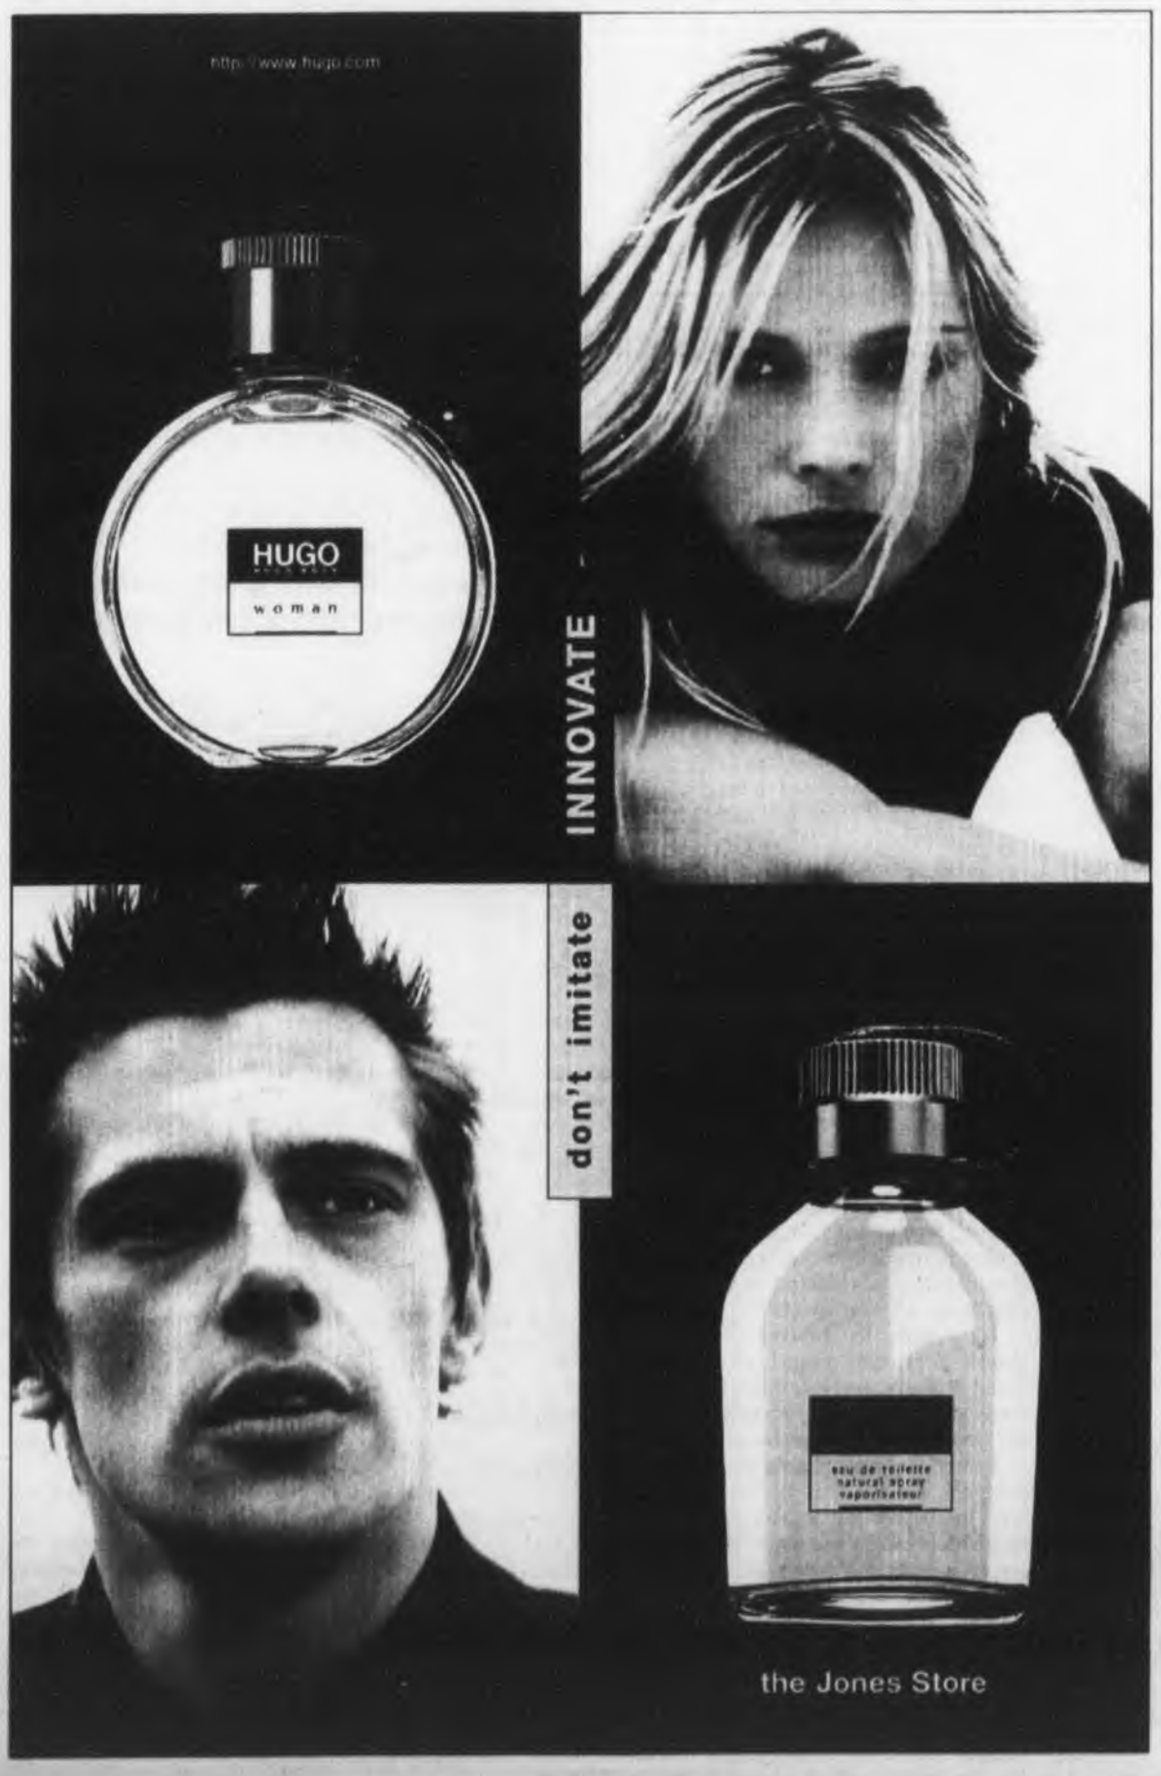
When he died in 1987, James A. McCain, former K-State president, dedicated the series to him. Since then, some of the country's most well-known minds have appeared at the Landon Lecture podium to honor Landon's memory.

Lecturers have included Ambassador Abba Eban, Bernard Shaw, former Presidents Bush, Reagan, Nixon and dozens more. For this particular lecture, Cohen gave K-State three weeks' notice, which is why professors don't plan around the lectures. No one is really sure when K-State will have one.

"Sometimes you have an idea for dates and times," said Charles Reagan, assistant to the president and chairman of the Landon Lecture Series.

"You're dealing with some of the busiest people in the world," he said.

Reagan said the secretary of defense won't make any commitments more than three weeks in advance.



The official policy concerning canceling class for a Landon Lecture is that the decision depends on the individual faculty member, Reagan said.

Reagan suggested students missing class could gain a lot from attending a Landon Lecture.

"I was a professor for 30 years and students skip your class for less worthy reasons. Students skip classes for all sorts of reasons. The Landon Lecture is better than most."

The Landon Lecture will be in McCain. Will students skip class to attend?

"It would depend on how interested I was in the subject," Tara Potzler, graduate student in journalism, said. "If I could possibly make the lecture, I'd try to."

Efforts must be made to maximize educational effect of lecture

When Secretary of Defense William Cohen speaks at the first Landon Lecture of the semester, there could be a surprising lack of students. Sorry Mr. Secretary, they have class and can't come hear about national policy, the state of our country or world peace.

For years, professors and students alike have complained to the administration about its uncompromising attitude about classes during a Landon Lecture. After all, these lectures are an enriching and educating experience that could add to the classroom experience.

How is that possible if the students can't even be there?

Cohen, whose experience and expertise of national service and foreign defense policy span three decades, brings an unusual opportunity for K-State students and faculty to be educated about the status of American defense policy. This opportunity should not be missed.

But because the administration is not going to institute any campus Landon Lecture vacation day, the time has come to accept a little responsibility.

Professors, it is and has always been perfectly within your rights to dismiss class for one day to allow students to take advantage of this special opportunity.

Make sure, even if class is not canceled outright, that your students know they can go if they so desire.

Students, don't wait around for someone to tell you that you can go. Ask, inquire, request. Most professors are more than willing to make arrangements for truly interested students.

If students feel the need to skip class at 2 p.m. Friday, don't do it to go to the bars or catch up on much-needed sleep. Spend a little time educating yourself at the first Landon Lecture of the year.

Most importantly — just be there. This is a chance you won't get every day, and a lot of people have worked hard to give it to you. Show up. You just might learn something.

The flaw is in the flawlessness

GOD'S ONLY FAULT IS PERFECTION

"Although affliction cometh not forth of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground; Yet man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward."

— Job 5:6-7

In the stories that humanity has told for centuries, there are common threads in each, the most common being the concept of a fatal flaw. Human heroes from Jason to Hamlet have had something, some aspect of their character, which keeps them from achieving complete victory or perfection.

Christians would say the Bible has explained this to us, that human beings are flawed and incapable of perfection. I would submit that God himself has a unique, if not precisely fatal, flaw — flawlessness.

For millennia now, people have wondered at how an omniscient, omnipotent and benevolent God could allow so many horrible things to happen in the world.

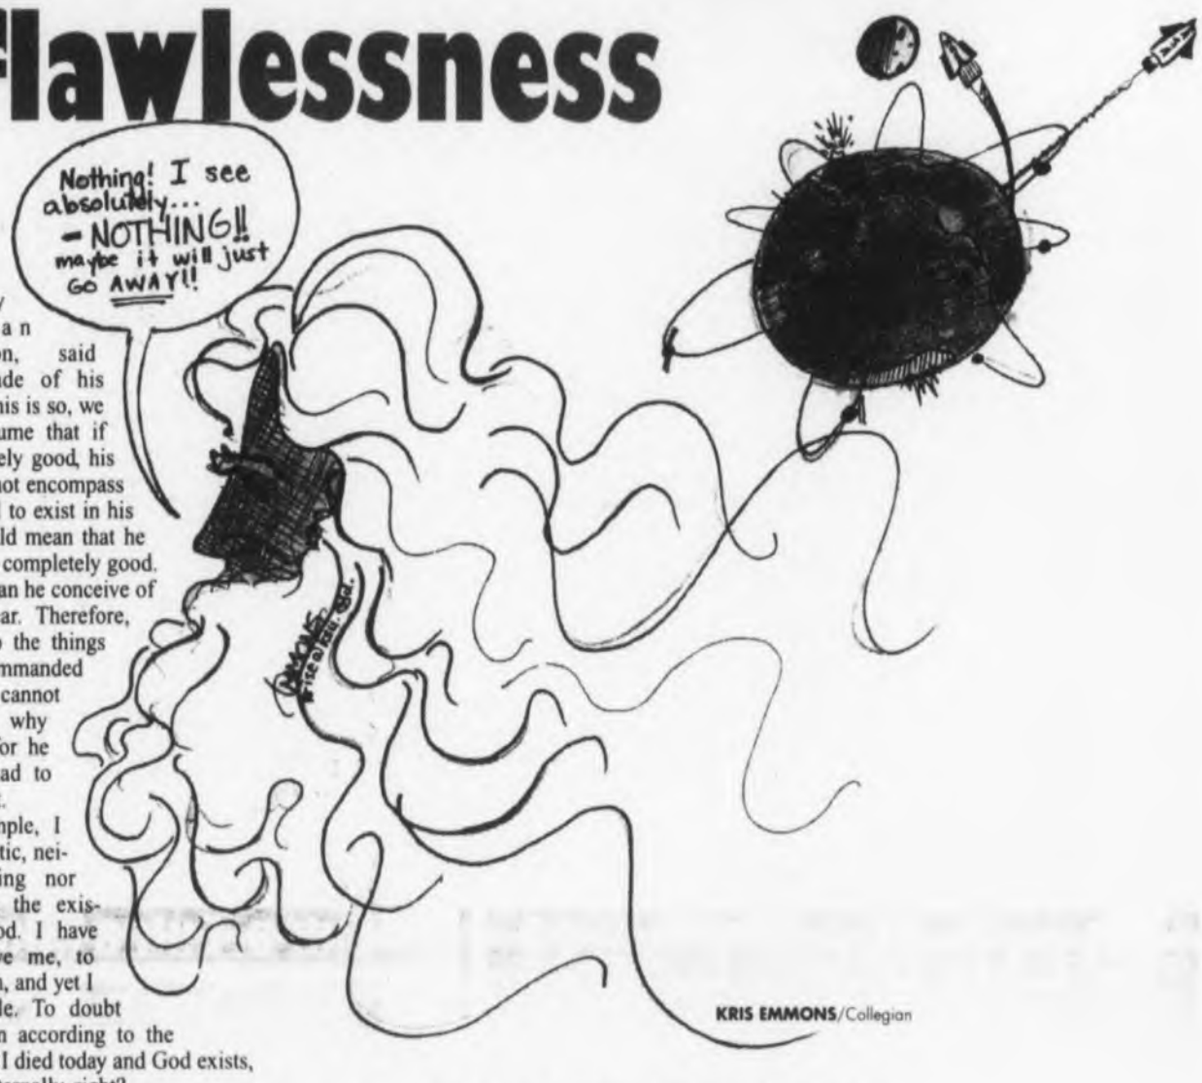
The most often heard explanation is that evil is caused by man, who has been given the divine gift of free will. Let us consider, however, the desirability of this gift and whether or not it is something we always need.

In 1697, Pierre Bayle — a prominent figure in the French Enlightenment — said if humans acted like God, they would be condemned. He gave this example: A mother allows her young daughter to attend a ball. Later, as the mother is passing a window of the building where the ball is, she sees her daughter in a corner, about to give in to the advances of a young suitor.

If the mother steps in, she will be impinging upon her daughter's free will. If she does not, she would have failed her daughter and, nearly as unfortunate, she would have to wait 300 years before she could explain her side of the story to Oprah.

To add insult to injury, once this person has misused the "gift" of free agency improperly, she will be punished for it by God for eternity. If I gave my 4-year-old son a loaded 9-millimeter pistol for Christmas, it would be reasonable to expect him to misuse the weapon and injure someone. But who would bear more of the blame for his actions, him for not obeying my instructions on how to use his gift or me for giving him a gift I know he can't understand?

I believe the law would not be convicting my son. (By the way, if you don't think it is reasonable to expect people to misuse the gift of free will, reread Genesis. All that book is about is the repeated abuse of free agency. A more recent example: Someone gave Andrew Dice Clay his own series.)



So it comes to this: Is there a way to reconcile the concept of the all-knowing, all-powerful and all-around-nice-guy God with the God who looks the other way when evil things happen and refuses to step in when we are doing the wrong thing?

I think so.

I think that as much as we are incapable of understanding God, he is equally incapable of comprehending us.

Before I explain, let me say if you are one of those people who would tell me at this point that the Lord works in mysterious ways, you should probably go find something else to do right now. That is a phrase that not only kills debate, but also shows a desire to avoid too much thought. May I suggest you click on UPN? Andrew Dice Clay has a new series you might like.

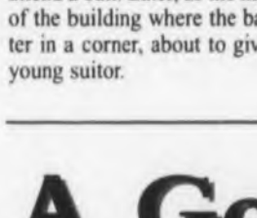
St. Thomas Aquinas, a 13th-century theologian whose pre-Reformation concepts can be found in nearly every Christian denomination, said God is made of his thought. If this is so, we have to assume that if God is entirely good, his thought cannot encompass evil. For evil to exist in his thought would mean that he could not be completely good.

KRIS EMMONS/Collegian

Neither can he conceive of doubt or fear. Therefore, when we do the things God has commanded us not to, he cannot understand why we would, for he has never had to fear or doubt.

For example, I am an agnostic, neither believing nor disbelieving the existence of God. I have tried, believe me, to come to faith, and yet I am incapable. To doubt God is a sin according to the Bible, and if I died today and God exists, I will burn eternally, right?

Even if you believe that God and Jesus are one, there is no point in the Bible that suggests Jesus ever doubted who he was or where he was going after the cross. I truly don't intend to offend anyone, but even I could accept crucifixion if I knew wholeheartedly that an afterlife existed. Look at the Heaven's Gate cult. Its members might have been loonies, but they were fearless and without doubt.



God's "fault," therefore, is perfection. His thought, while it is vastly more inclusive than ours, cannot grasp what it means to truly be human, full of doubt and fear and pain. This might not excuse the actions of those who willingly commit acts in conflict with their stated beliefs, but it could explain how a benevolent God can turn his face away from earthly horrors.

A God with no partners

ALLAH OFFERS PEACE, BUT STRICT DEVOTION IS REQUIRED

In the name of Allah, the most compassionate, the most merciful. I give thanks to Allah for his bounties and knowledge that he has guided me to Islam. I also ask Allah almighty that he bestow his peace and blessings upon prophet Mohammed and grant him the highest rewards and rank in Heaven.

Further, I ask Allah almighty that he grant his peace and blessings upon all of his prophets from the beginning of time, including Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, David and Jesus, as well as all the countless others. Peace be upon them all, may their names be held in highest honor for all time.

MAJED KHAN

MAJED KHAN is a graduate student in electrical engineering. You can send e-mail to Majed at majed@ksu.edu.

The Arabic word Islam has two meanings — peace and submission. This submission requires a fully conscious and willing effort to submit to the one almighty God. A Muslim is the person who submits to this God. One must consciously and conscientiously give oneself to the service of Allah. This means to act on what Allah enjoins all of us to do and what his beloved Prophet Mohammed encouraged us to do which personified the Koran.

Once we humble ourselves, rid ourselves of our egotism and submit to Allah exclusively, in faith and in action, we will surely feel peace in our hearts. Establishing peace in our hearts will bring about peace in our external conduct as well.

Islam is careful to remind us it is not a religion to be paid mere lip service. Rather it is an all-encompassing way of life that must be practiced continuously. A Muslim practices the five pillars of the religion: the declaration of faith in the oneness of Allah and the prophethood of Mohammed, prayer, fasting, alms, and the pilgrimage to Mecca.

There are also the six articles of faith: belief in God, the holy books, the prophets, the angels, the Day of Judgment and God's decree, whether for good or ill.

The name Allah in Islam never refers to Mohammed, as many people may believe. Allah is the personal name of God. A Muslim believes Allah is the one God, with no partner, all-powerful and absolutely just. He is the all-knowing, and all-merciful, the supreme and the sovereign.

Islam is the religion given to Adam, the first man and the first prophet of Allah. It was the first religion of all the prophets sent by Allah to humanity. The name of Islam was not decided upon by people, but it was chosen by Allah himself and clearly mentioned in his final revelation to man.

Allah said in the Koran, "This day I have perfected your religion for you, completed my favor upon you and have chosen for you Islam as your religion."

The religion of Islam is the same message that was revealed to all the prophets. Allah has said in the Koran, "Say (O Mohammed): 'We believe in Allah and in what has been sent down to us, and what was sent down to Abraham, Ishmael, Isaac, Jacob and the twelve sons of Jacob and what was given to Moses, Jesus and the prophets from their lord. We make no distinction between one another among them and to Allah we have submitted.' And whoever seeks a religion other than Islam, it will never be accepted of him, and in the Hereafter he will be one of the losers." Imran 84-85.

These are messengers sent by Allah to humanity for guidance. They are people like us, whom Allah guided by his will. They came to specific people at specific times. They led people to the submission of the one true God who even recognized the oneness of Allah but used idols, people and others as a means of intersession between them and Allah.

When these messengers passed away, their religions were changed to the point of associating partners with Allah. This is what happened to Christianity, Judaism and other religions. Prophet Mohammed, however, was sent to all of the nations from his time until the Day of Judgment. Islam is, therefore, the purer form of these religions.

The miracles of the prophets did occur. Moses was able to part the body of water. Jesus, similarly, was able to raise the dead, be born from virgin Mary and speak as an infant. All the prophets came with miracles and performed them by the will of Allah.

The Koran is the word of Allah in the exact form with no conflicts. It will also be preserved in its pure form until the Day of Judgment.

Considering all of this, when one testifies by saying, "There is no god but Allah and that Mohammed is the last messenger," one becomes a Muslim. At this point, Allah forgives the sins of the person. This person has a "clean record," provided the person was sincere about the testimony.

I once had an opportunity to talk to Jim Bohannan, a well-known radio show host on National Public Radio. He said only 2 percent of Americans are knowledgeable about Islam. But CNN and The New York Times reported Islam as the fastest-growing religion in the western world.

This religion has 1.3 billion followers. Although the sheer number of Muslims should not matter, the logical sense this great religion makes is the difference. It is a religion that should not be taken to the emotional level because it's so simple, but to the level of understanding the true concept of one God who created all of us, the one who has no partners.

Columnist's views on Marilyn Manson misrepresents fans

Editor,

Prejudice and bigotry, to me, have usually referred to the attitudes of people who judge others based on their race or ethnicity. In Tuesday's Collegian, Boyd Ferris' article caused my age-old interpretation of those words to be drastically and sadly expanded.

It now includes the stereotypes that misinformed individuals create of others simply because they don't share the same opinions, fashion sense or taste in music.

I personally am not a fan of Marilyn Manson. I don't wear chains, white make up or even dress in all black. Despite the fact that I am not at all similar to the "gothic freaks" generalized in the Ferris column, it is offending to know people still hold these biased stereotypes.

In only a few hundred words, Ferris managed to label, and probably insult, an entire group of Manson followers as people who not only lack intellect, sanity and rational thought, but who follow messages of gibberish from an abnormal freak who makes gothic displays solely for the money.

I'm sorry these hard-core fans don't share the same views as Ferris. However, this certainly does not justify any right for him to make these obviously uneducated accusations of people he has most likely never met based on a couple of bad e-mails on an anti-Manson World Wide Web site.

Ferris claims Manson followers have left the realm of society's "common, understood concept of what is normal." First of all, there is no definition of what is normal in society. This assumption is solely his personal opinion of what is acceptable character. People consider others who are like them to be normal.

For instance, to hard-core Manson fans, a fellow groupie is perfectly normal. At the same time, they would probably find someone familiar in tastes to Ferris to be weird. This is how society's views work, and the word "normal" has no set interpretation.

In order to form opinions of others, it is necessary to become familiar with their ideas and personality. It is not to conclude that because one person in a particular group is exactly the same. That would be like me saying because one certain senior in electrical engineering (who wrote the article in question) thinks Manson fans are all unintellectual freaks, that all seniors in electrical engineering believe the same. I'm sure that's not the case.

As a final point, it was stated "there is no answer to why people purposely go against the flow of normal behavior to become freaks." Maybe if someone would take the time to pose this question to one of the so-called freaks, take the time to listen to the explanation with an open mind, and strive to actually understand and accept the answers received, rude and misinformed stereotypes such as this would no longer exist. Maybe then, I will discover that my new definitions are unfounded.

Greeks not only group making a difference with volunteer work

Editor,

Pop quiz, Collegian: What was the purpose of Tuesday's editorial? As the members of the executive board of the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, we would like to know. You ask the question, "What is your (those independent of the greek community) excuse for not dropping a quarter in a can or volunteering some time at a local charity?" The answer is simple — we do!

We do our part. If you look at the statistics, the residence halls give more blood to the K-State vs. the University of Kansas blood drive every year. Last year, the residence halls together raised well more than $5,000 during the holiday season for local charities. We also did Giving Wreaths last year, which gave more than 100 gifts to underprivileged children in the Manhattan area. Where was the coverage for those philanthropies?

Involvement and philanthropy are great things to strive for in an organization. Luckily for the fraternities and sororities of this campus, they can require it of their members. Independents do not exactly have that luxury. This does not cure the ailment, either.

The ailment is that the Collegian editorial board members are not seeing the effect of their words. The opinion in the editorial is clearly of good intentions — everyone would like to see more charitable involvement. The focus, though, intended or not, holds up the greek system above all others. Why do we have to perpetuate this wedge driven between greeks and other students?

You say, "You don't need to be greek to make a difference."

You make it seem that one is less of a student if one is not.

We are aware that this was not your intention. We commend the Collegian for its coverage of worthy, community-benefiting events. We ask that the Collegian not perpetuate the division of students by living group, but focus on the real goal — involvement.

No, the game doesn't start until Saturday. But downtown Manhattan businesses and the Manhattan Town Center are getting a head start on the festivities.

In short, plenty of people will be partying on Poyntz.

Dave Colburn, chairman of Main Street Manhattan, the downtown business association, said the organizers of Purple Power Play on Poyntz expect at least 15,000 football fans to visit the downtown area during the next two days as part of the annual pre-football season celebration.

Monnie Applegate, marketing director at the mall, said the event is designed to be fun for everyone.

"It's kind of a carnival- and festival-type atmosphere for students and the public to come down and spend the evening," she said.

Purple Power Play on Poyntz is organized by a committee of several sponsors and interested organizations, Colburn said.

This year, he and Applegate have effectively served as co-chairs of the festival committee, which is largely organized by Main Street Manhattan and the mall. They expect a good turnout for both nights, and Colburn said he hopes others are as ready for the weekend as he is.

"I'm really anxious for it to happen this year. It seems like it's been forever getting here and it's been forever since we've gotten to see the football team play. We're excited about the weekend being here," he said.

Activities begin at 6 tonight near the intersection of Third Street and Poyntz Avenue. Union Program Council is sponsoring a concert by Blue Moon Ghetto. Food and product vendors, a children's carnival and a free watermelon feed will also begin at that time. With a canned food item, which will be donated to the Flint Hills Breadbasket, children can have their pictures taken with Willie the Wildcat between 6 and 7 p.m.

At 8 p.m., the biggest pregame pep rally of the week will get under way. Football coach Bill Snyder and captains from the team will headline the event, which will also feature performances by the K-State Marching Band, Classy Cats and the K-State cheer squad.

Following the rally, Manhattan Town Center will begin its Purple Power Sale. From 9 to 11 p.m., many mall businesses will offer special savings, Applegate said. The mall will also unveil a new machine to the public.

"It's our Purple Power Machine. That's all I can tell you. You'll just have to come and see what it is for yourself," Applegate said.

Friday night's activities move to the east side of the mall, Applegate said. There, near the food court entrance, two stages will be assembled to showcase various local talent in a concert from 6 to 8 p.m.. Seven, The Beat Kings, Derek Shacklett, Mark Hank Monroe, Ann Zimmerman and Jacob Ramirez will perform at the show.

Another, smaller pep rally will be at 8 p.m. Friday, featuring the marching band, Classy Cats and cheer squad. The event will be quite similar to the Thursday rally —

Services planned for student

JENNI EVANS

Funeral arrangements have been made for a K-State student killed Tuesday in a motorcycle accident.

Mike K. Newcomb, senior in pre-medicine, died Tuesday morning from severe head and facial trauma, after his motorcycle collided with a car.

"We just want to thank God that we had the opportunity to know him. He was a good friend," said Scott Boden, senior in secondary education and Newcomb's roommate.

Services will be at 11 a.m. Friday at the First United Methodist Church, in Hays, Kan.

He will be buried in Mount Allen Cemetery.

Visitation is from 3 to 8 p.m. Thursday at Brock's North Hill Chapel, 2509 Vine. The family will receive friends from 5 to 7 p.m. at the chapel.

Memorial contributions can be made to CASA of the High Plains or to the Mike Newcomb Scholarship Fund at K-State.

Newcomb was a member of the Flying Club on campus and worked summers at the Smoky Hill Country Club in Hays.

"He was one of the hardest-working people I know. He'll be dearly missed," Boden said. Boden spoke on behalf of his other two roommates, Matt Meyer, senior in animal science and Nick Aberle, senior in agricultural technology management.

Students and faculty are planning a service in Manhattan for Monday. Time and place have not been announced.

Explosion kills 1, injures 9 after tearing through Ohio glue-manufacturing plant

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — A Georgia-Pacific Corp. plant blew up while chemicals were being mixed to make glue Wednesday. One worker was missing and presumed dead, and nine other people were hurt.

The explosion rattled windows up to seven miles away and blew away about half the roof but left some of the walls standing.

"We thought it was a bomb. It was so loud," said Patrick Stewart, who was teaching a Bible class at a church a quarter-mile away.

Nearby buildings in the industrial area were evacuated afterward because of a chemical odor. Everyone was allowed back four hours later.

The plant on the city's east side produces resins for industrial use and wood products.

The explosion happened in a kettle where sulfuric acid, phenol and formaldehyde were being mixed to make a wood adhesive, said Andy Norman, a regional manufacturing manager for Georgia-Pacific.

"There's no way to tell what happened," he said.

The missing worker was standing about 10 feet from the kettle, said Fire Chief Dan Vincent. He said he had little hope the worker would be found alive.

There were 14 other workers in the plant at the time, Vincent said.

One plant worker was hospitalized in serious condition with head injuries, and a firefighter was listed in fair condition.

The others injured, including another firefighter and two people who worked at businesses nearby, were not seriously hurt.

Both phenol and formaldehyde, which is flammable, escaped into the air, said police spokeswoman Gayle Conner. However, the chemicals posed no danger to people or the environment, said Melissa Riley Patsiavos, spokeswoman for the Ohio Environmental Protection Agency.

A few residents complained that the chemical burned their noses and throats, but Patsiavos said they probably wouldn't have any long-term effects.

The explosion shook homes miles away, knocking objects off shelves.

"It really shook the building," said Sharon Mittenbergs, a worker at Jefferson Smurfit Corp., a cardboard manufacturer a mile from the plant.

Black Alumni and Greek Reunion activities scheduled this weekend

HANG NGUYEN
staff writer

This weekend, K-State welcomes the return of black alumni from as early as the class of 1954.

Sept. 12-14 marks the seventh annual K-State Black Alumni and Greek Reunion. The theme is "Reuniting the Past and Shaping the Future."

"In the late 40s and early '50s, we decided we needed a reunion because most black students never came back to visit the campus," said Veryl Switzer, 1954 graduate and associate athletic director at K-State.

"We felt that we needed to reacquaint these people with the university and renew their relationships with old associates, roommates, boyfriends and girlfriends," he said.

Although the first reunion took place in the mid-1980s, it didn't become an annual event until 1990. The KSU Alumni Association has been sponsoring the Reunion since 1991.

Tammi Abdulhaqq, assistant director of constituent programs at the Alumni Association, said the enthusiasm for this event has always remained high.

"There was and still is a high interest level among black alumni to have the opportunity to come back to K-State and rekindle friendships in the form of a reunion," she said.

Many alumni will be surprised with the changes in appearance as well as attitude of campus, Switzer said.

"They will be tremendously and pleasantly surprised about the addition of the new facilities and the increased involvement of black educators and students," Switzer said.

The reunion is also a time for education and celebration. This is a good time for young black students to learn about the past, Switzer said.

He said they need to understand that they're real — not fantasizing — because these alumni are successful in a variety of professions.

"This is important to us because we as African-American students get a chance to talk to graduates past and present about their careers, life at K-State and other issues that we as students face," said Marcella Burks, president emeritus of Black Student Union and treasurer of the Big 12 Council on Black Student Government.

John Leod Wilson, the oldest living black male graduate, will also be honored at the Reunion. Wilson will turn 97 years old this month and the Alumni Association, Black Faculty/Staff Alliance and other organizations on campus will honor him this weekend.

"There is a strong possibility that Dr. Wilson will not be able to make the Reunion due to his health. If that is the case, Dr. Wilson will still be recognized in his absence at the Reunion," Abdulhaqq said.

Other activities planned for the weekend include an African-American Marketplace, a Mini-Alumni/Student Stepshow, tours and the Wildcat's football game against Ohio.

"I think the folks will enjoy themselves because I don't think many of the older alumni have seen a winning football game at K-State," Switzer said.

"I anticipate they will have fun, feel satisfied and reminisce — just like a family and that's how I think they will take it."

The excitement for the K-State Black Alumni and Greek Reunion has gathered many volunteers from various black organizations including the BSU, National Society of Black Engineers, United Black Voices as well as black fraternities and sororities.

"This weekend will give past students a chance to come back and see how far K-State has come since they left," said Verneta White, president of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority. "I also think students will enjoy the possible networking that could take place."

ROCKIN' THE SHOCKERS

Volleyball team sweeps Wichita State, 3-0

SAM FELSENFELD
staff reporter

Senior setter Devon Ryning always leads the K-State volleyball team in assists.

She had 34 in the Wildcats' 15-0, 15-12, 15-3 victory over visiting Wichita State on Wednesday night, and now has 218 on the season. That's 210 more than sophomore outside hitter and middle blocker Dawn Cady, who has eight this year, good for second on the team.

However, Ryning's biggest assist during the match against the Shockers came in the locker room, not on the court.

K-State took the first 20 points of the match, easily winning the first game 15-0 and then taking a 5-0 lead in game two. The Cats eventually continued to a 7-1 lead before falling flat.

"In the first set, we came out all fired up," Cady said. "Then we let up a little bit. But we can't do that. We have to play hard the entire game."

The Shockers went on an 11-2 run, taking a 12-9 lead, before K-State responded with six unanswered points to take the game, 15-12, and then cruised through the third game, winning 15-3.

So why the turnaround after the Cats blew a comfortable lead, lost momentum, and nearly let Wichita State make the match close?

"Devon talked to us in the locker room after the second game. She kind of got on our butts," junior middle blocker Val Wieck said.

And it seems Ryning didn't exactly pat her teammates on the head and tell them to try harder.

"Fiery would be a good word to describe it," Wieck said.

Whatever the case, when the Cats returned for the third game, they jumped to a 9-1 lead and never looked back while closing out the match.

"I just told them that we had a lack of character, and that's not something we do," Ryning, K-State's captain, said. "We worked hard in practice, and then we came out and didn't execute."

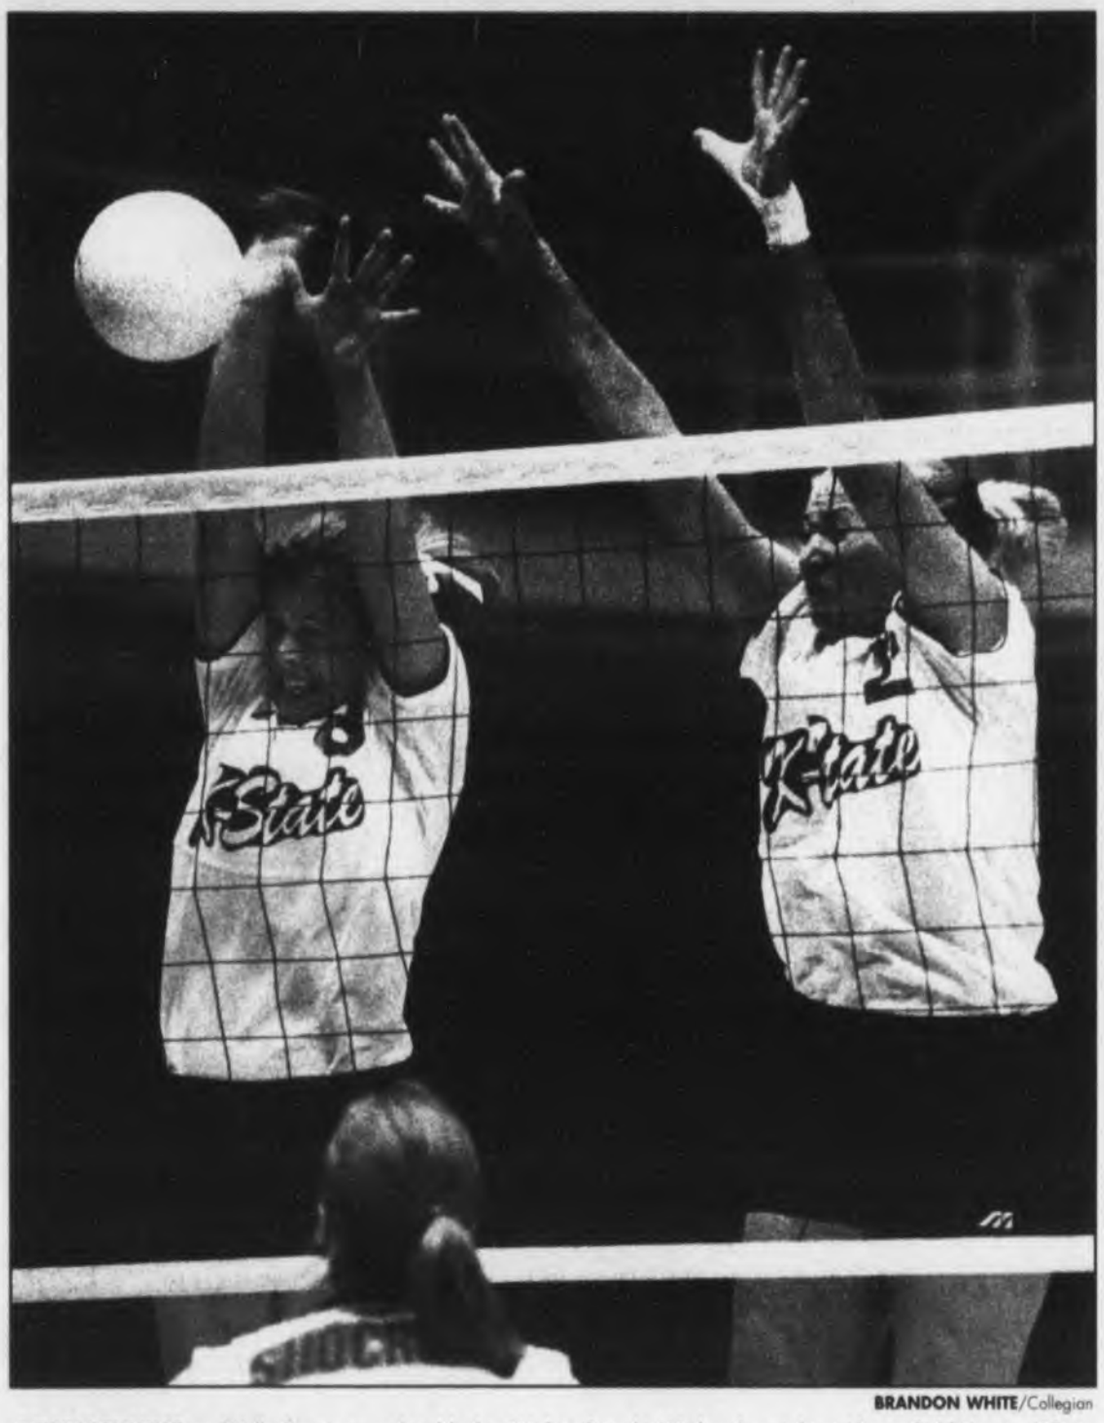
Wieck said part of the problem that caused the Cats' letdown in the second game was K-State's shutout in the first game. When the Shockers finally got on the scoreboard, the Cats were relatively stunned.

"We all got tense. We thought, 'Oh my God, they're scoring,'" Wieck said. "In the second game, we just handed them eight points. We just said, 'Here, Wichita State, have eight points.'"

K-State coach Jim McLaughlin called two timeouts during Wichita State's run, and eventually calmed his players down. He said K-State played steady in games one and three, but was too streaky in game two.

He was unhappy with the Cats' errors. K-State had nine service errors and only seven aces during the match, worse than McLaughlin's ideal ratio of 1:1. McLaughlin has said he wants K-State to cut down on its errors and make opponents earn every point.

However, he's not completely disappointed.



"A win is a win, and it's always great to have a win. I really don't care how we get it," he said. "So I'm as happy as can be."

Junior swing hitter Kim Zschau led K-State with 13 kills and a .478 kill percentage, more than double her season average. Cady had nine kills for the Cats, boosting her team-leading season total to 77.

As a team, K-State dominated Wichita State statistically. The Cats had 43 kills to the Shockers' 20; they had a higher attack percentage, .333 to .044; and they had seven blocks, compared with one for Wichita State.

However, they also had nine service errors, seven more than their counterparts. McLaughlin wants the team to improve those lapses, but he doesn't expect the team to peak until November, when it will make its stretch run through Big 12 Conference play, and, the Cats hope, the NCAA Tournament.

"We're a good team. We're not a great team," McLaughlin said. "We're getting there, but we're not great yet."

Statistic comparison predicts win for K-State

SAM FELSENFELD
staff reporter

Look out, Manhattan, there's going to be a cat fight Saturday night.

Not at one of the bars in Aggieville, or in a dark parking lot somewhere, though.

This one will be out at Wagner Field, where the K-State Wildcats (1-0) will host the Ohio Bobcats (2-0). Although the Bobcats have the better record, K-State is expected to blow out Ohio.

"Certainly, talent-wise, they're better. "If you look at it on paper, we don't match up. There's no question that they're going to be our toughest opponent of the year," Ohio coach Jim Grobe said.

Grobe's Bobcats will bring their wishbone offense for good luck, but will only give thanks if it doesn't break. Ohio runs the triple option, and will try to establish its running game against the Cats.

Through their first two games, the Bobcats have only attempted six passes. With their quarterback, Kareem Wilson, standing at only 5 feet 7 inches, it will be difficult for the Bobcats to succeed if they can't move the ball on the ground.

"We're not a very big team, so the option gives us a chance to take advantage of what the defense gives us," Grobe said. "But the downside is when we make mistakes, if we put the ball on the ground too many times."

Grobe said his Bobcats will probably have problems dealing with K-State's size and speed. The largest player on the Ohio roster is 6-foot-4, 290-pound backup offensive tackle Jonathan Goodwin.

Meanwhile, K-State's starting offensive line averages nearly 6 feet 4 inches, 316 pounds. Left tackle Todd Weiner, at 300 pounds, is the lightest of the group.

Still, if Ohio works its system and remains mistake-free, it could remain competitive. Grobe said that for the Bobcats to do well, they'll have to run their offense and sustain drives, and play K-State tough.

"A lot of the game will boil down to how physical we can be," he said. "They're a very punishing football team, and we're not very big. If we're able at all to hold up physically, we're still going to have to play a perfect football game."

Ohio will likely run the ball outside the tackles on a majority of its plays. K-State showed some vulnerability on such plays last Saturday at Northern Illinois, but that's not enough to ease Grobe's worries.

"When you look at the film, everybody's going to have a time when they do things well," Grobe said. "But when K-State needed to stop Northern Illinois, they did."

K-State limited Northern Illinois to 95 yards rushing on 43 carries in the season-opener, an average of 2.2 yards per carry. However, the Huskies were also a threat to pass, keeping the Wildcat defense honest. But K-State will likely be able to cheat a little this time, which could make it difficult for the Bobcats to avoid putting up similarly disappointing numbers.

"We have good athletes on offense, but Kansas State's defensive athletes are just as good," Ohio linebacker Rahim Slaise said. "They'll be prepared, and they'll be well-coached."

Defensively, Grobe said the Bobcats will likely have problems containing K-State's balanced offense. While some Wildcat fans are nervous that K-State's offense is inexperienced and not good enough, Grobe is nervous that K-State's offense will be too much for Ohio to handle.

"I watch the films and I look at Kansas State, and they have a great offensive line, a great tight end, great wideouts, great running backs, a great quarterback. I can't find a weakness," he said. "They even have great punters and kickers, too."

Ohio's players know the reputation of the No. 20 Wildcats, and are hoping to stay in the game. K-State gained 492 yards against Northern Illinois, impressive considering the attack was relatively balanced — 286 yards rushing and 206 yards passing — and the Wildcats didn't play the starters for most of the second half.

"We know they're talented at a lot of positions, especially quarterback," Slaise said. "We feel we're going to have to stop the run to be successful, but they have a lot of big people up front, so we'll have to play hard the whole game and hope to pull something out in the fourth quarter."

After the game against Ohio, K-State has a bye week before facing Bowling Green at home on Sept. 27 and then traveling to Nebraska on Oct. 4. After watching the Cats' game films, Grobe thinks K-State will be competitive against the Huskers.

"I don't think there's a problem with Kansas State wanting to hang with the big boys, because they are the big boys," he said. "I talk to coaches all across the country, and nobody looks forward to playing Kansas State. There are probably 15 to 20 teams that could play each other every Saturday and beat each other, and they're one of those teams. Kansas State is as good of a football team as there is."

Keeping up with the Jones

Ohio cornerback Tevell Jones threatens Wildcat offense

BRIAN ADAMS
The Ohio Post

The Maryland Terrapins faced fourth-and-16 shortly into the third quarter of last Saturday's game against Ohio. Punting from inside the 10-yard line, Maryland punter Russ Edwards was swarmed by a horde of Bobcats.

The next thing Edwards knew, Bobcat cornerback Tevell Jones sent his punt into the ground instead of the air. Three plays later, the blocked punt led to a game-tying touchdown.

A blocked punt could be a once-in-a-lifetime play for most players, but it's becoming a habit for Jones.

Throughout his career at Ohio, Jones has touched the ball in big plays more than most offensive players. Two weeks ago in Ohio's opener against Kent, he picked up a fumble and ran 66 yards for a touchdown. Last season, Jones returned a blocked punt 30 yards for a touchdown against Hawaii and had an 82-yard interception return for a touchdown against Western Michigan.

If Ohio gets the big play, it seems almost certain Jones is lurking nearby.

"Tevell has always been a big-play guy, but he has a knack to put himself in the right position to make those plays," defensive coordinator Tim DeRuyter said.

Whether it's luck, hard work or both, Jones doesn't like to make a big deal out of his recent success.

"My job is really not to give up the big play," he said. "But a lot of people say that, that every time there's a strange play, I'm around it."

Maybe that's to be expected, because the senior corner from Detroit has been playing football since he was 5. Despite his success so far on the field, Ohio football almost missed out on its big playmaker if it weren't for nature taking its course.

"Basketball was my first love," Jones said. "But then I stopped growing. I still wanted to stay in sports because it was something to get me out of the neighborhood, so my dad got me started on football."

The big-play opportunities attracted Jones to the sport, but not to his position. Originally, he wanted to be a quarterback, even though the passing game didn't interest him. Ironically, it was running the option that made the quarterback look so appealing.

Eventually, Jones worked his way into Ohio's secondary, and his career has been a reflection of the program he's played for. Just like the football team, his play has improved over the years. His freshman year, he redshirted and watched as the Bobcats won only four games. The following year he played in eight games, but Ohio went the entire season without a victory. He sat out the 1995 season while the team went 2-8-1.

It was last year when both he and the program made a change. The Bobcats went 6-6 and were in the Mid-American Conference title hunt late in the season. As for Jones, he recorded four interceptions and 36 tackles — his and the Bobcats' best season since he joined the team.

"Tevell is an exceptional athlete," Coach Jim Grobe said. "He has the athletic ability and keeps working hard, which is why those big plays he makes aren't just a result of good luck."

Jones

The Bobcats don't consider it good luck they started 0-2 again this year. But Jones said the team is more careful this season. This year's philosophy is to take it one game at a time, instead of last year when a quick start led to premature thought of winning a berth to the Las Vegas Bowl.

Ohio might not end its season by winning a bowl game, which would negate any chance of Jones making another big play.

But whatever this season's outcome, the big play won't be the only thing Jones remembers.

"I know what I've been missing because of football — all the parties, the spring breaks," Jones said. "Still, I'll miss all the fun of it."

Transfer linebacker to move into Cats' starting position

SUN DEE MILLS
sports editor

Battles to start at all positions are heating up even more after last week's game at Northern Illinois. This week, middle linebacker community college transfer Jeff Kelly came out on top.

"I came in here with the expectation to start," Kelly said. "I knew I had it in me. If I performed the way I usually performed, I felt that I could start."

After earning first-team community college All-America honors and being a first-team All-Jayhawk conference selection at Garden City Community College, Kelly had good reason to count on a starting nod. Upon arrival at K-State, a challenge presented itself in the name of sophomore linebacker Turelle Williams.

"We sat down and talked about it," Kelly said. "Me and Turelle are real good friends. Whoever comes out to start this week or next week, we just have to accept that and respect their talent. We have to help each other get ready for the game."

Against the Huskies, Kelly played most of the first half and part of the third quarter. He recorded three assisted tackles, and Coach Bill Snyder equated Kelly's performance to Williams'.

Snyder said he thought Kelly played pretty well.

"It was kind of an uneventful evening for him," he said. "Not great, but he and Turelle probably played about the same."

Playing in his first Division I game, Kelly admitted to an attack of the nerves.

"When the game started, I had a little of the jitters," Kelly said. "As we kept on playing, they went away. I didn't have a remarkable game, maybe because the competition was a little better than I'm used to."

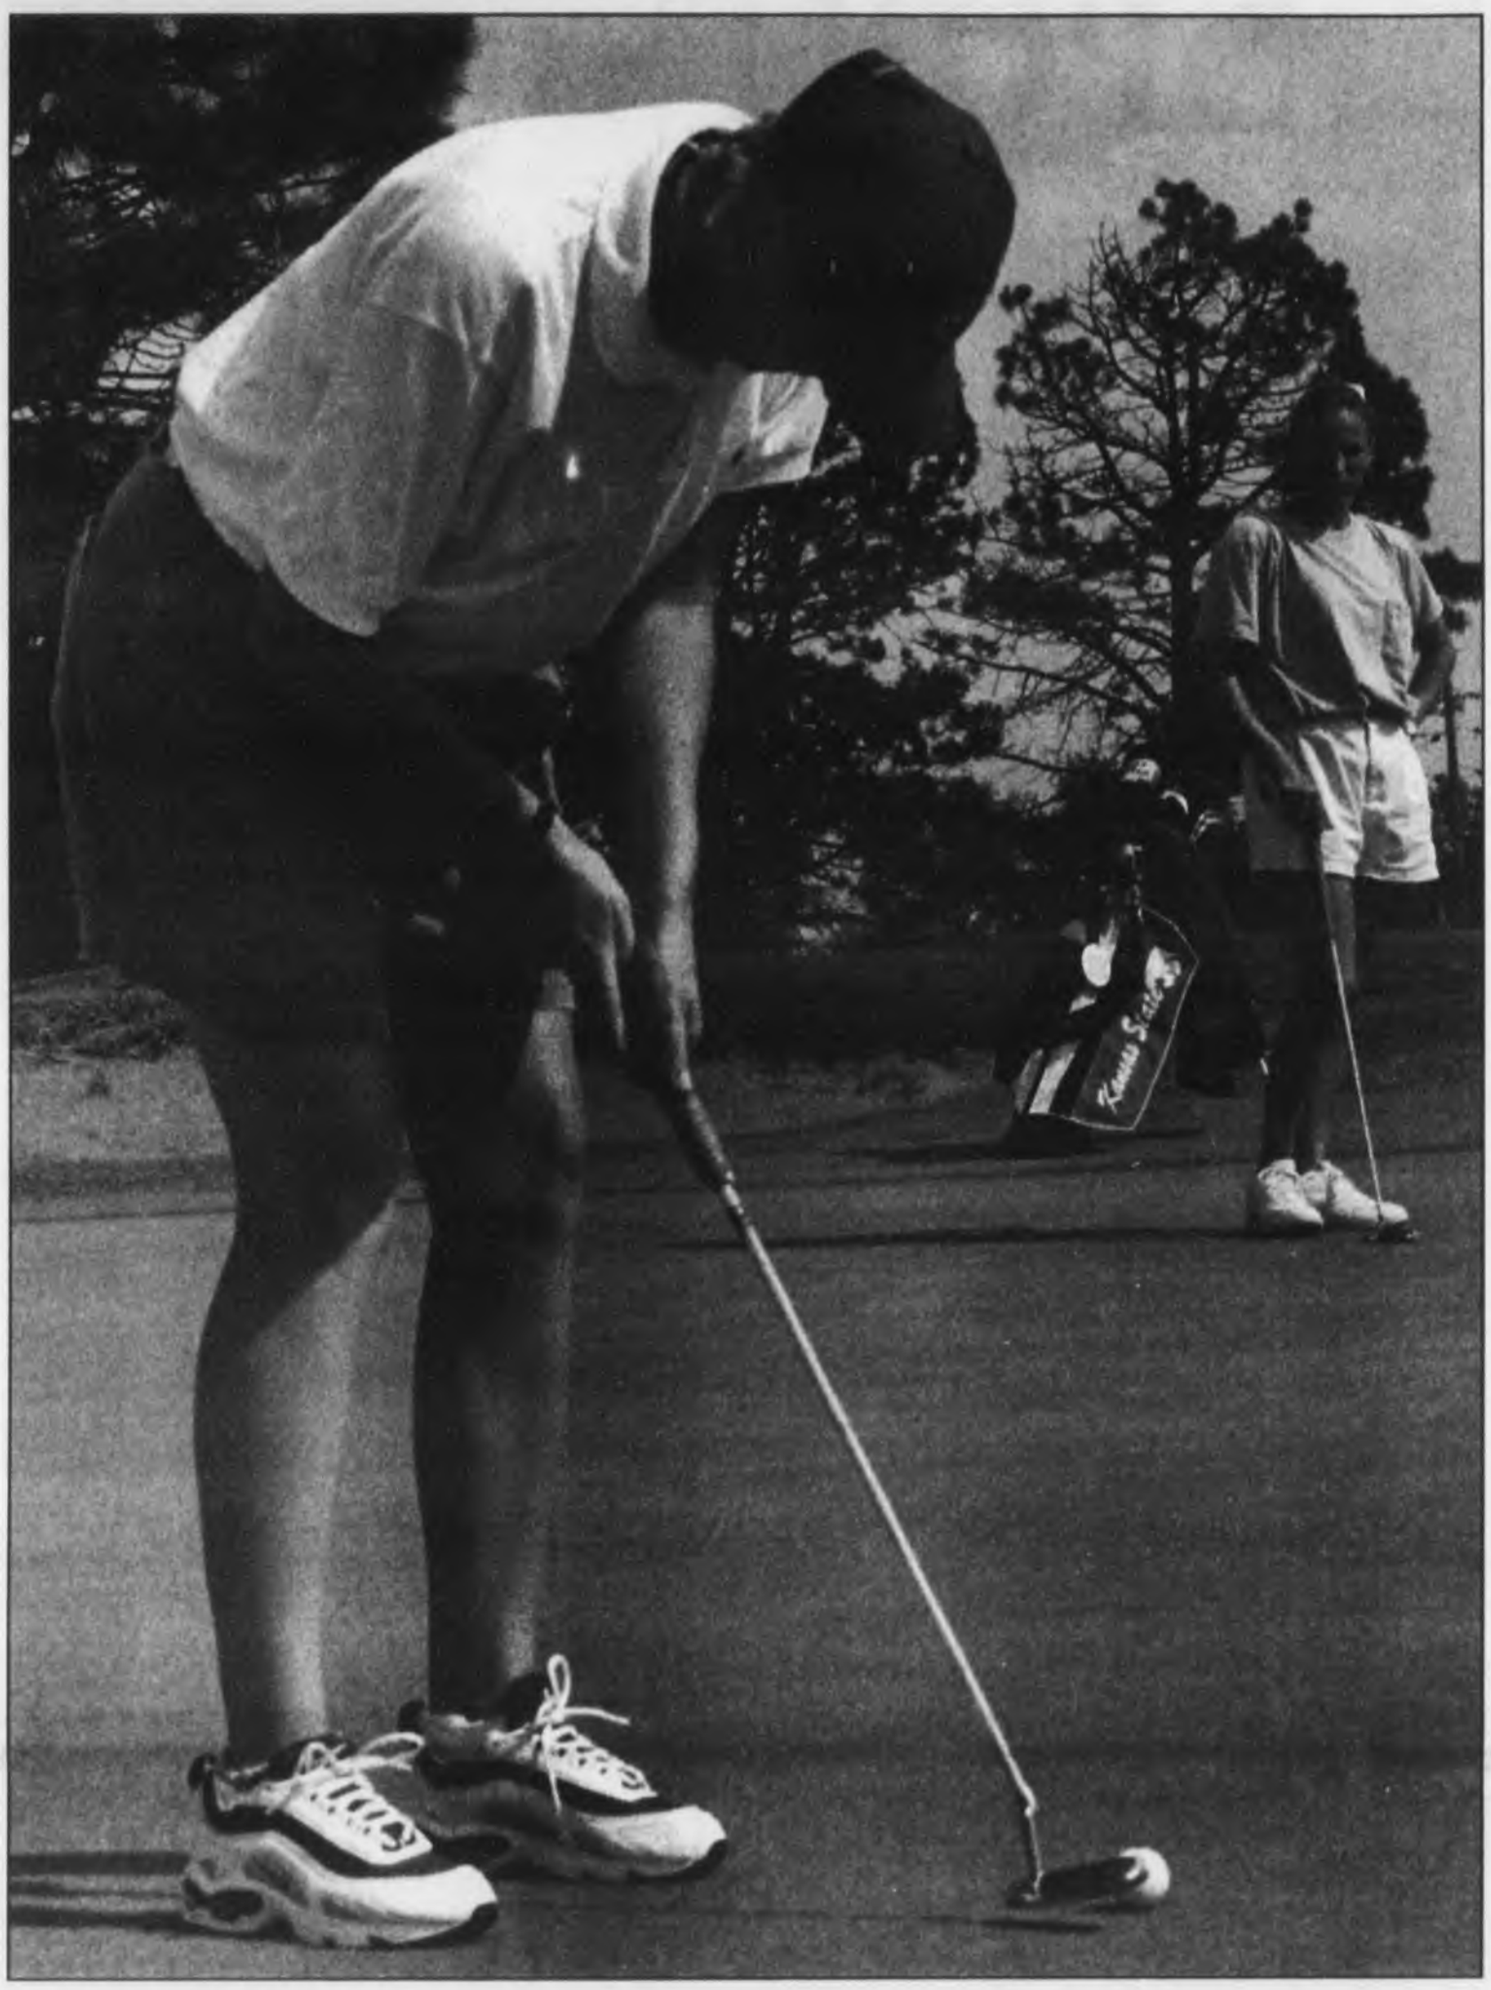
That competition was ranked lower than any team the Cats will see this year, but Kelly said the Huskies still presented problems to the Cat defense.

"They had great receivers and great running backs," Kelly said. "When they got into the game, they did well. We tried to never let them get into the game."

Fellow linebacker Travis Ochs pointed out that the defense was working hard to stay off the field, limiting the big play opportunities.

"We really didn't get a lot of snaps in the game," Ochs said. "He did what he needed to do. It was not a star performance, but he was always where he needed to be."

Working with Ochs and sophomore linebacker Mark Simoneau helped Kelly fit into the scheme of the Cat defense.



"With them, if you're not there, they'll be there," Kelly said. "If I don't know something or if I do something wrong, they pull me aside and tell me what I did, which really helps me out."

Learning the more complicated system and responsibilities has been the most challenging thing for Kelly to do.

"Probably the hardest thing about the change is fitting perfectly where you're supposed to be," Kelly said. "You can play hard and not be correct. I'm trying to be correct all the time."

Being in the correct position will never be as important as it will be against Ohio this Saturday, because the triple-option offense the Bobcats play is something the Cats don't see often.

"From what I've seen of that offense, you have to be fundamentally sound," Kelly said. "One slip-up could mean a touchdown for them. If we go out there and do it all by the book, I think we'll be OK."

Bee sting keeps K-State golfer from winning tournament championship

JOEL WHITE
staff writer

Going into the final round of the Chip-N Club Invitational in Lincoln, Neb., Jane Yi was clinging to the top of the leaderboard.

However, she suffered a bee sting on the second hole of the second round, which proved to be her downfall.

"I was reading a putt on the green, and when I stood up it stung me," Yi said.

Her right forearm was immediately treated by Coach Kristi Knight.

"We tried to find baking soda to put on it," Yi said. "But we couldn't find any, so one of the parents had some tobacco to put on it."

Yi said she wasn't concerned about the sting because she is not allergic to bees.

After shooting a 68 on the par-73 course in the first round and a 77 in the second round, Yi held a two-shot lead despite playing 16 holes with the injury.

The next morning, as Yi was warming up for the third round, her forearm began to swell. By the fourth hole, her right arm was twice the size of her left arm.

"As I swung, it sent a pain through my whole body," Yi said.

For the remainder of the tournament, Yi was forced to ice her arm as she walked down the fairway. She shot an 88 in the third round, finishing in a tie for 13th place.

"I felt bad because I shot well in the first round and OK in the second round," Yi said. "But I played really badly in the third round, and I sort of let the team down."

Knight said Yi's health is still not up to par.

"Her arm is in a sling right now," Knight said. "She's supposed to take it easy for the next three days."

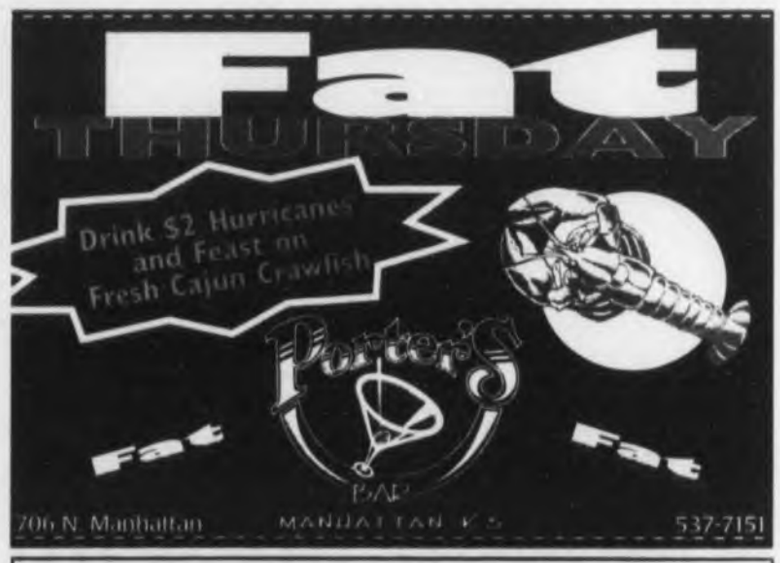
Knight credited Yi's third round troubles to the bee sting along with the pressure of staying in first place.

"A lot of times, being in the lead can put too much pressure on a player," Knight said. "Plus, as the final round went on, she was having discomfort in her arm. I still think she did a good job."

K-State finished third, behind Missouri and Nebraska, in the nine-team field. The Wildcats shot a 50-over-par in the three rounds.

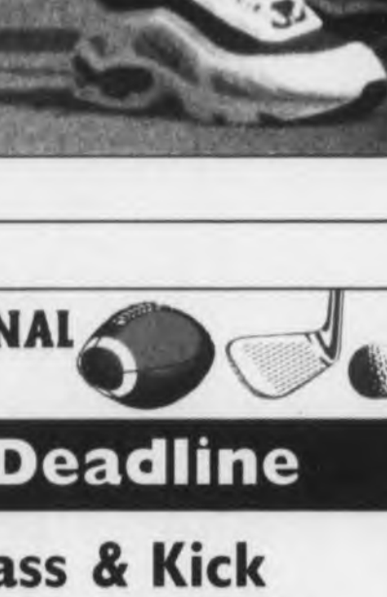
Knight said she was pleased with the team's performance.

"We had a great start," Knight said. "It was a tournament low — a record for K-State women."



Edie Murdoch, a freshman playing in her first collegiate tournament, shot 13-over-par, finishing in a team-high 11th place.

Junior Mitzi Taylor finished in a tie for 23rd place at 21-over-par. On the final nine holes of the tournament, she sunk nine out of ten putts, which was the key to her two-over-par round.



"Mitzi had a breakthrough round," Knight said. "I'm excited about the way she and the others played."

Government orders gas producers to refund millions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, — The federal government is ordering Kansas natural gas producers to refund hundreds of millions of dollars to consumers.

The refunds are for property taxes paid on natural gas produced in Kansas during part of the 1980s.

The tax costs were added to gas bills and thus passed on to consumers, mostly outside Kansas.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission said Wednesday that its long-awaited order amounted to a $500 million refund, but Kansas officials and industry spokesmen said the refund could be double that amount, when interest is added.

State officials, who opposed the refunds, also said it will be virtually impossible to identify consumers who should get the refunds.

Some predicted the money would go largely to pipeline companies as the identity of consumers from a decade ago cannot be established.

"The industry has changed," said former Lt. Gov. Shelby Smith of Wichita, who now represents a gas operator who works for multiple small producers. "I think the pipelines are likely to get a windfall out of this thing."

David Heinemann, chief attorney for the Kansas Corporation Commission, agreed with Smith that pipelines "may claim they didn't pass the tax through, so the refund is owed to them."

Gov. Bill Graves and the state's entire congressional delegation had urged the commission to waive the refunds, contending it was unfair to order them made when the federal government more than 20 years ago approved the pass-through to consumers of property taxes paid on gas properties.

However, the commission Chairman James Hoecker said the commission's hands were tied by federal court rulings.

The refund was ordered for natural gas produced in Kansas and sold in other states at rates that included state and local property taxes.

The order affects Amoco Production Co., Anadarko Petroleum Corp., Mobil Oil Corp., OXY USA Inc., Union Pacific Resources Co. and hundreds of small producers in Kansas.

The commission held property taxes were not eligible for inclusion in the lawful price for gas under the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1979.

The Federal Power Commission, the predecessor agency to the Federal Engergy Regulatory Commission, held in 1973 that Kansas' property taxes were the same as severance taxes, which were eligible for the pass-through to consumers.

Wednesday's draft order, which becomes final after a period for accepting motions to reconsider or rehear the case, requires the producers to begin making the refunds within 180 days.

There are two conditions: They can make them over a five-year period, and the commission will consider waiving the refund requirement in hardship cases, on a case-by-case basis.

Hardships include producers now out of business, or operating on such a small margin that making the refund would put them out of business.

The refunds must be made to pipelines on gas produced between Oct. 4, 1983, and June 28, 1988 — a 4 1/2-year period.

Kansas sought to allow the pass-through of property taxes in the 1970s because the state had no mineral severance tax.

Producers argued that the property taxes on oil and gas were, in effect, severance taxes that could be passed through to consumers on gas sold to interstate pipelines.

without the football stars. The rally won't be without stars, however. A fireworks show is scheduled to begin at 8:45 p.m.

Colburn said Purple Power Play on Poyntz serves two purposes. It gets fans pumped for the Saturday game — and it brings business downtown.

"The concept is to be a real positive public relations event for downtown, to show the community and K-State students that downtown is a fun place to be," he said.

Whatever its purpose, the festival is growing. In the late '80s, attendance ranged from 50 to 100 fans, Colburn said. Now, it's huge, thanks to the success of K-State football.

"That, more than anything else, has made the event take off. We add more people, then we add more sponsors and can put more money into it. That's been a major factor in terms of expanding crowds and expanding the event," Colburn said.

Cindy Fox, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics representative on the Power Play board, said growth of the football program is positive for everyone involved.

"Whenever the team is successful, all of the aspects of the football program grow. Everyone wants to be a part of it. They want ... to be a part of something fun," Fox said.

The crowds are growing, and this year, organizers hope to set record highs in attendance and fun, she said.

"It's growing and getting bigger and better every year," Applegate said.

his files," Conrow said.

Legal support meant a court order or a signed release by the account holder. Townsend said officers presented him with a signed release, contradicting Mellgren's statement that the suspect hasn't been questioned.

The files, Townsend said, were obviously illegal.

"We gave copies of all of the files to Sergeant (Troy) Lane (K-State Police) and he printed them out. They were all JPEG (graphic format) files, and the names on them were pretty incriminating," he said.

When asked about the content of the files, Townsend said he hadn't seen all of the files, but said Lane had. Lane said any description of them wouldn't be fit to print.

"Suffice it to say that it's very explic it," he said.

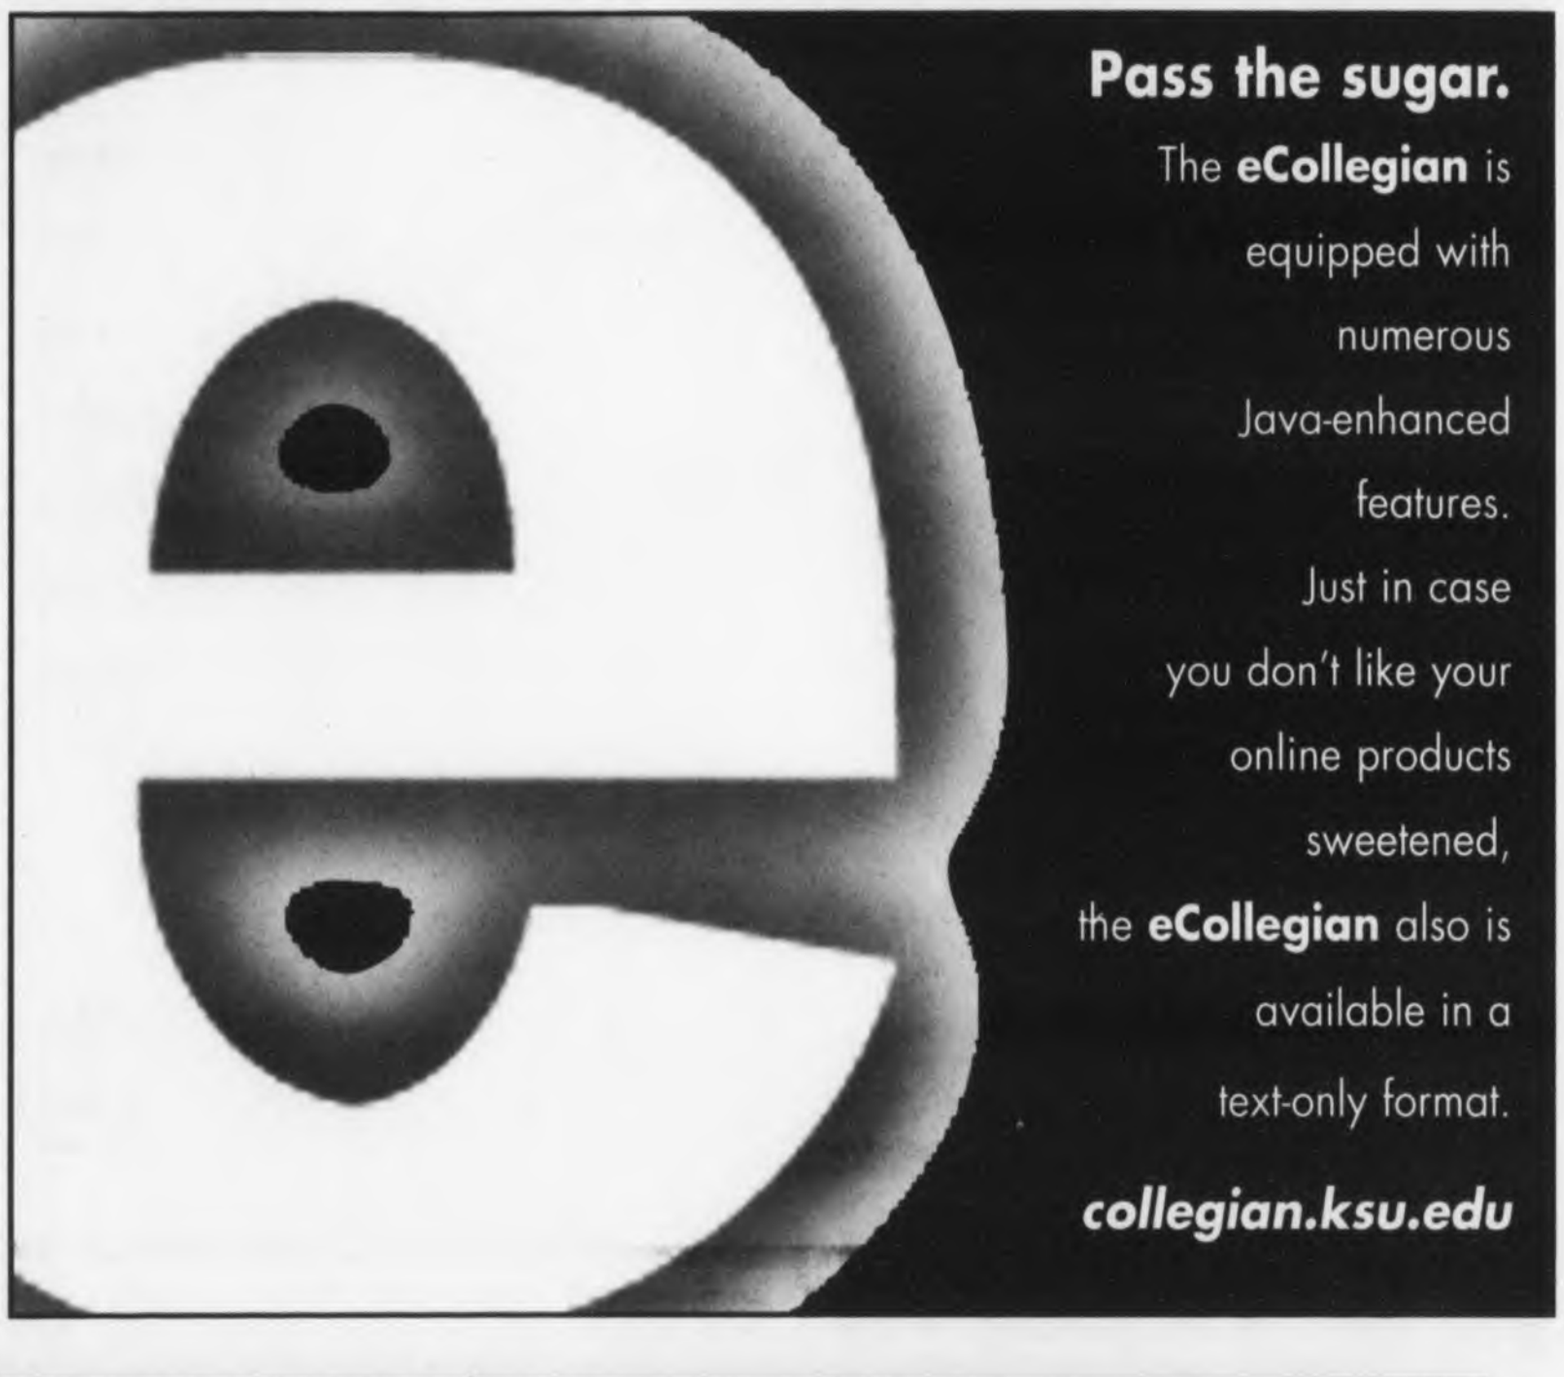
Officials would not release any other information about the investigation.

The suspect's UNIX ID has been permanently disabled, Conrow said.

For Conrow and his staff, problems like this are hard to avoid due to privacy regulations, he said.

"We try to do what we can to control abuse. We don't invade privacy, so we're usually not aware of abuse unless it's reported. When it is reported, we do what we can to track it down and deal with it," he said.

Conrow said abuse is defined in CNS policy guidelines.



"There's a list at the beginning which says that due to legislation and regulations, there are certain things that can't be done," he said. "Child pornography is on that list."

Network users can report suspected abuse by completing a form on the CNS Internet home page, Conrow said.

Rachel Stigge, senior in music theater, said she's seen questionable activity in the computer labs before. It's hard to hide, though, she said.

"I've seen people pulling pornography and everything up on the Web ... anyone can walk by and see what you are doing," she said.

Local band makes move to Austin to pursue musical dreams

Change and progress is necessary for a band to withstand time and gain success.

Manhattan's Back Porch Mary is making a big change when they move to Austin, Texas at the end of the month to pursue their musical career in a more fruitful environment.

Their final Manhattan show before they move is tonight at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

Guitarist and vocalist Mike Krug said the band will be moving to Austin because the music scene is very good for bands like theirs.

"There's 170 venues with live music six nights a week. It's a lot better than the two venues here only two nights a week. It was a necessary move," he said.

Krug, along with drummer and lead vocalist Jeremie Krehbiel and bassist Chris Henrie, are moving to Austin, as opposed to Los Angeles or New York, because of its size and vibe.

"Austin's not huge. There's only like 500,000 people there, but there's still a lot of places to play. Also, there's kind of a Midwest philosophy that attracted us to it," he said.

Back Porch Mary released their debut compact disc on New York-based Gemini 21 Records last spring. Krug said the response has been good with the CD, but the move to Texas will only help.

"It's done really well. A few radio stations are playing it. There's been some interest in the press, but it will be slow because it's independent and we're brand new. It's going to take some time. Texas will help a lot because there's more people and more places," he said.

Back Porch Mary hopes to gain a lot from basing themselves in Austin.

They hope to play in front of more people and different people in Austin, Henrie said.

"We want to accomplish what we accomplished here — play whenever and wherever we want and draw people in. We hope to do that there. It's too comfortable here. We want to play every club and open for bands too," Krug said.

Manhattan's Back Porch Mary fans don't need to worry about the band moving away and never coming back.

"We'll still tour through here and make it a point to play here. There's no reason to be sad. We'll be back and there'll be more nightmares. I promise," Krug said.

"We're not leaving because we don't like it. We love Manhattan. We're leaving because it seems like the best thing for the band right now," Henrie added.

Back Porch Mary plans on embarking on a tour throughout the Midwest and Southwest called the "Drink The Bar Dry Tour" starting in late October.

Local blues band The Gobofiddlers will open tonight's show and play about a 45-minute set, Krug said.

"We're going to play for 2-1/2 hours or two hours and 45 minutes solid. We're going to play some new songs and old songs. Just fast drinking music," he said.

To contribute to the fast drinking vibe, Whirligig, a local music magazine, has purchased 30 shots of Jack Daniel's whisky to pass out to the crowd during Back Porch Mary's set.

FOCUS: MANTHATTAN CENTER FOR THE ARTS

Art narratives explore bonds of womenhood

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
staff writer

"Needles and Threads," a show billing itself as "celebrating womanhood and the influence women have had on the lives of other women," continues the Manhattan Center for the Arts' focus on women artists.

In the past few years, the center has featured group shows of women artists and quilt shows. "Needles and Threads" isn't considered an art show by its creators, but an interpretation.

Art Review

Four visual artists from Nebraska and one poet from Hays, Kan. interviewed people they considered to be strong Nebraskan women. Then they interpreted their stories through their respective media. The artists include Judy Greff of Ashland, Sammy Lynn of Hastings, Patsy Smith of North Platte, and Amy Sadle of Syracuse. The poet, Marilyn Coffey, teaches at Fort Hays State University.

"The theme is the needles — the painful experiences, and the threads — the bonds between women," Sadle said.

Viewers are asked not necessarily to approach the show as a collection of art, but as stories. It's not quite narrative art in that although each work could stand on its own quite well, the exhibition's point of view is strengthened when all is taken as one.

Take the woman named Lola who is 86 years old and still running a large ranch.

Smith's "86 and Unfinished Ranch Work," mixed media, is a large, colorful painting showing Lola's determination and spirit as she jumps into the back of a pickup truck, while Lynn's batik "The Soft Side of Lola" portrays the woman among flowers illustrating her contrasting delicacy.

Compare Lola with the dramatic vivaciousness of Donna, who in Lynn's batik spreads her colorful, patterned wings and becomes an immediate presence.

The cohesive show proves fascinating in depicting the women's lives — their exuberance and energy. Care was given to accurately reflect their lives: Each of the interpreted women critiqued the work before it made it in the show. The artists' interpretations don't always flatter, but one gets a sense they don't lie, either.

Stern refuses to apologize to French-speaking listeners

TORONTO — Howard Stern to Canada: Lighten up, eh.

The radio host refused to apologize Wednesday for insulting French-speaking Quebeckers on his show, saying: "I can't imagine anybody would take what I say seriously."

Stern made his Canadian debut last week when his New York-based program was broadcast in Montreal and Toronto. He called Francophones "peckerheads and scumbags" and charged that the French collaborated with the Nazis during World War II.

The broadcast prompted the Quebec government to suggest Stern was violating a law against stirring up ethnic hatred.

At a news conference, Stern said: "The reason you guys have put me on the front page of your newspapers is because I'm the freshest, wildest radio host in the world. You've now been introduced to good radio."

Cuomo to host free weekly national talk radio show

ALBANY, N.Y. — Mario Cuomo is going back on the air with his serious brand of talk radio.

The former governor is trying a weekly half-hour show that will be offered free to public radio stations and commercial outlets nationwide.

After losing for re-election in 1994, Cuomo tried his hand at national talk radio. His syndicated show, which ran on weekends in 1995 and 1996, aired on about 50 stations at its peak but never drew a large audience.

The new Sunday evening show begins on Sept. 21.

Cuomo said a public radio audience might be more receptive than commercial outlets to his brand of talk radio. He prefers generally serious and in-depth discussions.

To do commercial talk radio, "you have to be entertaining. Entertaining means bing-bang, bing-bang," Cuomo explained Wednesday. "What you have to do is what Rush Limbaugh does."

Postage stamps feature Metropolitan Opera stars

NEW YORK — Soprano Rosa Ponselle was a great eater as well as a great singer, Luciano Pavarotti recalled Wednesday as postage stamps picturing four Metropolitan Opera stars of the past were unveiled.

In 1974, Pavarotti said, he visited an 80-year-old Miss Ponselle in Baltimore.

"She gave me an appointment in the afternoon. For her the morning didn't exist," the tenor recalled. "She came out of her house dressed like a beautiful diva. She said, 'Today my pianissimo will not be so great.'"

They talked and sang and ate for hours, he said.

"She was a great eater. Wow. We were eating the same precise things. Staying even with me is not easy," the heroically proportioned Pavarotti said.

Miss Ponselle, soprano Lily Pons, tenor Richard Tucker and baritone Lawrence Tibbett are pictured on the 32-cent stamps, unveiled at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Soap opera star sentenced prison for soliciting murder

STAUNTON, Va. — A former soap opera actress got a year in prison for trying to have her husband killed for $20,000.

Catherine Ann Christianson, 40, pleaded guilty in April to soliciting murder. She was sentenced on Tuesday.

Christianson, who had a recurring role as a character named Jane in "One Life to Live" in 1991, was arrested in 1996.

Police videotaped a conversation between her and a police informant in which she offered the man $20,000 to kill her husband, Charles R. Chittum.

Colbert Hills to provide entomology laboratory

JOHN HENDERSON
senior taff writer

In addition to the study of soil quality and the welfare of animals in a prairie environment, the Colbert Hills golf course project includes a civil engineer studying the quality of the water and an entomologist studying the insects.

Steve Starrett, assistant professor in civil engineering, said Colbert Hills is the first golf course, to his knowledge, to be studied by scientists from such a diverse selection of disciplines even before the ground is broken.

Starrett's team is collecting both surface and ground water samples in the area immediately northwest of Manhattan city limits. The 1,040-acre area is considered native rangeland, largely unaffected by humans.

"We'll compare the native condition (to the condition during construction) of the course, then during usage of the course," he said. "So we're interested in two different time frames."

The land surrounds a sizable stretch of Little Kitten Creek and two natural ponds. At least two other ponds are being considered for construction, Starrett said.

To keep a course green, the turf managers must water it and apply chemicals, which include pesticides. Bob Bauernfeind, horticulture entomologist for the K-State Research and Extension Service and a professor in entomology, is studying the chafer beetle, whose larvae eat the roots of grasses and leave brown patches.

Chafers are scarabs, cousins to May and June beetles, Bauernfeind said. Their larvae are known as white grubs, and are the most common turf parasite known to Kansas soil.

"They look alike, but when you see them side by side, they're distinctly different," he said.

May and June beetles, Bauernfeind said, typically develop very slowly over a period of three years and, since they aren't hydrated, can lay their eggs anywhere.

Chafers, on the other hand, develop quickly over the course of only a year and must be laid on damp ground to stay hydrated. It is for this reason that chafers are associated with high-maintenance turf which must be watered often to stay green, Bauernfeind said.

Those beetles will appear in late June, peak the second week in July and lay eggs that will develop quickly into larvae.

"Toward the end of September and the beginning of October, we see the damage," he said.

Bauernfeind said he had planned to start studying the beetles in the hills northwest of Manhattan shortly before the plans were announced to the public. Colbert Hills just happened to be the area he was studying.

He uses light traps, some of which are custom made and cost $500-$600, but some are merely converted bug-zappers. Beetles are attracted to the light and drop into a bucket below, which Bauernfeind collects the next morning, and sorts out the chafers.

"What I've done with the bug-zapper is I've disconnected the zap," he said, "because I don't want fried critters, I want things that are intact. They work very well, and only cost $40."

Studying the populations of the chafers on the Colbert Hills land will help the turf managers learn when, how and if to use insecticides to maintain the course, he said.

Those insecticides pose a threat to bird and fish populations and could be harmful to humans. Bauernfeind's aim is to record the levels of pesticide and nutrient levels before the course is built for practical comparison later.

Automated samplers have been set up in the area for a year, he said, collecting water that flows through Little Kitten Creek, its tributaries and beds, which fill up after a rain.

Starrett and his team have also converted some old windmills left on the land to well monitors that record the quality of ground water.

The living laboratory of the Colbert Hills project will allow the scientists to check the accuracy of their methods, Starrett said, which can be applied to future projects including golf courses and residential areas.

"This is not just a regional study," he said. "What we find out, we'll be able to apply to the entire turf grass industry."

The golf industry in particular has grown tremendously, Starrett said. Approximately 15,000 courses are now in existence, and 400 are created each year — which means 80,000 acres a year are being converted to golf courses.

Golf courses represent three percent of all grassland conversion, Starrett said.

"Most of that other 97 percent is residential development," he said.

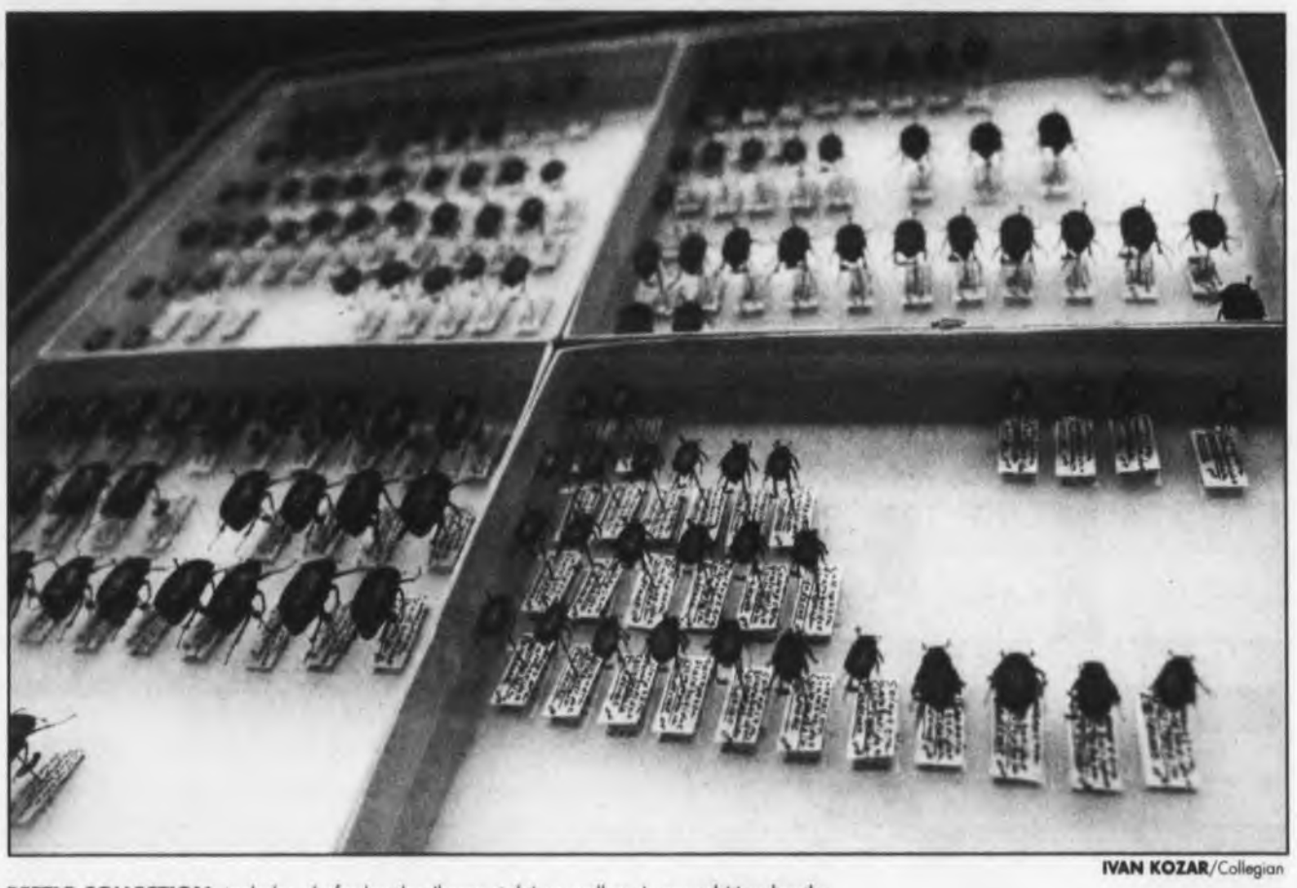
Bauernfeind said he would've done the research anyway, because he already has light traps all around Kansas, all of which, besides the Colbert Hills trap, are on developed lands.

What he found after a year of trapping, he said, is that the populations of beetles in what will be Colbert Hills are no different from those in the city limits of Manhattan.

"I don't think the insects that I'll be looking at are going to be affected much," he said. "Insects are very adaptable. I would say they're not as sensitive to habitat changes as birds would be."

Both Bauernfeind and Starrett said they appreciate the opportunity the course brings for study.

"It'll improve all of our research if we can make statements about the environmental quality that involve the different fields," Starrett said.



Bauernfeind said he agrees, which is why he contacted the teams already at work on the site instead of just working alone.

"It was just kind of a set of circumstances that came about," he said. "There's the golf course on one hand, and here I am on the other hand, so I said, 'Let's hold hands.'"

ROBERT BAUERN-FEIND, horticulture entomology specialist with K-State Research and Extension Service, studies various types of insects for K-State.

Summers can mean working full-time at a home, learning from an internship or hanging out by the pool all day. A few K-Staters can brag that their summer job changed the community where they lived and worked.

Eighteen K-State students can make that claim. Their involvement in the Community Service Program gave them the opportunity to put their education to use helping more than five Kansas communities.

The eight-week summer program sends small groups of three to seven students into communities to help with issues like tourism, downtown renovation and recycling. Towns from around Kansas submit proposals to the program and are then selected based on various criteria.

"The projects have to have an element of community involvement as well as community service," Kim Ebben, Kansas team coordinator, said.

Students must also submit an application and go through an interview process to be chosen to participate.

Team members receive $2,000 for the summer, plus a $500 scholarship in the fall. They also receive four credit hours from the three hour spring preparation course and one hour from the fall reflection course. Participants live with host families in the community to give them a better feel and understanding of the community.

"You really feel like a part of the community," Ebben said.

Students chose to apply for the program for a variety of reasons.

Naga Ganapathy, a graduate student in architecture from India, chose to apply because of his interest in service and to get a better understanding of American culture and lifestyles.

"I am interested in community service and in learning more about this culture because I am new in it," Ganapathy said.

The program also allows for students to get a taste of a real world experience.

"They want to use the skills they're learning in the classroom and apply them to community service," Ebben said.

Many times the program tries to match students with projects that apply to their major. Lori Slane, junior in biology and environmental science, worked on a seven-county recycling and composting project. The group was centered in Harper and helped create tool kits and informational packets on composting and recycling. The group also gave demonstrations and helped assess the communities' recycling activities.

"We also created a seven-county recycling and refuse directory. You really learn how to work in a team," Slane said.

Each team has a faculty adviser to help with the spring preparation class, the fall reflection course and any needs the students have during the summer.

Robert Burns, assistant professor of landscape architecture and regional and community planning, has been an advisor for the program since 1990.

The program provides students with an experience in "responsible citizenship" as well as let them put classroom concepts to real use, Burns said. The program offers communitywide benefits as well as helps students understand what being a good citizen is, Burns said.

Other teams went to Clay Center, to develop a community comprehensive plan; Alta Vista, to work on tourism and promotion; and Clyde, to develop a technology and information resource plan.

The Community Service Program also sends summer teams to foreign countries to provide similar services.

This fall the summer teams will be returning to their host communities to see the results and continuations of their work.

"It was a really awesome experience. You learn a lot about yourself and how to deal with people," Slane said.

HALO sets goals for '97

LANDON TRAWNY

The Hispanic American Leadership Organization set goals for the coming year at a meeting Tuesday night.

HALO is a support group for Hispanic and Latino students at K-State, although it is open to all students who want to learn about Hispanic culture.

Leo Prieto, HALO president and junior in pre-medicine, said he believes that one of the club goals would benefit all of Manhattan.

HALO wants to get the Spanish channel, Univision, carried locally by TCI of Kansas.

"It seems like every city in Kansas has Univision except Manhattan," he said. "It would be nice to have for anyone that speaks Spanish as well as for the international students."

October is Hispanic Heritage Month, making it the most expensive for HALO. Students in the group thought of activities and fund-raising ideas for October.

All activities for the month are open to anyone and include a free screening of "Selena" on Oct. 21 at Forum Hall. There will also be a Latin American Cultural Night and the Gran Baile dance. The dance will be Oct. 25 and will include a live band and disc jockey.

HALO is also planning a trip to Chicago for the United States Hispanic Leadership Conference.

Student Body Vice President Jennafer Neufeld said she will assist in getting funds from Student Senate to help pay for HALO activities on campus.

Carlos Contreras, sophomore in business and arts, said he wants all students to know that they are welcome to attend the meetings and events.

"The organization is open to anyone and welcomes everyone," he said.

Prieto said HALO offers a family atmosphere for college students.

"HALO acts as a family away from home," he said.

FIREFIGHTERS, POLICE officers and other rescue teams from Riley County and Fort Riley assist mock injury victims Wednesday afternoon during a drill at the Manhattan Airport. The drill simulated a plane crash, which also included a three-car collision on the westbound lane of Fort Riley Boulevard.

Drill simulates emergency crisis

NATE JENKINS
staff writer

Firetrucks, ambulances and people in uniforms swarmed around the Manhattan Airport on Wednesday.

The airport director told reporters a plane had crashed.

But it wasn't a real emergency. Nobody even got hurt.

Still, rural volunteer firefighters, the Riley County Police Department and some motivated EMT students were at the airport early Wednesday afternoon.

An impromptu drill was conducted by the emergency, law enforcement and airport divisions to practice effective coordination among all the services in case of a large-scale disaster.

The scenario was designed to be as realistic as possible and nothing was left to chance — right down to the grieving family members awaiting word from officials in the airport lobby about the status of their injured relatives.

Ken Black, airport director, even had a statement prepared for inquisitive members of the media.

"Initial reports are that 12 people were aboard the plane that crashed," he said.

"We don't know the status of those people and all further questions should be directed to the Federal Aviation Commission."

Black would not speculate on the status of the passengers.

The drill also included simulated victims of a car crash strewn across the road, and communication between officials about which direction a hazardous waste cloud was moving.

The drill served as a brush-up for emergency teams who rarely work together but still need to maintain cohesion in case a large-scale disaster would occur.

Senate to vote on 4 new bills to help transition to new SGA

AT A GLANCE

AT A GLANCE
Student Senate votes on four bills tonight which would help smooth the transition from one SGA administration to another.

NATE JENKINS
staff writer

Making a smoother transition from the old Student Governing Association leadership to its newly elected members is the intent of four bills that Student Senate will vote on tonight.

The bills outline changes that the authors of the bills hope will clear up some unnecessary confusion. This was prompted in part by miscommunication that occurred between Student Publications Inc., Student Senate and the Privilege Fee Committee last spring about the number of years Student Publications would receive funding for new equipment.

If passed, the bill that would cause the most changes to SGA guidelines would require all contractual agreements to be signed and finalized by officers during the year it originated. The bill would also require the student body president's approval before it takes effect.

By requiring student senators and the president to take care of all contractual agreements by the time their term is up, the incoming Student Senate would have a clean slate to work on.

That was not the case last year when confusion arose about whether Student Publications should receive a two- or four-year loan.

Patrick Carney, 1996-97 Board of Student Publications chairman, said the proposal was for four years. Some student senators believed the loan period was for two years and others believed it was four. The loan was eventually approved for two. Now the board must consider if they want to try to amend the loan to include another two years of funding.

Todd Simon, chairman of the board and director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism, said it isn't something they have discussed yet.

"The board hasn't discussed it formally, but Ron (Johnson, director of Student Publications) might want us to take it up with them this fall," Simon said.

Jennyfer Owensby, an accounting specialist with the Office of Student Activities and Services and one of the authors of the bills, said the situation last year with Student Publications was one, but not the only, reason for writing the bills.

"That little fiasco was part of the reason," she said.

Owensby said they also wanted to make Student Senate more like the U.S. Senate, where there is a longer transition period between the time new senators are elected and the time they actually take office. This allows more time for new senators to become acquainted with day-to-day operations and duties.

If approved, one of the bills would designate the time between the conclusion of the spring SGA Elections and two weeks before spring finals week as a training period for incoming officers. The new student government would elect officers and make all necessary appointments, while the outgoing officers of SGA would continue to function as representatives of the student body.

During that time, outgoing officers would be in charge of training newly elected and appointed SGA officers. The director of the Office of Student Activities and Services would be responsible for directing the leadership training outlined in the bill.

"We had no way of training new staff before," said Owensby, "but this could help."

Fair Credit Reporting Act creates system for accurate credit reports

▶ CONSUMERS TO GAIN MORE privacy with new federal credit act.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The often frustrating task of correcting an inaccurate credit report will soon be a bit easier, thanks to changes in the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

The changes, effective Oct. 1, won't transform the process into a walk in the park. But they will give consumers more ammunition in forcing the credit reporting companies, and the creditors who report to them, to get their information right.

"Mistakes in credit reports were the leading consumer problem in the early 1990s," said Ed Mierzwinski of the United States Public Interest Research Group. "Thirty-three percent of all credit reports, in our view, contained then — could still contain now — serious errors."

Credit reporting companies already had made many of these changes, in some cases after states or the Federal Trade Commission accused them of violating the law.

Of the troika of big reporting companies, Experian and Equifax Credit Information Services are operating under consent decrees with the Federal Trade Commission. The third, Trans Union Corp., is still negotiating.

Among the changes:

- Current or potential employers have to tell employees on job applications if they will use a credit report in deciding whether to hire or promote. They must give applicants the chance to discuss any problems in their report before acting on it.
- Consumers have the right to opt out of receiving pre-approved credit offers in the mail.
- Nationwide credit reporting companies must provide a toll-free number for consumer complaints and inquiries. They must complete an investigation of disputed items in a consumer's file within 30 days. Within those 30 days, they have five business days to notify the source of the information that is under dispute, and five business days to remove or correct inaccurate information.
- Companies that report inaccurate information will be liable. The amendments allow consumers to sue under the Fair Credit Reporting Act against lenders that knowingly allow false information to remain in a file. Right now, state law makes them liable only in California and Massachusetts.

"The consumer has the right under the law to go to a credit grantor and say, 'Hey, that's wrong, and change it,'" said Norman Magnuson, director of public affairs for the Associated Credit Bureaus, Inc., a trade group.

- The amendments limit access to credit files to people who have a legitimate reason to see them, such as a creditor, insurer, employer, landlord or other business that extends credit.
- Credit reporting companies can charge no more than $8 for a credit report, except in the six states that require them to offer one free report per year to each applicant. The Big Three companies each charge $8, or $16 for a joint report. Experian used to offer free reports but stopped last spring.
- Some people can get a free report anyway, including those who have been denied credit, fraud victims, welfare recipients, or unemployed people looking for a job.

The amendments also crack down on so-called credit repair organizations, which advertise that, for a fee, they will mediate with a credit reporting company to correct inaccurate reports or even erase accurate but damaging information.

"Credit doctors promise that they can remove accurate but negative information from your credit report," Mierzwkinski said, "and that's an absolute lie."

The new rules require such companies to sign a contract with consumers that can be rescinded within three days. They aren't allowed to instruct consumers to make false statements or to alter a person's identity. They may not request payment until all services are rendered, and they can't make false claims to consumers about what they can do.

Mierzwinski, whose organization helped fight for the changes, said the new law doesn't go far enough to protect consumers' privacy. He wants to require the use of a personal identification number to gain access to credit files.

But he still called the amendments a victory for consumers that give them greater certainty that negative information that is false will be removed from their report.

UFM offers scuba diving classes, other swim classes in Natatorium

Scuba diving classes at UFM are a chance to try something different, UFM education coordinator Charlene Brownson said.

"The class is something brand new to us. About 10 people will be enrolled in a class," Brownson said. "It's not often people get a chance to do this kind of thing."

Scuba diving, which is in the Natatorium, is offered for college credit this semester, even though it didn't appear in the fall line schedule. The class was created too late to be put in the line schedule, but anyone can still sign up for it.

Scuba diving is not the only swimming class scheduled at the Natatorium. Kayaking, hydroaerobics and family swim nights are also popular classes.

Kate Jamieson, junior in elementary education, said she would definitely recommend the swimming classes.

"I had a lot of fun, and I learned something at the same time. Swimming turns into a pretty good workout," Jamieson said.

Brownson also said people can get a great workout in other classes that are offered.

"I've been in hydroaerobics for 13 years now. It's a great workout because you are near weightlessness," Brownson said. "Doctors recommend it, and it relieves stress."

Jamieson said because the Natatorium is the only pool open in the winter, students should take advantage of it.

"There is hardly a healthier way to exercise," she said.

Cement islands designed to reduce speed, accidents

ASHLEY YOULE
staff reporter

The city of Manhattan has taken the driver's seat in trying to solve the problem of speeding and automobile accidents. It plans to do this by installing traffic calmers at Manhattan's busiest intersections.

A traffic calmer is a large, cement island placed in the middle of an intersection. This circular island forces drivers to slow down and yield to traffic coming in all directions.

In October 1996 a proposal was made to install traffic calmers at locations with heavy traffic. The City Commission agreed and the proposal was accepted in February.

The idea of installing these traffic calmers first came about when speed complications were noticed at Denison and Fairchild avenues.

"We first thought about replacing the entire intersection," Jack Messer, city engineer, said. "But that would have been expensive. The traffic calmers are cheaper, and they do the job."

Before installing the first island at Denison and Fairchild, Messer went out and visited people in the neighborhood who would be affected by the change.

"The neighborhood agreed traffic is a problem at that intersection, so we went ahead and installed it," he said.

The first island was installed in June. Since then, two more traffic calmers have been installed, one at Eighth and Moro streets, the other, still under construction, at 12th and Vattier streets.

"We plan on installing three to four more within the next year," Messer said.

"Hopefully within the next five years we will build at least 20 more."

These obstacle islands might be ideal for slowing traffic, but some drivers see them as a hassle.

"The traffic calmers serve their purpose by slowing people down, but at the same time it's an inconvenience," Bettine Rezac, senior in industrial engineering, said.

Drivers wanting to go straight have to curve to the right around the islands, thus slowing them down. If drivers want to go left, they also have to go all the way around the island yielding to oncoming traffic.

"I think they are a good idea, but they seem dangerous," Carol Woodard, a Manhattan resident, said.

"You have to be careful when approaching the intersection, and it's hard to see the traffic in all directions," she said.

Messer is optimistic about the success of the islands, and he hopes Manhattan benefits from them.

"Other places have reported a significant reduction in accidents with the traffic calmers," Messer said.

"We're convinced they will have the same effect here."

Fraud triples on Internet; Consumer League unveils Fraud Watch Web page site

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The National Consumers League, saying its Internet fraud reports tripled in the past year, unveiled new World Wide Web pages to arm consumers against cybercrooks and warned them of the 10 most-used scams.

Susan Grant, the league's Internet Fraud Watch director, said Wednesday that nearly 100 scam complaints a month have been received so far this year, compared to 389 for all of 1996. They range in amounts from $10 to $10,000.

"Cybercrooks are in your pocketbooks with a click of the mouse," league president Linda Golodny told reporters during a conference call announcing the new anti-fraud resources.

"It's like a giant yard sale in cyberspace," Grant said. "Consumers purchase a variety of items that are advertised online, but they don't always get what they bargained for."

The league officials said the most common signs of fraud are extravagant promises of profits, guarantees of credit regardless of bad credit history, suspiciously low prices or prizes that require up-front payments.

The fraud reports are turned over to more than 150 law enforcement agencies in the United States and Canada, including the Federal Trade Commission, the FBI, state attorneys general and police departments.

"It's one more tool in our kit (to enforce the law)," said Hugh Stevenson, assistant director of the FTC Division of Marketing Practices.

The league said Internet use is projected to grow 60 percent this year, with revenues reaching $12 billion.

The 10 most frequent fraud reports involve the following: undelivered Internet and online services; damaged, defective, misrepresented or undelivered merchandise; auction sales; pyramids and multilevel marketing; misrepresented cyberspace business opportunities and franchises; work-at-home schemes; prizes and sweepstakes; credit card offers; books and other self-help guides; and magazine subscriptions.

Burgess Meredith of 'Rocky,' 'Of Mice and Men' dies at 89

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Burgess Meredith, who played a crusty old pug in "Rocky" and waddled with aristocratic elan as the Penguin on TV's "Batman," is dead at 89.

The actor, who died on Tuesday at his home in Malibu, had melanoma and Alzheimer's disease.

Meredith

"Burgess Meredith always was to me an irreplaceable legend, a craftsman who rarely comes along, not in one generation but in several generations," Sylvester Stallone said.

"Rocky," in which Meredith played Stallone's scowling, gravelly voiced manager, was the actor's first smash hit in a 60-year film career filled with memorable roles: guardian of the dimwitted giant in "Of Mice and Men," Ginger Rogers' suitor in "Tom, Dick and Harry," war correspondent Ernie Pyle in "The Story of G.I. Joe," James Madison in "Magnificent Doll."

He was twice nominated for Oscars, for supporting actor in "Day of the Locust" in 1975 and "Rocky" in 1976. He didn't win either.

During the 1960s, he was best known as Batman's foe the Penguin, a role he played in tuxedo with top hat, cigarette holder and pince-nez.

"I waddled like a penguin, which seemed rather obvious to do," he once said. "The touch I liked was that peculiar penguinlike quack I used in my lines."

Meredith won a supporting-actor Emmy in 1977 for the drama special "Tail Gunner Joe," as attorney Joseph Welch in the story of Sen. Joseph McCarthy.

A compact person with unruly, sandy hair, Meredith had a quirky, warm voice that was often heard on commercials for United Air Lines, Skippy peanut butter and other products.

He sometimes wrote, directed or produced his films. In later years the stage-trained actor often took roles that seemed beneath his status as one of America's distinguished performers.

"If I spent all my time in Shakespearean companies and only did art movies like Olivier, my position would be more dignified and more serious," he said in 1967. "I might even be a better actor. But this is America, and I'm a man moved by the rhythms of his time, so I'll just take amusement at being a paradox."

Meredith was born in Cleveland. According to his son, he was 89 when he died, making the year of his birth 1907. Other references say he was born on Nov. 16, 1908, or 1909.

He was educated at Amherst College in Massachusetts before beginning his stage career in 1933 with Eva Le Gallienne's company in New York.

Maxwell Anderson's "Winterset" provided Meredith's star-making stage role as the tragic hero Mio. He repeated the role in the 1936 film version and thereafter divided his time between Broadway and Hollywood.

In 1940, he starred in John Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men." Meredith portrayed George, and Lon Chaney Jr. was the lumbering Lenny Small.

Meredith served in the Air Force during World War II.

After the war, he directed the thriller "The Man on the Eiffel Tower," starring himself, Charles Laughton and Franchot Tone.

Meredith was a strong character actor in such movies as "Advise and Consent" and "McKenna's Gold." He played Jack Lemmon's father in the 1993 comedy "Grumpy Old Men" and its 1995 sequel, "Grumpier Old Men."

On TV, he starred in a memorable "Twilight Zone" episode, playing a near-sighted book-lover who survives a nuclear blast. With everyone else dead, he revels in his undisturbed reading time until he breaks his glasses.

"Rocky" and its sequels brought new life to Meredith's career. Stallone saw Meredith as key to the film's success.

"I thank him for his performance in 'Rocky' because I truly feel without his participation in the film it would never have had its emotional core," Stallone said.

Meredith was married four times: to Helen Derby, actresses Margaret Perry and Paulette Goddard, and dancer Kaja Sundsten.

He is survived by his wife, Sundsten, his son, Jonathan, and his daughter, Tala.

Pre-Law Club sees forum as success

PRE-LAW CLUB VISITS LAW SCHOOL FORUM AT ROCK-HURST COLLEGE IN KANSAS CITY, MO.

LANDON TRAWNY
staff reporter

Monday, The K-State Pre-law Club traveled to Rockhurst College in Kansas City, Mo. to meet with law school representatives from across the country.

The goal of Monday's forum was to bring pre-law students in contact with a number of schools in one setting. Students were able to ask specific questions about schools they would not otherwise be able to visit.

Represented at the forum were schools from Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, Texas, Washington, Minnesota, Illinois and Maine.

Chris Green, senior in business management and international studies, said this was his first exposure to law school representatives.

"It was a good way to establish a contact person with many schools," he said.

Before making any final decisions, Green plans to visit some of the law schools first.

Beth Powers, pre-law and academic adviser, recommends visiting law schools whenever possible.

"You really need to visit a campus in order to get the feel of a school," she said.

Sheryl Gregory, admissions adviser for the University of Missouri, said the high school atmosphere at the Missouri School of Law is one aspect that attracts many students.

Many of the law school representatives said, they take the time to read recommendations and student's personal statements.

Some students feel that Law School Admissions Test scores and grade point averages are the main factors.

"We look at everything when considering a student's application," said Costella Staples, admissions coordinator at the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

Powers said students sell themselves short because they do not apply to certain law schools because of low LSAT scores and GPA.

"In terms of law schools looking more openly at students, it's a good time to apply. It is a buyer's market," she said.

Even if students' LSAT scores or GPA are low, Powers said students should still apply to their dream schools.

Students interested in visiting law schools in the future with the Pre-Law Club are encouraged to contact Powers at the College of Arts and Sciences office in Eisenhower 113 or call her at 532-6900.

Whitewater counsel accused of offering deal for testimony

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Susan McDougal said the office of Whitewater prosecutor Kenneth Starr offered to make an embezzlement charge go away if she would testify before a federal grand jury the way Starr wants her to testify.

McDougal was interviewed Tuesday by telephone from a California jail by TV station KATV on the one-year anniversary of her imprisonment for contempt of court for refusing to testify to a Whitewater grand jury investigating President Clinton's business dealings.

She is accused in California of embezzling $150,000 from conductor Zubin Mehta and his wife.

McDougal said Starr's office told her "that they had already spoken with the D.A. in Los Angeles and that they could take care of that and it would go away ... if I would tell them these lies that David Hale was telling them, if I had been willing to cooperate with them."

Starr spokeswoman Debbie Gershman, asked for comment, provided a copy of a Sept. 7, 1996, news release that said, "Ms. McDougal (and her lawyer) were specifically told that under no circumstances ... could we control the California state and federal authorities who are investigating and prosecuting Ms. McDougal for embezzlement and tax evasion."

McDougal and her former husband, James McDougal, were business partners of President Clinton and first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton when Clinton was governor of Arkansas.

The McDougals, along with former Gov. Jim Guy Tucker, were convicted of fraud in a Whitewater trial last year in which Hale was a key witness. She was sentenced to two years in prison, but will not begin serving that sentence until her 18-month contempt sentence is up.

McDougal said she hoped the powers that be would see it's time to end the Whitewater investigation.

"I have to believe that at some point the Congress, or the public, or whoever can stop this investigation will finally say, 'Enough is enough.' And that's truly what I'm hoping for," she said.

Albright to focus on security in meeting with Arafat

Albright

Netanyahu

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — After consoling Israeli and American victims of suicide bombs, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright urged Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat on Wednesday to crack down on terrorists before expecting any tradeoffs with Israel.

But Albright also told Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu that peacemaking required give and take on both sides. A senior State Department official said Albright advised him to open the borders to Palestinian workers and resume repayments to the Palestinian Authority.

That would help Arafat sustain an offensive against terrorism over the long run, said the official, briefing reporters on Albright's three-hour meeting with Netanyahu on condition of anonymity.

Albright, making her first trip to the Mideast as secretary of state, was due to meet Arafat Thursday in the West Bank town of Ramallah.

In a clear split with Netanyahu, who is demanding Arafat arrest the sharks and not the sardines behind suicide bombing attacks, Albright said Israel should pull back on occupied lands, as promised in the 1993 Oslo peace accords.

Peacemaking cannot proceed without reciprocity, Albright said in reminding Netanyahu at a news conference that there must be give and take on both sides of the Israeli-Palestinian divide.

Netanyhau did not seem impressed with the argument, or with the arrest by Arafat's Palestinian Authority of scores of terrorism suspects. After Israel released about $13 million of a $80 million debt of withheld taxes, the response he got was an embrace and a kiss for leaders of Hamas, Netanyahu said.

"If you say one good deed deserves another, we deserved something else," the prime minister said, referring to Arafat's embrace of a leader of the militant guerrilla group after it claimed responsibility for a bombing of a Jerusalem market July 30 that killed 15 civilians and two bombers. On Sept. 4, suicide bombings took the lives of five civilians and three bombers.

Albright visited Israeli victims at the Hadassah University hospital at Mount Scopus. "When you actually see the people and see the individual injuries it brings it home," she said of the bloody attack.

One was Daniel Miller, 19, of Miami, who was injured on his first day in Israel as a student. His mother, Grizzi, urged Albright to bear the attacks in mind "when you hug Arafat."

Albright interrupted her. "I am not going to hug Arafat," she said, solemnly.

At the start of a drive to salvage the battered peace effort, Albright bolstered Israel's anxieties about terrorism that has claimed 176 civilians and 67 soldiers since the Oslo accord was concluded in September 1993.

"Security is at the center of my agenda," Albright said outside the prime minister's office.

"There is no moral equivalent between killing people and building houses," she said, referring to Palestinian complaints that Israel was expanding its grip on Jerusalem, expanding Jewish settlements and leveling the homes of Palestinians in retaliation for terrorist raids.

While there is no way to prevents all acts of terror, Israel has a right to expect a comprehensive effort in de-legitimizing those who practice it, Albright said. "The Palestinian Authority must take unilateral steps and actions to root out the terrorist infrastructure."

The Palestinians accuse Netanyahu of using security as a excuse to evade commitments for phased pullbacks on the West Bank and other peacemaking gestures.

But Netanyahu said: "Before we are asked to give additional territory we have a right to demand ... a vigorous effort to fight terrorists and dismantle their structure."

However, Israeli President Ezer Weizman was reported by a U.S. official to have told Albright that the Clinton administration should be ready to pressure Netanyahu to implement a pullback. "It's time to produce some maps," Weizman said, according to the official.

Weizman also was said to have suggested the United States host a peacemaking conference along the lines of the Camp David talks in 1978 that produced a peace treaty between Israel and Egypt a year later.

A senior Palestinian official, Hanan Ashrawi, was sharply critical of the way Albright began her one-week visit to the region, saying she displayed a wholeheartedly one-sided approach.

In the West Bank town of Nablus, about 200 Palestinian women affiliated with the Islamic militant group Hamas burned a U.S. flag and a poster depicting Albright stabbing the Palestinian people.

"At some point, the United States has to decide whether it wants to serve only Israeli interests or whether it wants to serve the interests of peace in the region," Ashrawi said.

On a personal note, Albright toured the Yad Vashem museum to victims of the World War II Jewish Holocaust.

The director, Avner Shalev, gave her some 60 pages of documents that may add to what she has learned about Jewish relatives who died in the Terezin concentration camp in the Czech Republic, where she was born to Jewish parents in 1937.

Albright, reared a Roman Catholic and now an Episcopalian, went to her native land last week to research the origins that she said this year had only become known to her after her appointment in January as secretary of state.

Wefald addresses faculty concerns

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

President Jon Wefald used much of his annual State of the University address Thursday afternoon to address faculty concerns about funding for periodicals in Farrell Library.

Wefald, speaking to faculty members, reporters and a handful of students, gave the audience his perspective on the possible cut in funding for reviews and periodicals.

Rising costs for the publications are a problem for libraries across the nation, Wefald said. That's making it tough for colleges to continue to purchase the same amount of materials year after year.

"We're doing (research) for nothing, then the publishing houses get the results from the research, and if we want a copy, they sell them back to us at exorbitant prices. Every library in the country is confronted with exactly the same thing," Wefald said.

Concerns about library funding are valid, Wefald said. Still, it will take time to improve every aspect of the library.

"For the past 50 years, this library, in effect, was on the back burner. No other college or department comes close to being our highest priority since 1987 as the library has been. Is that enough? No, it's not enough. We all know that. We know that we are still short on funds for journals of all kinds," he said.

Wefald said suggestions that the administration could find left-over money to allocate to periodicals wouldn't be possible.

"There is not some magic Anderson Hall slush fund," he said.

Wefald defended the university's contingency fund, apparently answering queries as to why that money couldn't be used to purchase more library materials.

"At the beginning of the fiscal year, we try to set aside a certain amount of funds for contingency purposes. You can imagine that it doesn't take much of a catastrophe, such as a flood or lightning, to take away the contingency fund. We've only got $220,000 in that fund. We could put that all into journals if that's what you want, but then we'd have nothing left over to cover an emergency," Wefald said.

He also noted that K-State's emergency reserves are smaller than those of its peer universities. Wefald said the fund should be left alone.

Wefald promised action, even Journals' high prices reason for library cuts

The Collegian editorial board looks at why cutting periodicals in the Library would hurt the entire campus on Page 4.

There was one thing on the mind of many faculty members attending Thursday's State of the University address.

Journals.

The budget shortfall for Farrell Library's journal acquisitions has increased steadily in the past few years. Journal prices are rising at a 12- to 14-percent rate of inflation, which means the library's $2.15 million spent on journals last year doesn't go as far as it did the year before.

President Jon Wefald discussed the issue and general library funding in his address in Union Forum Hall, but he reserved the issue for final discussion after other business was through. Nearly 30 faculty and staff members stayed for the journal discussion.

Jim Legg, head of the physics department and outgoing Faculty Senate president, took the stage first to discuss the problem.

"One of my pet roots of the problem is simply the large inflation, particularly from some predatory European publishers," Legg said.

The casual conversation that ensued between a few faculty members and administrators focused on those "predatory" publishers responsible for large price increases, mainly in scientific journals.

Provost Jim Coffman said comparisons to the University of Kansas, which in quantity subscribe to more than K-State, are not fair because KU subscribes to more lower-priced journals.

"Our average cost of journals is much higher because we have more science journals," Coffman said. "We could have more if we had a different mix."

K-State now subscribes to 6,600 journals, compared to KU's more than 10,000. K-State is not an Association of Research Library member. ARL status is considered the benchmark in library quality and standing.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said every time the university community begins discussion of the journals issue "the whole world caves" in and communication with those involved becomes difficult.

Hobrock said one of the problems in securing legislative money for journals and printed material is the legislature views new technology as a cheap means to end the reliance on printed material. He said sometimes getting the electronic version of a journal requires getting the printed version and paying a 10-percent fee for electronic access.

He said it would take more than $5 million in reccurring budget increases to bring the library up to ARL status.

"I'm not sure there's any way to real-

Senate debates ethics code, implementing plus system

TRAVIS D. LENKNER
staff writer

Two important goals of Student Body President Tim Riemann's administration made their first appearances at the Student Senate meeting Thursday night.

The plus grading system and a stricter code of ethics for student government officials were both introduced as resolutions during the meeting. Riemann and Vice President Jennafer Neufeld attended the meeting and fielded questions about their proposals.

The so-called plus system would give instructors the option to award B plus, C plus and D plus grades in addition to the straight-letter grades.

The new additions to the grading scale would also count as three-tenths of one grade point higher than regular grades when grade point averages are figured.

Student Senators heard a first reading of a resolution that would declare Student Senate's support for the plus system and encourage Faculty Senate to adopt the system.

Neufeld said she hopes the proposed system would be adopted by a majority of university instructors.

"What we're hoping is that every single instructor would implement the plus system and use it on a fair basis. This is not something, if implemented, that two professors in one college would use and others would not. We just don't see that happening. We see it being used across the board," she said.

What else happened at Student Senate?

FINAL ACTION:

Bill 97/98/10 — Passed, 45-8
This is a constitutional amendment about the separation of offices among branches of Student Governing Association. It further clarifies the separation of powers between SGA's three branches.

Bill 97/98/11 — Failed, 31-22-1 (Although a majority voted in favor of the proposal, a three-fourths majority was required for passage.)
This constitutional amendment would have changed the time of year when a new Student Senate is given full governing power. The proposal would have allowed the standing Senate to finish the year, with the newly elected Senate assuming its duties at the beginning of the fall semester.
Now, Senators take office midway through the spring semester.

Bill 97/98/15, Bill 97/98/16 — Both passed, 52-0
These bills, a constitutional amendment and bylaw amendment, clarify the selection and control of the members of the student body president's cabinet.

Bill 97/98/17 — Passed 49-3
This bill, also a constitutional amendment, clarifies the circumstances surrounding appointments made by the Student Senate chair.
"Just consider this bill as a clean-up amendment," Bill Muir, faculty representative to Student Senate, said.

Bill 97/98/18 — Passed 52-0
This bill, written by Senate Intern Coordinator Kim Peschka, is a bylaw amendment about the selection time of Senate interns. The bill was also a housekeeping action.
"It's a no-brainer," Peschka said.

Anderson widening alters campus plans

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

As Anderson Avenue widens to six lanes between 17th Street and Denison Avenue, K-State is changing its plans for the space in and around Memorial Stadium.

Manhattan's plans to widen Anderson from 17th Street to Sunset Avenue will alter the available land space south of the stadium, making playing fields on the site no longer viable.

Recent attention to the site has called for a proposed alumni center to be built there in the next four or five years, but the KSU Alumni Association nor the university has made any commitment to the project.

Jack Messer, city engineer, said the city will havea public meeting in October on the field check for the Anderson project.

A field check is roughly 80 percent of the project's design. It was submitted to the Kansas Department of Transportation on Aug. 1.

Messer said the addition of two lanes, a right-turn lane and a middle-turn lane, between 17th and Denison will push Anderson's curb 30 feet to the north.

He said safety concerns about the corner of Anderson and Denison will call for the addition of a sloped lawn from the street down to the level of the current playing fields.

"It really needs to be a situation where it can be maintained with a mower for the safety concerns for bicyclists and pedestrians," Messer said.

The city will also redesign the storm sewer drainage in the area, which is now served by an underground concrete channel running diagonally from northwest to southeast under the stadium.

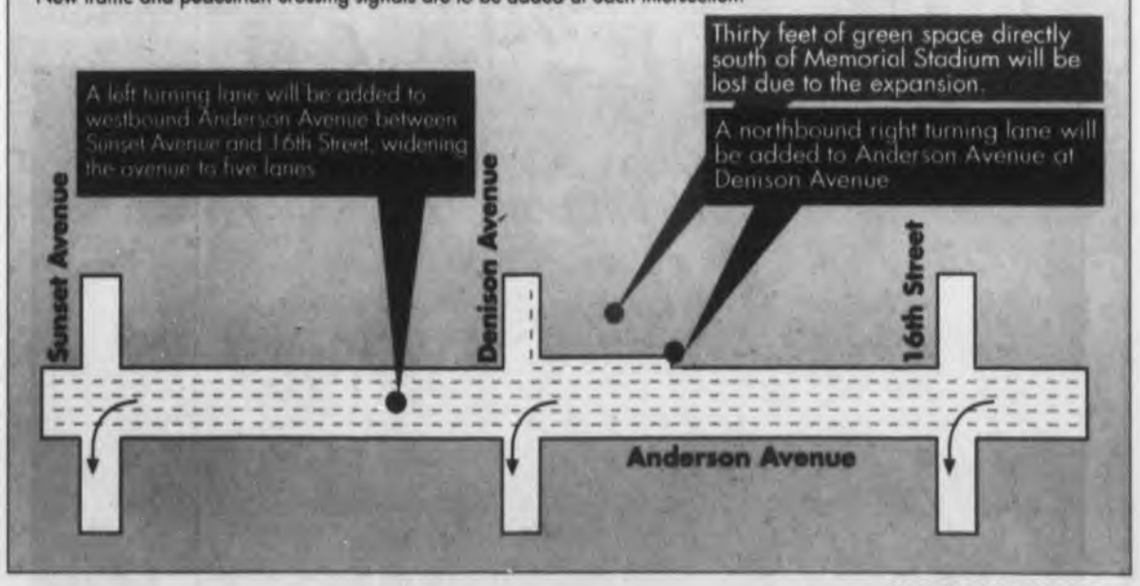
"Our decision was to design a storm sewer in such a way that the box can essentially be abandoned," Messer said. "The only situation is the internal drainage of Memorial Stadium would have to be provided."

Messer said the city would run sewer lines south under Denison and east under Anderson.

The city's plans for the streets around Memorial Stadium play a direct role in the area's development. The addition of a proposed alumni center to the area would increase traffic and arouse many campus-planning issues.

Messer said possible traffic density increases due to development of the south Memorial Stadium site have been factored into the Anderson project.

The university administration has considered a range of issues that could arise with possible development.



Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said the university will maintain the Memorial Stadium field at a higher level and instigate a way for sports clubs and organizations to schedule time for use of the field.

Rawson said the Alumni Association is willing to fund top-filling and overseeing if it decides to pursue a center on the south site.

Expanding Anderson Avenue

February 1, 1999, Anderson Avenue will receive a $7 million restructuring between Sunset Avenue and 16th Street. The renovations, scheduled to be finished at the end of October of that year and include the addition of a left turning lane, are intended to reduce accidents and improve traffic flow. New traffic and pedestrian crossing signals are to be added at each intersection.

Freshman dies after bus hits his bicycle during P.E. class

HOLLAND, Mich. — A college freshman who last month rode 420 miles to school on a bicycle was fatally injured in a bicycle accident.

Ben Buckhout, 18, of St. Paul, Minn., was taking part in a Hope College physical education class when his bike struck a city bus Wednesday. Witnesses told police he was trying to stop when the bicycle slid under the rear wheels of the small bus, which was leaving a bus station. He died in a Grand Rapids hospital.

"This incomprehensible loss has left us numb," Hope College President John Jacobson said.

Buckhout and his father, Don, spent six days in August riding from St. Paul to Hope College in Holland, 30 miles west of Grand Rapids.

Ford plans to market fast-charge device for electric vehicles

DEARBORN, Mich. — Ford Motor Co. is helping market a device that will reduce the time needed to recharge electric vehicles to about 20 minutes instead of six to eight hours.

Ford spokeswoman Sara Tatchio said the automaker is getting its first PosiCharge device today from the manufacturer AeroVironment.

"By next year we will start actually putting them in the hands of customers. We're happy to be one of the leaders in this," she said.

The device will allow electric vehicle users to recharge their vehicles four times each day and to drive 170 miles daily, compared with the usual 50 miles a day when it took longer to recharge the battery.

The devices will be ready to use with electric Ford Rangers in the second or third quarter of next year, she said.

PosiCharge, which is twice as tall as a gasoline pump, is designed to be installed at shopping malls, fuel stations and public parking lots.

The Los Angeles-area South Coast Air Quality Management District is spending $500,000 to help get two of the rechargers installed for four-month tests, USA Today reported in Thursday's editions.

Doctor who did not reattach man's severed hand wins lawsuit

NORFOLK, Va. — A man who sawed off his hand believing it was possessed has lost his lawsuit against the doctor who obeyed the man's request not to reattach the hand in the emergency room.

Thomas W. Passmore sued the doctor, claiming he should have known he was psychotic and overruled him.

Jurors deliberated for a half-hour Tuesday before rejecting all the claims in Passmore's $3 million lawsuit against Dr. Tad Grenga and Sentara Norfolk General Hospital.

Passmore, 33, became convinced that the number 666, a biblical reference to the devil or the Antichrist, was on his right hand.

Passmore had stopped taking his anti-psychotic medicine about a year earlier and said the hallucination "meant that I was evil."

He said he recalled the Bible verse, "If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off and cast it from thee," before heading to a table saw on the job site and sawing off the hand.

Horrified co-workers saved the hand in an ice chest and he was flown to Norfolk General, where he initially agreed to surgery, then changed his mind in the operating room.

Suspect shot while driving away with officer hanging out of vehicle

WICHITA — A suspected car burglar who sped off with a police officer hanging out of a pickup truck was shot to death early Thursday by the officer, police said.

The driver of the pickup was pronounced dead at a Wichita hospital. Police had not confirmed his age or identity, Wichita Police Capt. Paul Dotson said.

Police had received a telephone call early today that a man was looking into cars with a flashlight. When two officers arrived, they saw a homeowner chasing a man from a yard, Dotson said.

The suspect jumped into a pickup, then sped away after an officer dove into the vehicle through the passenger window. The officer's legs were still hanging out of the pickup truck.

The truck stopped after the suspect was shot about 5 a.m. in northeast Wichita.

Institute focuses on skills, tools of project management

How to get involved?
The first student chapter meeting will be at 6:30 p.m. Sept. 20 in the Union Big 12 Room.

Project Management Institute is a new organization at K-State. The purpose of the club is to introduce students, faculty and the community to the processes, skills, concepts and tools used in project management.

"Project management is the key to advancing in the job market as well as survival," said Glenn Uffelmann, founder and past president of Project Management Institute. "It is becoming the industry standard to use project management and a growing number must now be certified in the field."

A senior in construction science and management, Uffelmann said he wanted to start a student chapter about a year ago because of the growth he saw in the area of project management. He is now the vice president of operations for the organization.

"You can use it anywhere," Uffelmann said. "If there's a problem, opportunity or business requirement, you can use project management."

Because of the broad appeal of the organization, one benefit is networking. PMI is open to any student on campus.

The student chapter does not require membership dues, partially because it will remain open to anyone who wants to join.

The K-State chapter is not nationally affiliated. Students can join the national organization for $20 or the sponsoring chapter for $40 for the first year and $30 every year after.

"There were only seven chapters nationwide when I started the student chapter," Uffelmann said.

Current professional members are excited about student chapters. There are plans to start chapters at Rockhurst College, University of Kansas and University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, Uffelmann said.

The K-State chapter has 30 active members who subscribe via e-mail. Attendance at meetings ranges from three to 12 people.

"Although people are interested, we have the same problems as many other student organizations due to time constraints and the competition for student interest," Uffelmann said.

The chapter plans to have professional members make appearances at K-State and give presentations to students based on the turnout at meetings this semester.

"The opportunity is there, and the (professional) members are willing to help in any way," Uffelmann said. "I'm waiting to see how the chapter develops to make it worth their while."

The next meeting will feature guest speaker Steve Adkins, who works as project executive for IBM Global Services.

The chapter also plans to adopt a project that will allow students to work on through the semester.

"We do have a client in mind, but we are wanting to see if it is feasible or not," Uffelmann said.

Students in the chapter can also attend dinner meetings with the Kansas City Mid-America Project Institute Management chapter. This is the sponsoring chapter to K-State and a national affiliate. The meetings are conducted every second Monday of the month at a cost of $10 for students.

"It is a good way to get to know members in the community," Uffelmann said. "It is also good if you're interested in working in the Kansas City area."

"It has been a lot of work, but it's worth it," Uffelmann said. "When you see others that are excited about it and they can share that with you, it is even more worthwhile."

Two jobs keep new adviser busy

STORY BY SARA BURDETTE

With her time split between being adviser for K-State's Black Pan-Hellenic Council and the assistant director of the constituent programs for the KSU Alumni Association, it is amazing Tamara Abdulhaqq has time for anything else.

But she makes time for things that matter.

Abdulhaqq, a recent K-State graduate, has worked for the Alumni Association since March 1996 and began advising the Pan-Hellenic Council in June.

With Pan-Hellenic Council, she works as the satellite coordinator for the Health Careers Pathway Program, a program designed to prepare colored students for the medical exam through motivation, retention and admission.

"Our goal is to allow students to participate and compete for admission in health care," Abdulhaqq said.

In addition to helping students prepare for the future, her new role also keeps her busy working on a restructuring phase.

Abdulhaqq said this is one of the more challenging roles because of the time commitment it requires.

Abdulhaqq said making connections with individuals, which is sometimes difficult, is also one of the things she enjoys most.

"Being a young professional on campus is a challenge because you want to be professional, yet you are not so far away from student life," she said.

"My biggest goal advising greeks and working with the Pathways Program is to be an asset and be there for the students. If I can't help them, I want to direct them to someone that can. I want to be respected as it pertains to my job."

As if her new job doesn't keep her busy enough, Abdulhaqq is also continuing her responsibilities at the Alumni Association.

Jodi McGatlin, director of constituent programs for the Alumni Association, said the association is not concerned about Abdulhaqq working two jobs.

"We know that Tamara is very focused and dedicated to what she agrees to do. We were happy that she could work full time doing what she loves to do," McGatlin said.

Her role at the Alumni Association is not a light one, either.

Abdulhaqq works with the multicultural and international program, which sets up events such as Racial/Ethnic Harmony week, events with ethnic months, panels and more.

Her current time-consuming project is organizing the Black Alumni Greek Reunion this weekend. According to McGatlin, Abdulhaqq has been working on it all year.

Abdulhaqq said her main goal in her position with the Alumni Association is to do the best job she can to incorporate the university and its alumni.

She also said working two jobs has been rewarding. "Everything I do at both of my jobs is a reward because I can use it later in life. It is a growing tool."

When Abdulhaqq isn't working with the Alumni Association or the Pan-Hellenic Council, she is working with her husband, Jawwad Abdulhaqq, on their entertainment company. The two are working to bring more entertainment to Manhattan.

"I help with the marketing and public relations. It's pretty much my hobby," she said. "But I also love to read and create graphics, and with my journalism background, I also love to write."

Whether it is with work or with her hobbies, Abdulhaqq stays busy and, although to most it seems impossible, she said the secret is to prioritize.

"You have to take the responsibilities as they come, knowing when and what needs to be done and getting it done in a timely fashion," she said.

"EVERYTHING I DO AT BOTH OF MY JOBS IS A REWARD BECAUSE I CAN USE IT LATER IN LIFE."

Greek seniors take weekend trips across country

U.S. travelers
Labor Day weekend proved to be the ideal time for many greeks to take their annual senior sneaks.

GREEK LIFE

Several K-State fraternities and sororities left Manhattan for their annual senior pledge class sneaks on Labor Day weekend.

Twenty-six members of the Pi Beta Phi sorority voted to go to San Francisco for senior sneak.

On the trip, the sorority took a tour through the Alcatraz prison and also visited the Pi Phi chapter at Berkeley, Calif.

"The girls were really nice and laid back there. Their house was also really neat," said Aimee Jackson, senior in interior design and a member of Pi Beta Phi.

As part of a tradition, each year the Pi Phi seniors take something from the house on sneak with them.

This year, the seniors took all the shower curtains and the door stalls to the bathrooms and showers.

"It sure was a good prank. Next year, it will be hard to top. It made living here very inconvenient for the rest of us," said Jenny Scarpa, junior in speech pathology and a member of Pi Beta Phi.

The Pi Phi women were able to raise most of their money to go on sneak by having a banquet during their Mom's Weekend.

As juniors, they also raised money by serving meals to several fraternities at their formal dinners.

"We were able to raise $2,000, and half of that went for our pledge sneak," Jackson said.

"Our sneak was an opportunity for all of us to be together in one place, probably for the last time before we graduate," Jackson said.

Kappa Kappa Gamma left Aug. 28 for its senior sneak to Las Vegas. A total of 24 Kappas attended.

"We had so much fun because it was so cheap," said Kerry Boydston, president of Kappa Kappa Gamma and senior in agriculture journalism.

"This was probably the first time since our freshman sneak we had the opportunity to get away as a class, and our freshman year, we didn't even really know each other. Now, since we're seniors, we know way too much about each other," Boydston said.

The Theta Xi fraternity also went to Las Vegas for its senior sneak.

"Basically, we did a lot of gambling," said Mike Dodge, senior in agriculture economics and a member of Theta Xi.

The Theta Xis and the Kappas ended up being on the same plane home from Las Vegas.

"It was neat because the pilot of the plane announced a special welcome to the Kappas and Theta Xis from K-State, and we all cheered and sang the fight song," Boydston said. "The relationship we developed now will stand since we will all be going our separate ways soon."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

OPINION

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1997

OURview

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other staff members. Our View is the Collegian's official opinion.

Farrell Library should not have to cut periodical budget

During the State of the University address, President Jon Wefald talked about the recent construction on campus, the addition of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art and the winning athletic teams.

But as the speech progressed, it became apparent the audience was there for one reason: academics.

The library remains the focus for concerned academics who want to find a solution for the journal-budget shortfall.

It's no wonder faculty members are concerned. Cutting journal subscriptions could effectively wipe out whole areas of scholarship on this campus. Students and faculty would be aware of fewer ideas and research could be hampered.

Journal prices are increasing faster than the rate of inflation at nearly 14 percent. Some publishers have become predatory as they prey on schools who desperately need their journals at any cost.

While it is necessary to maintain Farrell Library's journal collection, no library should be forced to apologize for having to make these cuts. At a time when the state Legislature is becoming less dedicated to higher education and Gov. Bill Graves devotes his time to tax cuts, not even a sacred place such as the library is immune.

However, there might be money in our own backyard. We should consider rerouting some fund-raising and endowment efforts. Donating funds that enrich the quality of academic life might not be as eye catching as supporting athletic teams or a new campus building, but that is where K-State is most at risk.

Instead of getting upset, students and faculty should come forward with ideas and solutions.

The introduction of a user fee for research material could possibly address some of these budget shortfalls. Perhaps Student Senate should consider a new student fee for supporting journal and book purchases. Alumni should consider dedicating resources to the library.

KELLY FURNAS

KELLY FURNAS is a sophomore in print journalism. You can send e-mail to Kelly at krf5663@ksu.edu.

I'd like to apologize to all of my teachers.

I'm the student sitting in the back row, dozing off.

I hope I'm not insulting you — I really do enjoy your class. It's just that I was up late last night. And the night before. And the night before that.

I am a chronic insomniac.

Insomnia, one of the most broadly defined sleep disorders, is a problem in which a person has difficulty falling asleep, staying asleep or waking up. About 15 percent of Americans suffer from the disorder, which can be classified as chronic if it lasts for more than three weeks.

I've had it for five years.

For me, falling asleep seems impossible. As soon as my head hits the pillow, my mind starts reeling. I think about my day, as well as the day ahead. I think about what my life will be like when I'm 40, and I think about how much I miss eighth grade. In fact, there are few things that don't pop into my mind at night.

The problem lies in the fact that my mind sees these thoughts as a priority and delays my sleep for about three hours until I can sort through them all.

But, as expected, insomnia affects more than a person's night. There are numerous byproducts of a sleepless night, including constant irritability, lack of concentration, sleepiness, anxiousness and memory problems.

The ideal solution would be just to try to go to bed earlier. This is also a problem because I work until 3 a.m.

If the Algebra class I didn't sleep through serves me correctly, I usually go to sleep between 6 a.m. and 7 a.m. I get up at 10:30 a.m. to get ready for school. That's about four hours of sleep.

Every night.

I used to take sleeping pills, but had to stop once my schedule got tighter. Pills knock me out for at least eight hours, which is more time than I can afford to be asleep. Naps would be a good idea, except I go to work 30 minutes after my last class.

So, foolishly, I try to make up for lost sleep in class. Not just lecture classes, either. I've been caught dozing in a recitation class with seven students. I've been asleep while the teacher walked around the room and tapped me on the shoulder. I've been asleep when students in the following class started entering the room.

And falling asleep has little to do with the teacher. I have never fallen asleep out of boredom. Usually my mind convinces me to take an extra-long blink which turns into a six-minute nap. Other times, I will pinch the bridge of my nose so it looks as if I'm concentrating — for the entire class period. But if I am coherent enough to foresee my slumber, and the class is large enough, I will prop up my book bag on my desk and use it as a pillow.

Make no mistake — if I could stay awake in class, I would. Falling asleep is embarrassing. I have an uncanny ability to drool when I fall asleep next to a girl. Other times, I will wake up in a violent shake. The worst is when I fall asleep and end up using my neighbor's shoulder as a pillow.

Plus, I defeat the purpose of going to class. Something inside me thinks my academic career is worth waking up for. I am, in reality, intellectually overriding my desire to sleep. But for some reason, this effect doesn't carry over into class.

I have accepted that I can no longer use my insomnia or my work schedule as a scapegoat for my irresponsibility. I am in control of my own employment, and most sleep disorders can be treated by a physician.

But for now, I am content with the optimistic belief that I actually make up for most of my lost sleep on the weekends. The hours probably don't cancel out in reality, but I usually feel refreshed when I start my week on Monday.

I remain equally optimistic that my instructors don't look down upon me for what must appear to be a blatant insult. I seldom discuss the situation with them, primarily because I'm so embarrassed by it. I see my problem as just that — something that's wrong with me, and something I should be able to overcome.

I would hope, however, that teachers try to sympathize with students with such a problem, especially considering that many people with insomnia might not even know about it.

That is, unless our classes can have a nap time.

CONVERSATION PARTNERS CAN MAKE STUDENTS FEEL AT HOME

When I replied to a bulletin from the International Student Center regarding conversation partners last spring, my motives were perhaps just a little selfish. Being in German, I was hoping to be paired with someone from Germany so I could brush up on my speaking skills. But, hey — helping others can be fun.

So I went to the meeting and met my partner, who wasn't really so much German, per se, as she was Chinese. And she wasn't so much close to my age, which was 18, as she was to 32.

In my immediate vision, I saw two distinct problems with the situation: One being my Chinese was limited to whatever I'd learned by eating at Kwan Wah's in various mall food courts. The other being she was old enough to rent cars and almost old enough to run for president. I was barely old enough to buy porn.

So let's say I was a little apprehensive at first.

We decided to meet for an hour once a week and just talk.

For an hour. Small countries can see the rise and fall of their government in such a long frame of time.

The first day we met, I sat nervously in the International Student Center, still searching for topics. When she arrived, all the reservations and fears of heavy-hanging silence dissipated.

We talked about politics of China and the United States. We talked about cultural differences. I tried to explain slang words to her, and she showed me how to write different words in Chinese. We talked about the difficulties each of us were having in different classes.

Her English improved, and I got an idea of what it would be like to live in a foreign country.

Listen to conversations around you while walking to class sometime. At least one of those conversations probably wouldn't be in English.

Students from all over the world flock to K-State for one reason or another. For those of us native to this country, it should be our pleasure to make them feel welcome.

Imagine not being able to drive a couple of hours and be in your hometown. Imagine being in a place with a funny language that's not your own, with people who are coolly oblivious to the fact that their country and its customs are a foreign notion to some people.

By volunteering as a conversation partner, you can be the first step on the way to helping an international student feel at home.

In many cases, international students don't get the chance to speak English on a conversational level, which can greatly hinder them in their attempt to master the tongue. Listening to English spoken in a classroom setting is one thing, but hearing and using it in a less structured setting will help students communicate more freely. Plus, it helps them to decipher such ambiguous phrases as "knockin' boots," "cuttin' a rug" and "all that and a bag of chips."

And if you're the what's-in-it-for-me type, there's a side of this for you too (although theoretically you should just get all happy at the thought of providing goodwill for others). You have the opportunity to learn firsthand about a country you never thought you'd be interested in before.

If you happen to have some knowledge of the students' native language, you can sharpen your speaking skills as well, or at least provide the student with the security in the knowledge that no matter how bad their English may be, your attempts to speak another language will always be worse. It can be a confidence booster for them.

And there are occasionally cookies and coffee provided at the International Student Center. It's just a win-win situation from all angles.

Call the people at the International Student Center at 532-6448 and let them know you want to participate in the conversation program.

And you never know — you just might make a new friend.

Many veterans suffer from stress disorders

Editor,

In Wednesday's Collegian was an Associated Press article, "POW cites post-traumatic syndrome as defense for killing son-in-law." One of the statements in the article was, "It (Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder or PTSD) has generally been associated with Vietnam War veterans, but there have been cases involving Korean War and World War II veterans."

The Greek historian Herodotus, writing in the battle of Marathon in 490 B.C., reported PTSD-like symptoms experienced by some Athenian warriors.

Swiss military physicians in 1678 were among the first to identify and name that constellation of behaviors that make up acute combat reaction (PTSD).

It was during the Civil War that the first U.S. military hospital for the "insane" (those with PTSD) was established.

In World War I, the total number of soldiers who experienced "shell shock" (PTSD) numbered 159,000.

In World War II, there were 1,393,000 who suffered symptoms serious enough to debilitate them for some period of time — this was later termed "combat fatigue" (PTSD).

In the Korean War, of the nearly 200,000 who saw combat, 24.4 percent were psychiatric casualties.

In Vietnam, because of new preventative measures and a better understanding of PTSD, battlefield psychological breakdown was at an all-time low of 12 per 1,000.

Yes, there are many Vietnam veterans with PTSD. But what seems most interesting about this fact is the large number of veterans who have been diagnosed with PTSD symptoms after they returned home to an ungrateful nation.

Math department faces cutbacks of periodical

Editor,

This is an open letter to Dean Brice Hobrock and President Jon Wefald.

During the 1996-97 academic year, the Department of Mathematics faculty met with representatives of the administration, including Hobrock and Provost James Coffman, trying to explain that there can be no further cuts in mathematics periodicals without disastrous consequences.

We reminded them that K-State has the only mathematical program in Kansas significant enough to be ranked by the National Research Council.

We reminded them that more than 40 percent of K-State Goldwater scholars have been math majors, attracted by the strength of our program.

We reminded them that the K-State's Putnam team, coached by our graduate faculty, placed 12th in the nation and first among all public universities.

We reminded them that journals and books are the "laboratory equipment" we have, our "power supply," our water to drink and our air to breathe — we cannot provide quality teaching and research without them.

We reminded them that three years ago, our periodicals underwent their third severe cut, that the mathematical content of the Farrell Library is already the poorest among the Big 12 schools and the poorest in the country for a university of our size and ambitions.

Evidently, our appeals fell on deaf ears. Tuesday, we received an order from Hobrock to cut one third of our periodicals in 10 days. We were even asked to perform our execution with our own hands.

We, the faculty of the Department of Mathematics of K-State, strongly protest against this wrong-headed decree. We will not cooperate with and participate in the extermination of the research at our university.

NEW ADDITIONS TO STADIUM INCLUDE FAN APPAREL, SHOPPING OPPORTUNITIES

STORY BY MICHAEL RYAN

CATS CLOSET
A fan apparel and merchandise store that offers the latest in Wildcat fashion, will open with the upcoming season.

KSU

KSU Stadium has not only added new restrooms for the upcoming season, but it has also added a closetl.

Cats Closet, that is. Cats Closet is a new store for K-State fans to get the latest in Wildcat team apparel. The grand opening is from 5 to 8 p.m. today.

The store is a partnership between the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and It's Greek to Me Inc.

"Our hope is to make this the best selection of K-State apparel anywhere," Dave Dreiling, owner of It's Greek to Me, said.

The store will offer many new Wildcat items and team apparel, including personalized team jerseys and player T-shirts. Max Urick, athletic director, said the personalized player merchandise can only be sold through the athletic department by NCAA rule. He said this is the first time K-State has offered the personalized merchandise since the new rule was passed.

Dreiling said Cats Closet will have three locations on the stadium grounds.

The main location will be on the southwest side of the stadium, and it will be accessible from the outside and inside of the stadium. The two other locations will be on the east side of the stadium. One store will be in a tent in the parking lot and the other store will be inside the stadium.

During football season, Cats Closet will be open Friday evenings before each home game and Saturdays when the parking lot gates open. The store will also be open during basketball season 90 minutes before tip-off at all men's and women's home games.

Cats Closet will be managed by It's Greek to Me personnel. Monica Junghans, manager of Cats Closet, said 18 people will be working at the game on Saturday.

Bob Cavello, assistant athletic director of business operations, said the athletic department will get a percentage of the sales from the store.

"The money helps fund athletic opportunities," Cavello said. The opportunities range from scholarships to better facilities, he said.

Habitat for Humanity builds homes, makes area families' dreams reality

BRANDI HERTIG
staff reporter

A safe, warm home, a necessity some take for granted, isn't a reality for everyone. The Manhattan affiliate of Habitat for Humanity International, which will be breaking ground for its fourth home Sunday, is looking to change that.

The house is being built for Vanessa Leach, her husband, Jesse Fernandez, their three children and Fernandez's father. The family's home was destroyed in the flood of 1993, and it has been living in rental housing with poor insulation ever since, said Marcia Schuley, president of the Manhattan chapter of Habitat for Humanity.

"They have some special challenges," she said.

Habitat has been providing housing for families in need since 1976. Manhattan has had a chapter since February 1995, and has built three houses.

To qualify for a home, applying families must meet certain criteria. First, they must show a need, but they also must have an annual income between $10,000 and $22,000.

"Habitat is not a giveaway program," said Ronnie Whalen, member of the Habitat for Humanity board of directors. "They have to have an income where they can make a mortgage payment."

The family also must be willing to become partners with Habitat for Humanity, Whalen said. They must put in between 200 and 400 hours of sweat equity, during which they help with the building of their home or other community service projects.

Families get support from Habitat's Family Nurture committee before and after a house is built. A person from Habitat acts as a liaison between the family and the organization, as well as helping with decision-making and, in some cases, providing training, Schuley said.

> "It's a real positive experience. You solve more than just a short-term need.
> • Jason Leavitt
> Habitat volunteer

The houses, which are worth about $63,000 each, are sold to the families for $35,000-$37,000. Materials needed to build the houses are either purchased at cost or donated, and volunteers provide the labor.

"The community has been very, very supportive," Whalen said.

Jason Leavitt, fifth-year senior in construction science and management, has participated in Habitat for more than three years and has helped in the construction of three houses.

"I always get yelled at by my family for dedicating what seems like too much time to it," he said.

K-State's student chapter of Habitat has more than 300 students on its mailing list.

"The student chapter was recognized as the top chapter in our four-state region a year and a half ago. It's a very strong chapter," Schuley said.

Leavitt said no previous construction experience is necessary to be a part of Habitat or to help build the homes.

"That's one of the major draws — you don't have to have done anything," Leavitt said.

Selection for the fifth family will be announced in January.

"It's a real positive experience," Leavitt said. "You solve more than just a short-term need."

Tough 1st tourney ahead for new golf coach, team

JOEL WHITE
staff writer

The men's golf team will have its first test under new coach Tim Norris in the Falcon Cross-Creek Invitational Sept. 12-14 in Colorado Springs.

The 24-team tournament will include some reputable Big 12 and Western Athletic Conference teams such as Colorado, Missouri and Nebraska, along with Air Force, San Diego State and Colorado State. Air Force is the host of the tournament.

The tournament will prove to be a tough opener, Norris said.

"It's important to play well against those teams," he said. "It'll be interesting to see what happens."

Senior Matt Murdoch said the team is ready for the competition.

"There's no reason why we can't be there at the top," Murdoch said. "We're all pretty happy about the way we're playing."

In last year's Falcon Cross-Creek Invitational, K-State finished in 16th place while Nebraska captured the title. Murdoch, who shot a 72-77-78 in the three rounds, was K-State's highest finisher with a tie for 37th place.

Norris said the Colorado Springs course will be difficult for his team to adjust to.

"The greens are very fast because of the high elevation," Norris said.

Murdoch said there is an up side to playing in the high elevation.

"The ball flies farther there than it does here," he said.

Aside from Murdoch, B.J. Walter is the only other returning Wildcat who played in last year's Falcon Cross-Creek Invitational. Also making the trip to the tournament are Zac Clark, Jeremey Higgins and Brian Racette.

Higgins said he thinks the first tournament will indicate the improvement that the team has made since last year.

"The coaching has changed," Higgins said. "And hopefully, we'll change too."

HOLTZ TO BE ANALYST

NEW YORK — Lou Holtz begins a new phase of his football Saturdays this week. He will be inside rather than prowling the sidelines as coach — something he did at Notre Dame for the past 11 years.

Holtz debuts as an analyst Saturday when CBS Sports launches College Football Today, its first full half-hour pregame, halftime and postgame studio shows since it had the NFL games in 1993.

Holtz said Thursday he will have no problem being critical of his former fellow coaches.

"All I have to do is remember that I thought we won three national championships at Notre Dame, but those coaches voted us out of it," he said.

Nor did Holtz feel he would have any difficulty being objective.

"I'm not here to win friends or do anything else. I'm here to give an honest opinion whether it's right or wrong," he said.

Holtz said his first inclination was to turn down the CBS offer. Maybe it was an inferiority complex.

"I look at people in television, and they have good looks and charm and I've got a lisp," he said.

Jim Nance anchors College Football Today with Holtz and Craig James as analysts.

NCAA HIRES MEDIA MAN

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. — Jim Marchiony, the NCAA's director of broadcast services, will now be in charge of media services for the Division I men's basketball tournament.

Marchiony replaced longtime NCAA staffer Dave Cawood in overseeing credentials and coordination for the roughly 800 print, television and radio representatives who cover the Final Four every year.

Cawood resigned earlier this year as an assistant executive director of the NCAA to join Host Communications as a senior vice-president.

"I hope I can do as well as he did. I've been his right hand for almost 13 years, so I've had a chance to watch and learn," Marchiony said.

Ohio next Mid-American Conference foe for Cats

SUN DEE MILLS
sports editor

On both sides of the ball, the Ohio Bobcats provide challenges for the Wildcats.

Offensively, Ohio runs a derivative of the wishbone, Coach Bill Snyder said. This triple-option makes it more important that the Cats know their positions, even though it's only the second game of the season.

"It's a different preparation than at any other time in the course of our year," Snyder said. "It requires you to be extra responsible for what your positions are versus this option football team. If somebody forgets (their job), the other team will light up the scoreboard."

Junior middle linebacker Jeff Kelly, who will be playing his second game as a Wildcat Saturday, agreed.

"From what I've seen of the offense, you have to be fundamentally sound," Kelly said. "One slip-up could mean a touchdown for them."

This means focusing on the running games of Bobcat quarterback Kareem Wilson, halfback Riz Buckman and fullback Steve Hookfin, all of whom have rushed for more than 100 yards in a single game.

"We'll start with the fullback, and then make sure the quarterback doesn't get it," Snyder said. "The last resort will be looking at who's going to take it on a pitch."

The Bobcat passing game is a question mark. Wilson has only attempted six passes this season, connecting on three. Snyder said the Cats would still spend an inordinate amount of time on their passing game because their tactics could change in KSU Stadium.

But the differences don't end there.

"The defense is different than what we'd encounter in the Big 12," Snyder said. "They run an angle/nose guard defense — they slant, they don't sit still — and it's a far different preparation than we've had on both sides of the ball."

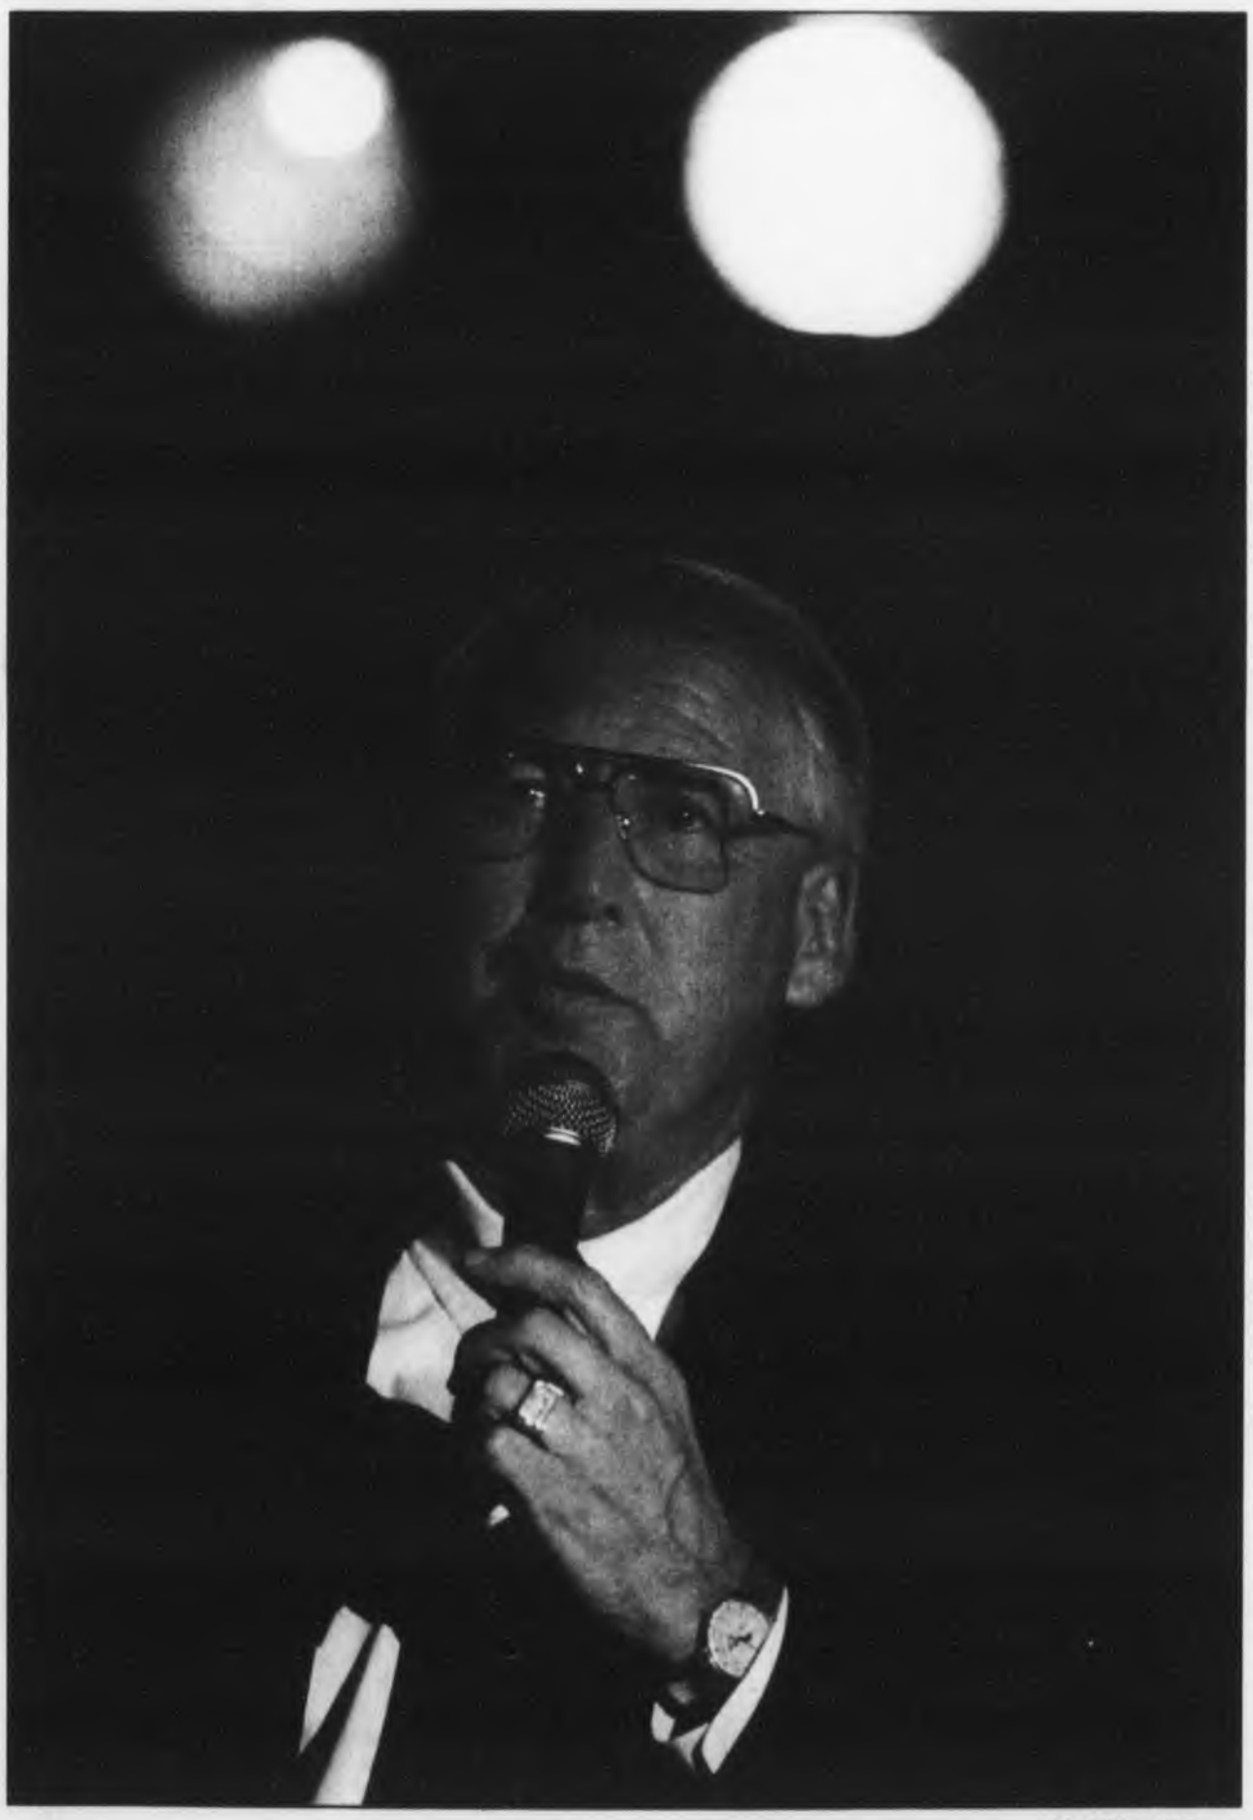
However, this foreign game plan can work against the Bobcats as well.

"It can create bad plays for the offense," Snyder said. "But they also put themselves in a position to make bad plays for themselves."

Last weekend, the Bobcats pulled off a tough non-conference win against Maryland. Although the Bobcats have never beaten a nationally ranked team, the win over Maryland made an impression on Snyder.

"They were down 14-0 and came back to win 21-14," he said. "They didn't panic. They played with poise and kept chipping away to come back to win."

Junior strong-side linebacker Travis Ochs said this week that player responsibility will grow tenfold in importance.



"We can't even let them get four or five yards, like they like to do," Ochs said. "We've got to keep shutting them down early. It'll be a responsibly played game."

Once again, Ohio is coming in as the underdog, but that doesn't make the team or the coach feel more secure considering the different looks they'll face.

"That was a big win for them at Maryland and against Maryland," Snyder said. "They're a pretty doggone good football team."

The game starts at 6:10 p.m. and will be broadcast on KSDB-FM 91.9.

"ONE SLIP-UP COULD MEAN A TOUCHDOWN FOR THEM."

K-STATE coach Bill Snyder addresses the fans Thursday night during Purple Power Play on Poyntz.

Purple people pack Poyntz for Power Play

JEFF PALMER
staff writer

Festivities for K-State's football home opener got under way Thursday night as thousands of purple-clad Wildcat fans packed the streets for the annual Purple Power Play on Poyntz.

Fans of all ages came to listen to the K-State Marching Band, watch the Classy Cats and the K-State cheer squad, eat food, buy merchandise and listen to Coach Bill Snyder and the team captains.

Snyder thanked the fans for their support during the past nine years and especially at last year's Cotton Bowl in Dallas.

"Our fan and support base is great and our support from the student body is just fantastic," Snyder said.

Snyder also thanked the people who traveled to Chicago to watch the Cats whip Northern Illinois 47-7, but he said he's not sure if that was a good measuring stick for the season.

"I know we have the capacity to have a very fine football team, but I don't think we are as good as we appeared in the first half last week. But I know we're not as bad as we looked in the second half," Snyder said.

Before Snyder introduced the captains to the crowd, he made a special point to recognize Adrian Beard, the redshirt freshman cornerback who was injured last week and will be out for the season.

The five captains, Todd Weiner, Ryan Young, Eric Hickson, Travis Ochs and Mark Simoneau, each spoke briefly with the crowd and all had the same basic message.

Each of the five thanked the fans for all the support they have given and each referred to K-State fans as the best college football fans in the country.

Hickson got the crowd fired up when it was his turn by leading everybody in a Willie-the-Wildcat "K-S-U Wildcats" chant.

Manhattan resident Donalyn Rhodes said she comes to the Purple Power Play every year, and each year it fires her up for football season.

"This is a great start for the football season, and it really gets me in the spirit. I'm really interested to see the new quarterback (Michael Bishop) and am excited for another bowl game," she said.

The children in the crowd got a chance to meet Willie as well as climb aboard the CatTracker bus.

Twelve-year-old Manhattan resident Steve Dawes said, "I like to come to the Purple Power Play because I get to hang out with friends and see Willie and the band."

Before Snyder and the team took the stage, the crowd mingled along Poyntz Avenue eating food from various vendors and buying K-State souvenirs.

The Classy Cats and the cheer squad performed on stage and danced to the music of the marching band while the crowd participated in the fight song and different chants.

In a banner contest to support the football team, the fifth- and sixth-grade classes from Bluemont School won first place and $150.

The enthusiasm was high and the crowd was ready for the home opener Saturday against the University of Ohio.

"The Purple Power Play has gotten bigger every year, and it's good to see people from the community come out and support it," said Rod Franz, Manhattan resident. "The football team is going to be better than OK this year, and we will be going to our fifth-consecutive bowl game this year."

I've done it for as long as can I remember. After coming home from school during baseball season, I'd automatically turn on WGN, knowing that if the Chicago Cubs were at home, there'd be quality programming to watch.

Although not a diehard fan of the Northsiders like some, I'd watch the games and absorb everything — the ivy, the "bleacher bums," even Harry Caray's horrible, yet lovable rendition of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game." It was a baseball fan's dream. Games played during the day, on grass, with pitchers hitting.

Of course, they still play mostly daytime ball games at Wrigley Field. At least that's what I hear.

I can't see it firsthand anymore, now that WGN is no longer on our cable system. Apparently TCI of Kansas decided that my happiness, along with that of countless other baseball fans in Manhattan, is much less important than having two CBS affiliates in the lineup. Apparently one "Murphy Brown" is not enough.

I could live without WGN. I did it all summer. I lived at home in Overland Park, Kan., where TCI is also the local cable system. Somehow it has about double the channels, but no WGN. It was taken off at the same time as it was in Manhattan. I survived, though.

In Manhattan, ESPN, Fox Sports Rocky Mountain, TBS, f/X, USA and TNT, are the cable networks that carry sports. That sounds like quite a bit of sports, but of those, only ESPN and Fox Sports Rocky Mountain show very much.

I could also get CNN/SI, ESPN2 and the Golf Channel in Overland Park. CNN/SI was nice. It was basically like having a poorer version of "SportsCenter" on 24 hours a day, but it was still leagues better than CourtTV.

The Golf Channel was wonderful. It had live tournaments from around the world, historic shows, "Golf Central," a golf news program and lessons the rest of the time. Before watching it, I never knew how ugly my golf swing really was. I understand this is not a crucial channel to have, but it is a nice luxury.

ESPN2 was pure bliss, and I wasn't even there for the best season. It has tons of hockey on all season (a personal favorite), as well as all the college basketball and football one could possibly watch.

It also has sport-specific news programs, such as "NHL 2Night," "NBA 2Night" and "RPM 2Night."

Yeah, they go a bit overboard with the deuces, but it's a great station for all who love live sports.

There's no reason not to have at least ESPN2. I'm sure there are plenty of sports fans to keep it going.

The logic is simple: Get rid of the duplicate networks.

Give us ESPN2 and another quality channels, such as Comedy Central. It doesn't have to be sports. Give us WGN back. Just give us something decent! Does anybody actually watch QVC, C/SPAN, or CourtTV? The O. J. trial is over.

I go through more stress trying to find a way to watch playoff hockey games on ESPN2 in the spring than I do during finals week.

I beg of TCI to have mercy on sports fans of Manhattan and upgrade our cable to something acceptable.

Just one last time before he dies, I want to hear Harry Caray stumble over Mark Grudzielanek's name. "It might be, it could be —."

So, TCI, is WGN back on our cable?

TRAVELOGUE BY KEVYN JACOBS

KEVYN JACOBS

I'm going on a little trip this semester. Would you like to go with me? How does a four-month, around-Mother-Earth trip on a university ship, with stops in Japan, China, Hong Kong, Vietnam, India, Egypt, Cyprus, Turkey, Greece and Morocco sound to you? And you get 12 hours of college credit while you're at it.

Not too shabby, eh?

Well, for the next four months, I'll be doing just that. I'm spending the semester aboard the S.S. Universe Explorer, a university ship, administered through the University of Pittsburgh (Pa.). And from each of the exciting stops I've listed above, I'll be faxing back travelogues to the Collegian, so you can read about what it's like to be a K-State student studying abroad.

As you read this, I am boarding the ship in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada. The ship actually leaves dock on Sunday to begin our voyage of discovery, but I have been accepted for the Semester at Sea Work Study Program, so I was required to be here a few days early. But, they are taking $6,000 off the top of my tuition for the semester for being a work-study student, so it's worth it.

Every semester, including summer, the S.S. Universe Explorer accepts about 600 students from all majors and universities across North America, and takes them on a remarkable educational voyage.

During the next four months, students take 12-15 hours of classes on the ship, with time off at each of the ports of call. That's usually for four or five days each. The semester runs from Sunday to Dec. 23. The emphasis of the program is on international studies, with special focus on topics relevant to the countries we visit along the way.

The program is fully accredited and designed with classes that will fit into any degree course of study. For example, one of my majors is art, so I'll be taking Islamic Art on board, which will fill part of my art history requirements at K-State.

I also need a philosophy elective, so I'll be taking Cultural Relativism as part of my studies, which will focus on some of the big questions we'll face while traveling from country to country and culture to culture.

All students are required to take the core course, World Geography. This class covers topics such as the history, government and culture of each country we visit — and it's also where they'll cover local customs and taboos so we don't get into trouble.

Rounding out my class schedule is an elective geography course called World Cities, which goes into more depth about the cities we'll visit — such as Hong Kong, Athens and Casablanca — and into the historical roles of cities in human cultures.

But there are many more classes available on ship. There are international business and management classes, world literature classes, classes in women's studies, classes in international environmental and agricultural concerns, even classes in international music and theater. Students in almost any major could find electives here that would work into their degree program.

One of the neatest things about the classes is the Semester at Sea Field Project Program with its emphasis on topics relevant to our destinations. For example, as part of my Islamic Art class, I'll be required to visit sites of artistic importance in the Islamic countries we visit.

A business class might visit local businesses, a theater class might go to see special performances and an education class might visit a local elementary school for the day. Additionally, visiting professors and guest speakers are brought on board at each stop to give class lectures on local topics.

I learned about the Semester at Sea Program a couple of years ago, when I was in the lobby of Van Zile Hall. There was one of those ubiquitous educational opportunity posters that you see on bulletin boards across campus. This one caught my eye — "Go on a Voyage of Discovery. Travel and Explore the World with Semester at Sea."

Intrigued, I ripped off one of the mail-in coupons for more information. As soon as I got the packet in the mail and saw the itinerary of destinations for the program, I was hooked. I love to travel, and I love to learn. So I couldn't resist this chance to combine them.

I mailed in my application and essay, with a $25 application fee. In February, I got the acceptance letter I had been so anxiously hoping for. I was in for the fall '97 semester!

My next step was to figure out how to pay for the tuition, room and board. It's pretty steep — $12,000 a semester — but I received work study on board which halved my tuition. Most of the rest I got through Stafford subsidized and unsubsidized loans with an additional private loan of $5,000 to cover travel expenses and spending money on the ship. I decided

GAINING RESPECT

Folk singer's 3rd album helps push her into the pop limelight

STORY BY MARY RENEE SMITH

Women's music is moving to the forefront this year with events like Lilith Fair and Womyn's Music Festivals across the country. Folk music artist Dar Williams hopes to gain from the recent rise of the female folk-rock sound with the release of her newest compact disc.

Music Review

"End of the Summer" is Williams' third CD in three years. The new collection of songs was preceded by "Mortal City" in 1996 and "The Honest Room" in 1995.

Williams once again proves herself as a competent storyteller through her songwriting. Stories of suburban shopping, small town DJs, troubles in therapy and back-to-school blues pull the listener in. Her catchy melodies and memorable choruses will have listeners singing along.

Williams' vocal and songwriting style has been compared to Ani DiFranco, Suzanne Vega and Shawn Colvin. Williams recently toured with Joan Baez and is included in the Lilith Fair lineup in a few cities.

Fans might be surprised by the sound of the new album. More production and a band back up Williams' vocals, which have also changed a bit. A year of voice lessons has deepened Williams voice and given it more color than before — a pleasant surprise to listeners already impressed by her vocal abilities.

Williams manages to gain a somewhat pop music edge without selling out completely. Her lyrics hit home time after time. "What Do You Hear in These Sounds" explores the ups and downs of therapy with lyrics like "I don't go to therapy to find out if I'm a freak. I go and find the one and only answer every week."

With "Bought and Sold" Williams pokes fun at large chain discount stores. "And we can be the super shoppers, we can say we're really smart." Williams' admits the song is her attempt to get banned at Wal-Mart.

Williams does a cover of The Kinks' "Better Things" to close out the album. The upbeat, happy song is a fitting way to finish off an album that helps the listener explore the ups and downs of life.

Williams' latest work has received critical acclaim from People Weekly, Entertainment Weekly and Spin magazine, to name a few. It seems the mainstream media have finally caught up to Williams' appeal.

Razor & Tie, the agency representing Williams, is pushing her album on Top-40 stations, folk music shows and country music stations, as well as getting bookings on "The Rosie O'Donnell Show" and "Late Night with Conan O'Brien." Razor & Tie hopes to push Williams' work out of the corners of folk music and into the limelight.

Fans wanting to catch a glimpse of Williams and her band live can see her in concert Oct. 7 in Lawrence.

Williams is an intriguing and talented musical artist, and it is about time she receives the widespread recognition she deserves.

But there are potholes on the road to pluses.

Student senators raised concerns that Faculty Senate would change the proposal to a plus-minus system without considering student input.

In May 1993, Student Senate approved a resolution supporting a plus-minus system, which includes the option of minus grades on the grading scale. Faculty Senate also approved this idea, and the plan was ready for consideration by university officials.

In August 1993, however, Student Senate approved another resolution. It was not in favor of the new proposal, and asked Faculty Senate to vote against the implementation of a plus-minus system.

Phil Anderson, faculty representative to Student Senate, said student senators voiced their opinions to keep the proposal from becoming reality.

"Most of the senators showed up at the (Faculty Senate) meeting and intimidated the Faculty Senate and convinced them to vote for the traditional system," he said.

Student senators at Thursday's meeting said they fear Faculty Senate will make another attempt to implement the plus-minus system. Neufeld, however, said she knows that's not what students want.

"President Riemann and I ran on a plus system and the student body elected us on a plus system. We believe that's the best, and we believe that's what students want," she said.

The resolution was referred to committee.

Riemann and Neufeld also presented an amendment to the Student Governing Association Constitution that would make impeachment proceedings mandatory against any student government officials if it is learned they are convicted of a misdemeanor or felony.

The proposed amendment does not mean automatic removal for students who are convicted.

Instead, it ensures that the impeachment process against that government official would begin. Student Senate and the Senate Tribunal would hear the case and vote on the impeachment.

The resolution was also referred to committee. Student Senate is scheduled to vote on both resolutions next Thursday.

SPEECH

telling faculty members that he wouldn't leave Union Forum Hall until all of their questions about the issue had been answered.

Another main topic of the address was facilities improvement and construction of new buildings on campus. Wefald said Seaton Hall is long overdue for an update, and it will receive one soon.

"We're attacking our physical facilities' infrastructure on all fronts. Seaton Hall has more needs than any other building on campus right now. In four years, for the first time in a generation, we will have a building that we can all be proud of. It will be completely changed from top to bottom, which is long overdue," Wefald said.

Two other new buildings are also in the works. Wefald said contracts will soon be let for the third building in the engineering complex, Fielder Hall. He also announced that plans are in the works for a new biological sciences building.

"The new biotechnology building represents our highest priority for new construction. We are very confident that we will put together the appropriate state funds, private funds, and federal funds for an excellent new biotechnology addition," he said.

Wefald also voiced his support for university affirmative action programs, higher faculty salaries and support for technology in the classroom.

Overall, Wefald said, the competitive education market means the university will be forced to meet several challenges in the near future.

New local colleges don't make that any easier, he said.

"We compete in an educational marketplace that is filled with competitors. Some are a little more than diploma mills, while others attempt to give a legitimate education at a lower cost. We have recently seen the encroachment of community colleges on both sides of Riley County, attracting our students with much lower tuition costs and, in some cases, much less rigorous courses," Wefald said.

"The challenge that we have is one that we have always met in the past — the highest quality classes taught by the most qualified faculty, given in the most pedagogically effective means possible," he added.

the expense was worth it. Where else could I get an experience like this, and so cheap — and get 12 hours of college credit while I'm at it?

I've found, as a student, there is money to do something like this available — you just have to look and be persistent. If there's a will, there's definitely a way. Just remember the cardinal rules of dealing with financial aid offices — be early, be accurate, be persistent and ask lots of questions. And the Office of International Programs in Fairchild 304 is there to help you explore the options available to you and offer advice.

In an ever-shrinking world, it's important for college students to take advantage of the opportunity we have to travel. As Americans, we tend to have an insular, ethnocentric view of the world. The best way I know to overcome that is to travel and study abroad. Only through exposure can understanding come.

Next stop: Kobe, Japan, Oct. 1.

This series of travelogues was made possible in part by a grant from the Reader's Digest Foundation.

ly solve this problem," Hobrock said. "At least you understand why you are getting ruined."

Hobrock said that last year the library moved toward a managed source strategy that would address the situation through four ways: 1. buying as many journals and books as possible, 2. setting up electronic data bases, 3. offering electronic access to full-text data bases, and 4. offering tables of contents searching of non-subscription journals.

This would address the projected problem of only having money for 3,000 subscriptions in 1998.

"What we see is the printed journals going down the tubes to only 3,000," Hobrock said. "If they were the right 3,000, we think we can supply you with what you need."

Exactly how the faculty will choose the 3,000 journals they want to keep was the subject of some confusion.

The Financing the Library Task Force has been charged with coming up a direction for the library. The task force could make a preliminary, short-term recommendation as soon as early November.

Hobrock said the library will need to begin canceling subscriptions by Oct. 15, although that could be delayed for a few weeks.

The library has asked all faculty members to provide the staff with a list of the journals they need most for research. That list will form the basis of what journals will be kept and what will be cut.

Talat Rahman, professor of physics and incoming Faculty Senate president, said she suggests the library cancel publications from the "predatory" publishers and begin a boycott.

"If we are going to boycott, I think we could get other universities to join us," Rahman said. "In the long run, maybe prices would go down."

Everyone at the meeting agreed the faculty needed more information.

Legg said the average faculty member doesn't have the facts. He said faculty could draw their own conclusions on journal subscriptions if they could see how the current prices compare to those of 10 years ago.

Wefald said the university will put the problem into writing so the task force can consider its options and make a short-term recommendation.

Elizabeth Dodd, associate professor of English, said the faculty need some direction on the issue.

"I think it is essential for the task force to disseminate its recommendations to all the faculty," Dodd said.

ANDERSON

Parking is a big issue for students and faculty who are used to little availability during the week, both day and night.

"On a project like this, you have to plan for the possibility of the parking garage in a few years," Rawson said.

The university has an option to develop a parking garage on the south K-State Student Union parking lot. The garage has been discussed as a 1,200-space, $10 million facility, although no development is proceeding.

Rawson said the university would insist the alumni center include at least 50 to 75 parking spaces.

The stadium has been the center of some attention for the past few years after the administration announced a proposal to build a parking garage on the stadium property. Early this semester, students expressed concern about the Alumni Association's proposal to build a center south of the stadium.

"I think the Alumni Association is an important part of K-State," Rawson said. "It certainly is appropriate for them to build a building on campus."

Rawson said the site would also be beneficial because it would be adjacent to the proposed parking garage.

"They have a desire to be near the Union and the center of campus. This is a logical site," Rawson said, referring to the fact that the stadium acts as a memorial to alumni who fought in World War I.

Memorial Stadium will not be torn down, although there is a chance it could be improved.

President Jon Wefald said, "I think we've all agreed the stadium will be there forever. I think now we've come full-cycle and decided that's a structure that ought to stay, which makes us more enthusiastic about taking state money to develop and renovate Memorial Stadium."

Although the beginning construction on the Anderson widening project is more than a year away, the proposed alumni center and parking garage might never come to fruition.

"It's an unusual project," Rawson said of the center. "It may not ever occur, and if it does, it probably won't for four or five years."
